National army camps continue to have high sick rates as compared with camps of other groups, though the rates are lower than last report. Scattering cases of measles are reported from all camps.

Field and garden seed are unconditionally exempted from all embargoes, according to the department of agriculture. Instructions are issued to all railroads to do everything possible to expedite the movement of seed.

Over 200,000 applications for insurance by officers and enlisted men of the naval service had been filed by March 31. The average amount of insurance on each policy was about $7,300, making a total of more than $1,500,000,000. Payments on war-risk allotments are now about $1,000,000 a month.

Wednesday, April 3, was a peak day in sales of war savings stamps, when $4,120,932 was recorded at the treasury for the day's receipts from stamp sales.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Indianapolis.—Only for the objection of the federal food administration, Indiana would have been placed on a flour and sugar card basis, by the county food administrators in their conference here. The sugar and flour shortages have been so serious and acute that many of the county administrators said there was only one way to handle it with safety, and that was by adopting the card system, and requiring every consumer to carry a card to the retail store when he bought sugar or flour, and have the retailer punch the card to show just how much of the product the purchaser obtained. Under this system, it was pointed out, it would be easy to control the distribution of sugar, flour and bread and prevent any person from obtaining more than he is entitled to have under the food regulations.

Indianapolis.—General order No. 4, issued from the headquarters of the Grand Army of the Republic in this city, states that the national encampment at Portland, Ore., will be held the week of August 18 to 24 this year. A conference between the commander in chief and other G. A. R. officials and Railway Director General McAdoo resulted in securing a rate of one cent per mile in either direction with assurances of adequate equipment and preference in movement of trains. This rate approximates $45 for round trip from Springfield and Chicago. This is the lowest rate granted for many years and assures a large attendance.

Lafayette.—The tenth annual egg show at Purdue university was marked by a large attendance from all parts of the state. The entry list included 300 dozen eggs. R. R. Regan of Indianapolis completed the judging of student and high school classes and awarded the prizes. H. O. Blackwell won sweepstakes and grand sweepstakes for the best dozen eggs in the junior class, his eggs scoring 98¼. E. P. Lewis won the sweepstakes in the sophomore class, his eggs scoring 98. The winners in the freshmen sections were E. H. Jones, H. C. Cocanower, C. G. Searel, A. Habegmer, P. R. Clyle and C. K. Yarling.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich sent a vigorous law-and-order letter to all sheriffs and mayors in Indiana, calling attention to the recent lynching of an American citizen of German blood in Illinois. The communication terms the "tyranny of the mob at home" as being a menace to institutions similar to the tyranny abroad. It assures the sheriffs and mayors that the state "stands ready at any moment to co-operate with you to the fullest extent in the prevention of any lawlessness in your community."

Indianapolis.—The state-wide meeting of the Knights of Pythias will be held in this city April 26. Members of the order residing in Marion county will have charge of the program. Preparations are being made for thousands of Pythians from every part of the state. John J. Brown of Vandalia, Ill., supreme chancellor; Charles S. Davis of Denver, Colo., supreme vice chancellor, and the board of controllers, all of whom are supreme lodge members, are expected to attend.

Indianapolis.—Every woman in Indiana will be registered according to her willingness and ability to aid the government in the wartime emergency through a state-wide census of women which will be taken during the ten days beginning April 19. Representatives of the woman's committee of the state council of defense working under instructions from the woman's section of the council of national defense will conduct the registration.

Frankfort.—Fire destroyed the residence building at the county infirmary, a mile northeast of this city. The loss is estimated at $50,000. There were 43 inmates in the building, six of whom were helpless cripples and it was necessary to carry them from the second floor. The majority of the oldest and helpless inmates of the home were brought to Frankfort and placed in temporary quarters in the county jail.

Evansville.—Seventy-five men at Dale, a small town in Spencer county, threatened to do bodily harm to Josepr Goepfrich, a farmer, after he had attacked Donald J. Wallace, a Liberty loan bond salesman, with an ax. Goepfrich was arrested and taken to the state reformatory at Jeffersonville for safe keeping. A mob at Dale drove Goepfrich's son, nineteen years old, from town, warning him to stay away or to join the army.

Evansville.—Otto Miessner of the State Normal school at Milwaukee, Wis., told the national music supervisors in convention here that music can reduce insanity, lessen crime and aid health. He urged that homes be socialized with pianos and phonographs and that neighborhood glee clubs and orchestras be organized.

Indianapolis.—Belated declarations of candidacy for nominations at the primary election next month, received at the office of secretary of state, have raised a legal question, which has been submitted to Attorney General Stansbury. Some were received by mail. Others were received by telegram, and there is a question as to whether notice of candidacy can be filed, within the requirements of law, by telegram.

Indianapolis.—If coal cars are not promptly returned to the Indiana coal fields, the fuel situation in this state next winter will be worse than it was last. This is, in substance, what a committee of the Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' association told Governor Goodrich at a conference in his office. The governor assured the operators that the state would do what it could to improve the coal car supply and encourage storage of coal this summer. He told them that E. I. Lewis, chairman of the public service commission, had already taken steps to present the matter to W. G. McAdoo, director general of railroads. The operators told the governor that a lack of cars has already reduced the coal output to about 60 per cent of capacity. It was brought out that many open-top cars have gone East and have not been returned.

Indianapolis.—Every county in Indiana will be assigned a quota in the coming silo campaign and will be expected to fill this quota the coming season, the same as in a Liberty loan drive, according to plans of the men in charge of this project. Letters have gone from the office of State Food Director G. I. Christie to every county in the state for a meeting of the farmers to select one of their number as a county leader in the silo drive. Maurice Douglas of Flat Rock, a successful farmer, is state leader. To determine the quotas for the various counties and make plans for an intensive campaign this summer, these county leaders will meet in Indianapolis April 25. Gov. James P. Goodrich, Director Christie and State Leader Douglas will be on the program.

South Bend.—Terrific explosions followed by leaping flames at six of the largest industrial plants in South Bend, threw the city into frenzied excitement for about fifteen minutes. Then extra newspapers, prepared in advance, carried the news that the detonations were mock explosions to impress upon the people what might happen should the Huns invade the country. The demonstration, which had been secretly arranged, was one of the war chest stunts. Canvass for the $500,000 fund in one day resulted in adding $65,000 to the $100,000 already pledged. Ruth Law, aviatrix, flew over the city to show how the water works and industrial plants could be bombed.

Washington, D. C.—Overcharges for by-products and violation of the regulations which require that a barrel of flour be milled out of not more than 264 pounds of wheat have led to revocation of the license held by the Hays Milling company, Worthington, the food administration announced. After operation has been suspended for 30 days, provided the company has observed all rules and regulations and gives assurance that it will commit no further violations, it will be permitted to apply for another license. It was shown that the Hays company had charged $45 a ton for bran. The agreed maximum price is $36.06.

Washington, D. C.—Pensions of $25 have been granted the following Indianians: Katharine D. Young, Greenwood; Mary F. Remmel, Winchester; Clara K. Powell, Aurora; Frances O'Dell, Waveland; Mary E. Montgomery, Fillmore; Sarah E. McNabb, DuPont; Asenath J. McMahan, Richmond; Carrie M. Kerr, Bloomington; Margaret M. James, Frankfort; Ann Eliza Haley, New Albany; Elizabeth J. Foster, Oxford; Frances Colter, Rockport; Charity T. Crouso, Valparaiso; Lavina White, Marion.

Indianapolis.—Judge Louis B. Ewbank, in circuit court, following a hearing, refused to grant a restraining order or a temporary injunction against local city and county authorities, to prevent them from seizing liquors held by saloonkeepers and wholesale liquor dealers after April 12. The Evansville Brewing association, the J. E. McNamara Distilling company and 112 saloonkeepers had filed three suits, in which they asked for injunctions to preserve their stock of liquors.

Petersburg.—Ice one-fourth of an inch thick formed here and much of the fruit crop has been damaged. The peach crop practically is a total loss, and the apricot crop is damaged badly. Early potatoes were nipped and early gardening damages. Planting of corn has been stopped. The greatest acreage ever planted has been put in oats. Tomatoes are being hotbedded and watermelon fields are being prepared. Many tractors are being bought to take the place of horse power.

Indianapolis. — Universal military training for boys of nineteen to twenty-one, which is proposed by a bill pending in the congress, was indorsed by the city school board, which also delivered another blow at German propaganda in deciding to protest to the state board of education against the use of the present "Beginners' German" as a textbook.

Richmond.—Retail coal dealers at Richmond appealed to the federal fuel administration for Indiana in an effort to obtain a special ruling from the national fued administration at Washington that will permit the city to receive more anthracite coal than is now possible under the national fuel administration's regulations.

Peru.—The convention of Indiana horseshoers decided on Logansport for next year's meeting and elected officers as follows: President, Frank Perrey, Fort Wayne; vice presidents, R. W. Merchant of Brookston and Al Drumm of Peru; secretary-treasurer, C. F. Hornbostel of Evansville.

Lafayette.—Librarians from a number of Indiana counties met at Purdue university for a war conference. Representatives of the state library board were present. Morning and afternoon sessions were held to discuss various library problems arising from war conditions.

WOMEN MUST HELP RAISE WAR FUNDS

Lovers of Home and Country Called to the Colors.

ALL CAN BUY LIBERTY BONDS

(By DOROTHY DIX.)

Buy a Liberty bond, ladies. No matter how many you have bought before, stretch a point and buy another.

You can't shoulder a gun and go off and fight for your country, as the men are doing. You can't put on a nurse's uniform and go and nurse wounded soldiers or drive an ambulance or work in a munition factory, as many other women are doing, but you can do your bit by backing up these other men and women, who are risking their lives to defend you with your money.

Without guns and munitions, without food and clothes, without hospital supplies, the army in France is just so many sheep led to the slaughter; if we let them die for the lack of the things that money buys, their blood is on our heads, and our crime against them will be blacker than the Boches, because they trusted us.

It takes money, money, money and yet more money to carry on war, and this war is to be the war of the longest pocketbook. It is the last ton of bombs, the last load of shrapnel, and the last big gun that will thunder out victory. Therefore, if we want to win this war, we must find more money, and it is particularly up to us women, who can fight with our hands, to fight with our dollars, and pour them like water at Uncle Sam's feet.

Women's Greatest Sacrifices.

In no war in all history have women been called upon to play such a tremendous part as in this war. Never before have women had to give so many of their husbands and sons and brothers to be cannon fodder. Never have women before gone into the trenches and fought side by side with men. Never have they gone into factories to make munitions of war with their own hands. Never have they had to take upon their shoulders the heavy burdens of hard physical labor that men laid down when they went forth to battle. And never before did their country call on women to make such sacrifices as they are called on to make now.

It is because this war touches women more nearly in every way than any other war has ever done, because more women's hearts have been broken by it, more women impoverished and made homeless, more mothers have seen their babes slain before their eyes, more mothers have beheld their young daughters ravished, that women must use their utmost effort to put an end to war.

Women must see to it that there is never another war to lay waste to the world and drench it with women's tears, and this can only be accomplished by our winning this war.

And to do that we must have money. So, let every woman who has some loved one at the front buy a Liberty bond. Let every woman who has a hearthstone that she would keep safe buy a Liberty bond. Let every woman who has a babe that she loves, or a young daughter whose purity she would guard, buy a Liberty bond.

Reasons Are Numerous.

Let every woman who has a particle of sympathy in her soul for the forlorn women and children of Belgium and France buy a Liberty bond. Let every woman who believes in justice, and freedom, and right buy a Liberty bond. Let every woman who hates war and craves for peace buy a Liberty bond.

The trip that you had planned, the new frock you were going to get, how pitifully small is the sacrifice of these for the sake of those who are sacrificing their lives to protect you and yours.

Buy all the Liberty bonds you can, and then go in debt for some more, so shall you prove yourself a worthy daughter of Uncle Sam.

This is a time when money talks and tells the kind of a patriot you are.

The woman who hasn't a bunch of Liberty bonds if she's rich, or who isn't paying on a Liberty bond if she's poor, is a traitor to her country and should hang her head in shame every time she passes a man in khaki or feels the fold of the red, white, and blue floating over her unworthy head.

The Badge of Citizenship.

The Liberty Bond button is no longer a mark of liberality or even of patriotism; it is the badge of citizenship. Are you wearing one?

War and the Weather.

The Almighty makes the weather, not man, and if the weather doesn't suit us, we have to wait. The farmer knows what a day's rain will do in the way of upsetting plans. One can't plow in the mud and a cutting of hay or wheat may be damaged or ruined by one night's downpour.

The war department, too, is up against the weather in France. Three inches rainfall may make the country impassable for half a million men and horses and motortrucks and ruin the chances of victory or bring defeat.

WHERE FARMING IS PROFITABLE

The Future of Great Possibilities.

Some idea of the great wealth that the Western Canada farmer had in view a few years ago is now being realized. The amount received from the sale of wheat, oats, barley, flax and rye in 1917 was $270,000,000, while the sales of live stock at Winnipeg alone netted $40,000,000 additional. Of this sum hogs alone gave over eleven million dollars. The increases at Calgary and Edmonton were over 6¼ million dollars.

This money, so easily earned, is being spent in improvements in farm property, purchasing additional land, buying tractors, automobiles, and improving home conditions, providing electric light, steam heat, new furniture, pianos, buying Victory bonds, paying off old debts, etc.

Over five hundred tractors were sold in Southern Alberta in 1917. One implement agent reports that the increase in his business in 1917, over that of 1916, was equal to the total business in 1915. It is the same story all over the country. And it is not this evidence alone which proves the advancement and growth of the three prairie provinces, but the large increase in the number of settlers; the improvement in the extent of the cultivated areas and agricultural production; the increase in value of which over 1916 was $77,000,000.

This wonderful progress that has been made in agriculture in Western Canada is but the beginning which marks the future of the greatest agricultural country on the continent showing a future of great possibilities. There are millions of acres yet untilled, and of land as good as any of that which is now giving its owners a return of from twenty to thirty dollars an acre, figures that in many cases represent the cost of the land, with all cultivation costs included. It is true that the cost of production has increased during the past few years, but the price of the product has also increased to a figure which leaves a large balance to the credit of the producer.

Percentage increases are shown too in another way, leading to the same conclusion, from consultation of the Department of Labor's review of prices. Taking 100 as the index number of normal production in the decade from 1890 to 1900, the increases in prices of farm products have slightly outdistanced the increases in his needs.

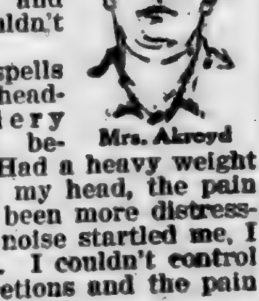
NERVES GAVE OUT

Serious Kidney Trouble Had Made Life Miserable, But Doan's Removed All the Trouble. Hasn't Suffered Since.

"I had such severe pains in my back," says Mrs. Albert Akroyd, 304 W. Indiana Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., "that they almost doubled me up. Many a day I could not do my housework and at every move it seemed as if my back would break in two. My feet and ankles swelled until I had to wear large-sized slippers and sometimes I couldn't stand up.



Mrs. Akroyd

"I had dizzy spells and dreadful headaches and fiery flashes passed before my eyes. Had a heavy weight been resting on my head, the pain could not have been more distressing. The least noise startled me, I was so nervous. I couldn't control the kidney secretions and the pain in passage was awful.

"It began to look as though my case was beyond the reach of medicine until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. The first box benefited me and four boxes cured all the troubles. I have had no further cause for complaint."

Sworn to before me,

AN AMERICAN SOLDIER WHO WENT ☆ ☆

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

MACHINE GUNNER, SERVING IN FRANCE

©1917 BY ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

EMPEY TAKES HIS FIRST TURN ON THE FIRING STEP OF THE TRENCH WHILE BULLETS WHIZ OVERHEAD.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches.

CHAPTER V.

Mud, Rats and Shells.

I must have slept for two or three hours, not the refreshing kind that results from clean sheets and soft pillows, but the sleep that comes from cold, wet and sheer exhaustion.

Suddenly, the earth seemed to shake and a thunderclap burst in my ears. I opened my eyes—I was splashed all over with sticky mud, and men were picking themselves up from the bottom of the trench. The parapet on my left had toppled into the trench, completely blocking it with a wall of tossed-up earth. The man on my left lay still. I rubbed the mud from my face, and an awful sight met my gaze—his head was smashed to a pulp, and his steel helmet was full of brains and blood. A German "Minnie" (trench mortar) had exploded in the next traverse. Men were digging into the soft mass of mud in a frenzy of haste. Stretcher-bearers came up the trench on the double. After a few minutes of digging, three still, muddy forms on stretchers were carried down the communication trench to the rear. Soon they would be resting "somewhere in France," with a little wooden cross over their heads. They had done their bit for king and country, had died without firing a shot, but their services were appreciated, nevertheless.

Later on, I found out their names. They belonged to our draft.

I was dazed and motionless. Suddenly a shovel was pushed into my hands, and a rough but kindly voice said:

"Here, my lad, lend a hand clearing the trench, but keep your head down, and look out for snipers. One of the Fritz's is a daisy, and he'll get you if you're not careful."

Lying on my belly on the bottom of the trench, I filled sandbags with the sticky mud, they were dragged to my rear by the other men, and the work of rebuilding the parapet was on. The harder I worked, the better I felt. Although the weather was cold, I was soaked with sweat.

Occasionally a bullet would crack overhead, and a machine gun would kick up the mud on the bashed-in parapet. At each crack I would duck and shield my face with my arm. One of the older men noticed this action of mine, and whispered:

"Don't duck at the crack of a bullet, Yank; the danger has passed—you never hear the one that wings you. Always remember that if you are going to get it, you'll get it, so never worry."

This made a great impression on me at the time, and from then on, I adopted his motto, "If you're going to get it, you'll get it."

It helped me wonderfully. I used it so often afterwards that some of my mates dubbed me, "If you're going to get it, you'll get it."

After an hour's hard work, all my nervousness left me, and I was laughing and joking with the rest.

I looked for my canteen. It had fallen off the fire step, and was half buried in the mud. The man on my left noticed this, and told the corporal, dishing out the rations, to put my share in his mess tin. Then he whispered to me, "Always take care of your mess tin, mate."

I had learned another maxim of the trenches.

That stew tasted fine. I was as hungry as a bear. We had "seconds," or another helping, because three of the men had "gone West," killed by the explosion of the German trench mortar, and we ate their share, but still I was hungry, so I filled in with bully beef and biscuits. Then I drained my water bottle. Later on I learned another maxim of the front line, "Go sparingly with your water." The bully beef made me thirsty, and by tea time I was dying for a drink, but my pride would not allow me to ask my mates for water. I was fast learning the ethics of the trenches.

That night I was put on guard with an older man. We stood on the fire step with our hands over the top, peering out into No Man's Land. It was nervous work for me, but the other fellow seemed to take it as part of the night's routine.

Then something shot past my face. My heart stopped beating, and I ducked my head below the parapet. A soft chuckle from my mate brought me to my senses, and I feebly asked, "For heaven's sake, what was that?"

He answered, "Only a rat taking a promenade along the sandbags." I felt very sheepish.

About every twenty minutes the sentry in the next traverse would fire a star shell from his flare pistol. The "plop" would give me a start of fright. I never got used to this noise during my service in the trenches.

I would watch the arc described by the star shell, and then stare into No Man's Land waiting for it to burst. In its lurid light the barbed wire and stakes would be silhouetted against its light like a latticed window. Then darkness.

Once, out in front of our wire, I heard a noise and saw dark forms moving. My rifle was lying across the sandbagged parapet. I reached for it, and was taking aim to fire, when my mate grasped my arm, and whispered, "Don't fire." He challenged in a low voice. The reply came back instantly from the dark forms:

"Shut your blinkin' mouth, you bloomin' idiot; do you want us to click it from the Boches?"

Later we learned that the word, "No challenging or firing, wiring party out in front," had been given to the sentry on our right, but he had failed to pass it down the trench. An officer had overheard our challenge and the reply, and immediately put the offending sentry under arrest. The sentry clicked twenty-one days on the wheel, that is, he received twenty-one days' field punishment No. 1, or "crucifixion," as Tommy terms it.

This consists of being spread-eagled on the wheel of a limber two hours a day for twenty-one days, regardless of the weather. During this period, your rations consist of bully beef, biscuits and water.

A few months later I met this sentry and he confided to me that since being "crucified," he had never failed to pass the word down the trench when so ordered. In view of the offense, the above punishment was very light, in that failing to pass the word down a trench may mean the loss of many lives, and the spoiling of some important enterprise in No Man's Land.

CHAPTER VI.

"Back of the Line."

Our tour in the front-line trench lasted four days, and then we were relieved by the —— brigade.

Going down the communication trench we were in a merry mood, although we were cold and wet, and every bone in our bodies ached. It makes a lot of difference whether you are "going in" or "going out."

At the end of the communication trench, limbers were waiting on the road for us. I thought we were going to ride back to rest billets, but soon found out that the only time an infantryman rides is when he is wounded and is bound for the base or Blighty. These limbers carried our reserve ammunition and rations. Our march to rest billets was thoroughly enjoyed by me. It seemed as if I were on furlough, and was leaving behind everything that was disagreeable and horrible. Every recruit feels this way after being relieved from the trenches.

We marched eight kilos and then halted in front of a French estaminet. The captain gave the order to turn out on each side of the road and wait his return. Pretty soon he came back and told B company to occupy billets 117, 118 and 119. Billet 117 was an old stable which had previously been occupied by cows. About four feet in front of the entrance was a huge manure pile, and the odor from it was anything but pleasant. Using my flashlight I stumbled through the door. Just before entering I observed a white sign reading: "Sitting 50, lying 20," but, at the time, its significance did not strike me. Next morning I asked the sergeant major what it meant. He nonchalantly answered:

"That's some of the work of the R. A. M. C. (Royal Army Medical corps). It simply means that in case of an attack, this billet will accommodate fifty wounded who are able to sit up and take notice, or twenty stretcher cases."

It was not long after this that I was one of the "20 lying."

I soon hit the hay and was fast asleep, even my friends the "cooties" failed to disturb me.

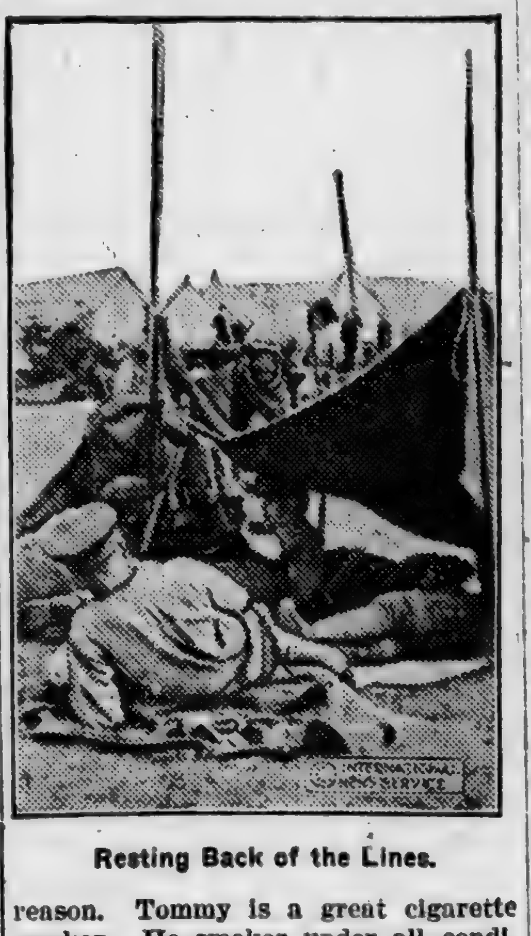
The next morning at about six o'clock I was awakened by the lance corporal of our section, informing me that I had been detailed as mess orderly, and to report to the cook and give him a hand. I helped him make the fire, carry water from an old well, and fry the bacon. Lids of dixies are used to cook the bacon in. After breakfast was cooked, I carried a dixie of hot tea and the lid full of bacon to our section, and told the corporal that breakfast was ready. He looked at me in contempt, and then shouted, "Breakfast up, come and get it!" I immediately got wise to the trench parlance, and never again informed that "Breakfast was served."

It didn't take long for the Tommies to answer this call. Half dressed, they lined up with their canteens and I dished out the tea. Each Tommy carried in his hand a thick slice of bread which had been issued with the rations the night before. Then I had the pleasure of seeing them dig into the bacon with their dirty fingers. The allowance was one slice per man. The late ones received very small slices. As each Tommy got his share he immediately disappeared into the billet. Pretty soon about fifteen of them made a rush to the cookhouse, each carrying a huge slice of bread. These slices they dipped into the bacon grease which was stewing over the fire. The last man invariably lost out. I was the last man.

After breakfast our section carried their equipment into a field adjoining the billet and got busy removing the trench mud therefrom, because at 8:45 a. m., they had to fall in for inspection and parade, and woe betide the man who was unshaven, or had mud on his uniform. Cleanliness is next to godliness in the British army, and Old Pepper must have been personally acquainted with St. Peter.

Our drill consisted of close-order formation, which lasted until noon. During this time we had two ten-minute breaks for rest, and no sooner the word, "Fall out for ten minutes," was given than each Tommy got out a fag and lighted it.

Fags are issued every Sunday morning, and you generally get between twenty and forty. The brand generally issued is the "Woodbine." Sometimes we are lucky and get "Goldflakes," "Players" or "Red Hussars." Occasionally an issue of "Life Rays" comes along. Then the older Tommies immediately get busy on the recruits and trade these for "Woodbines" or "Goldflakes." A recruit only has to be stuck once in this manner, and then he ceases to be a recruit. There is a reason. Tommy is a great cigarette smoker. He smokes under all conditions, except when unconscious or when he is reconnoitering in No Man's Land at night. Then, for obvious reasons, he does not care to have a lighted cigarette in his mouth.



Resting Back of the Lines.

Stretcher bearers carry fags for wounded Tommies. When a stretcher bearer arrives alongside of a Tommy who has been hit the following conversation usually takes place: Stretcher bearer—"Want a fag? Where are you hit?" Tommy looks up and answers, "Yes. In the leg."

After dismissal from parade, we returned to our billets and I had to get busy immediately with the dinner issue. Dinner consisted of stew made from fresh beef, a couple of spuds, bully beef, Maconochie rations and water—plenty of water. There is great competition among the men to spear with their forks the two lonely potatoes.

Back on the front line, after a stay in rest billets, Empey gets a shock when a German bullet cuts down his first friend of the trenches. He tells the story in the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Make Light of Heavy Loads.

The streets of Jerusalem within the walls are as narrow and crowded that it is impossible to drive a wagon through them, and many of them are built of a series of steps upon the hillside, so that it is a task to lead camels or donkeys through them after sunrise. Therefore most of the carrying and portering is done by men. They carry the most surprising loads. I am told that they will step along briskly with 600 pounds on their backs, with stout ropes holding the bundles to their foreheads.—Exchange.

HOW TO GROW

ASPARAGUS.

This crop is one of the most enduring and satisfactory vegetables. It can be grown on almost any well-drained soil, but will do best on a deep sandy loam. There is little possibility of having the ground too rich, and liberal applications of partly rotted barnyard manure should be made before the plants are set. The seeds of asparagus may be sown during the spring in rows where the plants are to remain, and the seedlings thinned to stand 14 feet apart in rows.

It is usually more satisfactory to purchase two-year-old roots, as considerable time is saved in this way. As the asparagus bed is a permanent feature of the garden, it should be located accordingly. Before setting the plants the soil should be loosened very deeply, either by subsoil plowing or by deep spading. It is a good plan to remove the top soil and spade manure into the subsoil to a depth of 14 or 16 inches. The plants may be set in rows for horse cultivation or in beds. If in rows they should be set 14 inches apart, with the rows 3½ feet apart. If in beds, one foot apart each way is the proper distance to set the plants. In setting the plants the crowns should be covered 4 or 5 inches deep.

In the North the plants should receive a mulch of 4 or 5 inches of manure in winter. In the South the mulch is not necessary, but the plants should receive a coat of manure or an application of fertilizer, preferably in autumn.

No shoots should be removed during the first year the plants are set in the permanent bed, and the period of cutting should be short during the second year.

LIMA BEANS.

Lima beans should not be planted until the ground is thoroughly warmed up, as they are a heat-loving crop and the seed will rot if planted when the ground is cold. Most gardeners prefer the pole varieties, as they yield better than the bush varieties and are superior to the bush varieties in many other respects. One marked advantage of the pole beans is that they may be planted around the fence, utilizing the fence as a support for the vines. In this manner a crop of beans can be secured with the use of a minimum amount of spacing.

When planted in rows in the garden, pole lima beans are usually planted in hills 3 to 4 feet apart and supported on poles or a string and wire trellis.

The bush limas are usually drilled in rows some 3½ feet apart for horse cultivation, or slightly closer for hand cultivation. The lima beans are a full season crop, that is, they occupy the ground for the entire growing season, and a sufficient amount should be planted to provide for the needs of the family for the entire season. Any surplus not used green may be allowed to dry on the vines, picked and stored for winter use.

Lima beans constitute one of the most satisfactory crops for growing for winter's use, as the only care necessary to save them is to pick the ripe pods, dry them thoroughly and shell the beans. In the northern portion of the country where lima beans do not thrive, pole beans of the Lazy Wife variety will give satisfaction.

RADISHES.

The radish is quite hardy and may be grown throughout the winter in the middle section of the United States. In many portions of the South it is possible to grow it in the open ground throughout the winter. For the home garden the seed should be sown in the open ground about the time of the last killing frost. The seed should be sown in drills at a convenient distance for cultivation, usually about 18 inches. To be of good quality, radishes must be grown quickly in rich soil, and be used as soon as of sufficient size. Successive plantings should be made every few days until the weather becomes warm. They will not withstand hot weather and are suited to early spring and late autumn planting.

There are autumn varieties of radishes which may be grown late in the season and stored for winter use the same as beets or turnips. A few of these will add variety to the winter supply of vegetables.

BRUSSELS SPROUTS.

Brussels sprouts are closely related to cabbage and cauliflower, and may be grown in very much the same manner. The seed may be started in the window box or in the hotbed and transplanted to the garden when the ground is in condition to work.

Instead of a single head, Brussels sprouts produce a large number of small heads, these heads being formed in the axils of the leaves. If the heads become too crowded, the leaves should be broken off so as to give the heads more room. However, a few leaves should always be left in the top of the stem where the new heads are being formed. Brussels sprouts are more hardy than cabbage and in many sections may be planted in the fall. They should be set in rows 30 to 36 inches apart if for horse cultivation. The plants should be set from 20 to 24 inches apart in the rows.

Brussels sprouts may be stored for winter use in much the same way as cabbage. The best method is to take up the plants, pack them closely together in a trench, covering them with straw or other litter to protect them from freezing and thawing.

KOHL-RABI.

The edible portion of the kohl-rabi is the thickened stem. It is closely related to cabbage and cauliflower. It should be started in the hotbed or window box and set in the open ground about the time of the last frost. The method of planting and the cultivation is similar to that practiced for cabbage. It can be planted in the open at the same time. Early sowings are made, and if thinned to 4 to 6 inches apart the plants will soon grow to edible size under favorable weather conditions. This plant should receive much more consideration than usually is given it. It is really a poor man's cauliflower.

COLLARDS.

The culture and uses of collards are the same as for cabbage. The plants should be started in very early spring and set out as soon as the ground is in condition. They withstand the heat better than cabbage and are much used in the southern portion of the country. Collards do not form a true head, but instead a loose rosette of leaves, which, when blanched, are very tender and of delicate flavor.

No southern garden is complete without this plant. Too often, however, it has constituted the sum total in the shape of garden supplies. Use it, but don't abuse it.

PARSLEY.

The seeds of parsley should be soaked for a few hours before planting to insure germination. They are slow in germinating and should be handled very carefully. After one or two transplantings they should be set in the open ground in rows 12 to 18 inches apart and 3 to 4 inches apart in the rows as early as the soil can be put in condition. A small area devoted to this crop will be sufficient for the average family.

It is used as a garnishing and for flavoring soups. Keep a little of it growing at all times. It gives a pleasing touch to many dainty dishes.

PEPPERS.

Plant the seeds of peppers in the hotbed about six weeks to two months before time to set them in the open ground. They should be transplanted at least once and should not be set in the open until the ground is thoroughly warm. When grown in the garden the large bull-nosed types should be placed in rows 3 feet apart with the plants from 15 to 17 inches apart in rows. Frequent shallow cultivation should be given, and the plants will continue to bear until frost kills them.

IN YOUR HOME GARDEN

"Dig deep, manure well, work often." Thus Pliny the Elder, nearly 2,000 years ago, summed up gardening. His advice is good today.

Enthusiasm must be backed by solid purpose—enough of it to surmount obstacles and survive disappointments.

The best insurance against accidents in gardening is knowing how to garden.

PROFITABLE USE OF MANURE

Garden and Orchard Will Take Good Care of All Fertilizer Produced on Farm.

Save and apply all of the barnyard manure that is produced on your farm. The garden and the orchard are like prospective candidates—they are "in a receptive mood." It is difficult to get garden land too rich. In case there seems to be more nitrogen from heavy applications of manure than the other constituents, apply acid phosphate and hardwood ashes to balance the fertility constituents.

Find Amount of Seed Needed.

Aim to make every seed count. Remember the supply of some of the more important varieties of garden seed is limited, and in order that all may obtain enough to meet their needs, everyone should co-operate to make what is used produce a maximum crop.

Broadcasting Manure.

Manure for broadcasting on top of the plowed ground should be well rotted and fine. After spreading mix it well with the harrow before drilling in the seeds.

Grown in Greenhouse.

Swiss chard is sometimes grown in the greenhouse to advantage. Beets may be started under the greenhouse bench if there is light enough to prevent their becoming spindling.

Place for Permanent Crops.

Berry bushes, rhubarb, asparagus and such garden stuff that is permanently established should be grouped on one side of the garden and extend in rows the full length of the garden.

One of the most attractive booklets issued recently is the year book put out by Swift & Company, covering the activities of the big packing concern during the year 1917. Serving as an introduction is the address of the vice president, E. F. Swift, to the stockholders, in which he tells of the abnormally high prices paid for live stock in Chicago and of the prices obtained for meat; of the investigation by the federal trade commission, and the licensing by the government of food distributing agencies and the limiting of profits on slaughtering and meat packing to 9 per cent on money employed. Mr. Swift also told with pride of the 2,800 employees who had entered the various branches of the United States service, and concluded with the statement that Swift & Company would do their utmost to help win the war.

An interesting and illuminative section of the booklet is that devoted to statistics of live stock prices and production, and another is given up to telling "the packer's service to producer and consumer." Figures are given showing that the net profit of the company per head, 1912 to 1916, averaged $1.22 for cattle, less than 15 cents for sheep and less than 58 cents for hogs. It is explained that the large aggregate profits are due to the immense volume of business done.

The booklet is handsomely illustrated with photographs and color prints and the cover illustration, made from a photograph of a corn farm in Ohio, is especially attractive.

Land of Skeletons.

"The Germans are starving. A fat man is as rare in Germany today as a—well, as a side of bacon or real tobacco.

"Germany is today a band of living skeletons. In a Hamburg restaurant one afternoon a skeleton opposite me sat eating an egg-substitute omelette about the size of a half-dollar.

"I looked at the poor fellow with a pitying glance and said:

"'Can such rations nourish you?'

"'Well,' said he, in a dismal voice, 'they keep skin and bone together.'"

Married Life.

As it really is: A washtub, a cook stove and a sewing machine.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

At this time of the year most people suffer from a condition often called Spring Fever. They feel tired, worn out, before the day is half thru. They may have frequent headaches and sometimes "pimply" or pale skin.

Bloodless people, thin, anemic people, those with pale cheeks and lips, who have a poor appetite and feel that tired, worn or feverish condition in the springtime of the year, should try the refreshing tonic powers of a good alterative and blood purifier. Such a one is extracted from Blood root, Golden Seal and Stone root, Queen's root and Oregon Grape root, made up with chemically pure glycerine and without the use of alcohol. This can be obtained in ready-to-use tablet form in sixty-cent vials, as druggists have sold it for fifty years as Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is a standard remedy that can be obtained in tablet or liquid form.

A good purge should be taken once a week even by persons who have a movement daily, in order to eliminate matter which may remain and cause a condition of auto-intoxication, poisoning the whole system. To clean the system at least once a week is to practice health measures. There is nothing so good for this purpose as tiny pills made up of the May-apple, leaves of aloe and jalap, and sold by almost all druggists in this country as Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, sugar-coated, easy to take.

Women to Register.

Beginning April 19, the registration of all the women folks will begin and the committees have been given their instructions as to how to proceed. For the benefit of those not knowing the whys and wherefores for this, we give the reasons below. Please read them and be enlightened.

REGISTRATION FOR SERVICE OBJECTS.

1. To give every woman an opportunity to offer to her country such service as she is best fitted to render.
2. To interpret to the Government the possibilities of the woman power of the country.
3. To furnish accurate information to the Government of the capacities in which women are now serving, whether in their own homes or in paid pursuits, trades, or professions.
4. To have in every community lists of women carefully classified who are willing to be called upon for trained or untrained service to the State or the Nation.
5. To ascertain which women are available for service outside the home, and which are not.
6. To list the women who wish to take training in order to give more efficient service.
7. To be able to furnish women for salaried positions, whether in Government service or not.
8. To be able to place women who can volunteer their service in positions of usefulness in many fields.
9. To have a registry of the capacities and training of the women of the country as the basis of the work of the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense.

POINTS TO BE EMPHASIZED.

1. Registration is voluntary; women will not be drafted into the Government service.
2. Women will not be taken from their homes for Government service here or in Europe, unless they definitely offer themselves for such service.
3. If a woman registers as "trained" and capable of self-support this will not give cause for her husband to be drafted.
4. If a woman registers for service at this time, and when called later finds herself unable, by changed conditions, to respond to the call, no punishment or criticism will fall upon her, nor will she be compelled to serve.
5. Women should register for what they are doing now and for what they have been trained to do, whether or not they can give any extra service at the moment.
6. Registration along industrial lines is not intended to remove women from their present positions, nor to permit them to be exploited by unauthorized appeals for "war service."
7. Registration is intended for women loyal to America, whether or not they are naturalized citizens, and should not be forced on unwilling or disloyal women.
8. Children under 14 (or under the age of the Compulsory School Law of the State) are considered as "dependent" upon the mother whether or not she provides the actual money for their support.
9. While it is true that experience for many years may be considered as equivalent to "training" in some trades, or occupations, the experience must be carefully weighed as to its value before a woman registers as trained. In other words a woman who has fed a few chickens at the back door can hardly be called a "trained" poultry raiser. If she has raised chickens for profit for some years, and conducted it as a business, she might be considered as trained.
10. Women will not be forced to give exact age, but are advised to do so, as certain Government positions are only open to women between certain ages. The age should at least be given in decades "over 30 or under 40," etc.

Bread and Guns will beat the Huns

Minstrel Appreciated

A crowded house responded to the home talent minstrel staged here Friday evening, under the auspices of the schools. The curtain rose at 8:30 with fourteen young colored ladies appearing in the cotton field and singing their dixie songs, after which they impersonated a number of fellow townsmen. This part was very pleasing to the audience for the girls did fine.

An Irish farse comedy, entitled That Rascal Pat, was put on with five characters, lasting for a half hour and it was really an amusing thirty minutes.

The old colored parson was present and made a few denouncements, but his meeting was disturbed by three colored men in the audience, who insisted on playing crap and talking out in meeting, until the parson called for Tom Rickett to put those rascals out, which Tom proceeded to do at once.

The minstrel proper was the last act, where six big, burly fellows were seated upon the stage, with Mr. Johnson, Merritt Maxwell, as the interlocutor, and accompanied by a company of colored ladies, who furnished the music at the will of the middleman.

Pauline Andress rendered a solo, which was well received.

Receipts $45.75.

In Europe the shortage of labor and fodder and the crying need for meat have caused the slaughter of dairy cows by the million. America must supply the world with butter and other dairy products, and not only that, but America must prepare to supply Europe with millions of dairy cows after we have won the war. Only the short-sighted farmer will dispose of a good dairy cow under such conditions. The wise farmer will increase his herd. He will raise every well-favored heifer calf. OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

Indiana is asked to go on a strictly wheatless diet until after the next harvest in a special appeal sent every county food administrator by Dr Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana. This is in view of the serious situation resulting from the wheat shortage, there being but 40 per cent. of the nation's requirements available, and demands from the nation's associates in the war pressing.

For the purpose of getting into trade channels all the hoarded wheat in Indiana, Dr. Barnard has designated the week of April 8th as "Bring in the wheat week." County food administrators are asked to co-operate in the effort which, if unsuccessful, will be followed by a requisition of the hoarded grain.

Canned hominy is not a recognized substitute for wheat flour, neither is barley, puffed rice, rice polish, corn flakes nor fruited oats. The federal administration is preparing a list of breakfast foods recognized under the fifty-fifty rule.

The Indiana State fair has concurred in the suggestion of Dr. Barnard that fair associations this year withdraw their wheat product premium lists and offer prizes for the best articles made from substitutes. It is expected every other fair association in the State will fall in line with the idea.

Wheat or rye ground for stock feed is in violation of the federal regulations. The grains are needed for human consumption and a severe penalty attaches for their use in any other manner.

Families not observing wheatless days and meals are expected to conform strictly to the one and one-half pounds per week per person ration just promulgated by the federal food administration. In public eating houses the limit is six pounds to every ninety meals served, with a maximum serving of two ounces of wheat products per meal and no wheat products served unless specifically ordered.

"A rush of too many fowls to market as soon as the restriction against selling laying hens is removed, may result in food losses," says the United States Department of Agriculture. "Think twice before selling a hen that is still laying. Green food is becoming more plentiful and the demand for eggs continues. Universal marketing of fowls may react on prices as well as cause spoilage of dressed poultry."

A newspaper can never very creditably represent a town whose business men do not advertise. He may howl himself hoarse bragging about the vim, energy and enterprise of his town but if his declarations are not backed up by a liberal amount of advertising by the business men of the town the world will be slow to take his statements as true. It takes more than the unsupported testimony of the local newspaper man to prove that his town is the financial center, the business center, the very best market and the best place on earth to buy goods; his evidence needs coroboration.—Exchange.

WOMAN WORKS 15 HOURS A DAY

Marvelous Story of Woman's Change from Weakness to Strength by Taking Druggist's Advice.

Peru, Ind.—"I suffered from a displacement with backache and dragging down pains so badly that at times I could not be on my feet and it did not seem as though I could stand it. I tried different medicines without any benefit and several doctors told me nothing but an operation would do me any good. My druggist told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it with the result that I am now well and strong. I get up in the morning at four o'clock, do my housework, then go to a factory and work all day, come home and get supper and feel good. I don't know how many of my friends I have told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. ANNA METERIANO, 36 West 10th St., Peru, Ind.

Women who suffer from any such ailments should not fail to try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

JEFFERSON IN NEW LIGHT

Great Statesmen Now Known to Have Had More Than Common Ability as an Architect.

Although it has long been known that Jefferson, as secretary of state, took a deep interest in the building of the capital city, it was only recently discovered that he himself prepared designs for the White House, and actually submitted one of these anonymously in the public competition, for which he drafted the advertisement. Jefferson's ability to make such drawings has until recently been denied in many quarters, and only the assemblage of an overwhelming body of evidence has convinced the skeptics of the truth of traditions regarding the great statesman's skill as an architect. Designs for his own remarkable house at Monticello, for a governor's house at Richmond, the Virginia capitol and other buildings had demonstrated his ability to undertake a plan for the official residence of the president. A knowledge of foreign architecture and foreign architects, enthusiastically cultivated during his five years in Paris, England, Italy and Germany, qualified him to make his design exceptional in scholarly conformity with the best precedents.

Without diminishing in the least our admiration of Hoban's design, which we now see in its true relations, we cannot fail to acquire a new interest in the capitol of today by learning how much it owes to the thought and artistic skill of the father of American independence.

Our Part in Feeding the Nation

(Special Information Service, United States Department of Agriculture.)

THE NATION NEEDS ANOTHER BIG CORN CROP

Two-Row Corn Planters Do More Work With Less Labor—This One Opens Two Furrows and Plants Them at One Operation.

GROW A BIG CROP WITH LESS LABOR

INCREASE CORN PRODUCTION

Another big corn crop is needed. Last year's planting of 120,000,000 acres yielded the largest crop ever harvested—3,159,494,000 bushels. There seems to be every reason to believe, in the opinion of officials of the United States department of agriculture, that our own welfare and that of the allies, as well as neutral nations, make desirable an even greater production of corn in 1918 on an acreage approximately equal to that planted in 1917.

Increased production may be accomplished in a number of ways, and in a recent publication of the United States department of agriculture, "The Agricultural Situation for 1918: Part VIII, Corn," specialists of the department make suggestions regarding better methods. The more extensive use of labor-saving implements will make it easier this year to approximate the record-breaking acreage of last year, especially when employed in sections where corn is now grown profitably but on a more limited scale than is desirable, because present methods require a large amount of man labor. The more general use of recently developed and improved tractors that are adapted to the uses of the small farm as well as the large farm would tend to increase the acreage and to effect a saving in labor. The use of larger plows, harrows and other instruments used in fitting the land would make it possible to accomplish more work per man. Similarly the substitution of two-row planters and two-row double cultivators in place of smaller and less efficient implements would make it possible to do the same amount of work with less expenditure of labor.

Replant Missing Hills.

In some corn-growing sections it is the practice to replant missing hills as soon as the corn is up to a stand. Frequently this is done by dropping kernels by hand and covering with a hoe. A labor-saving and quicker method would be the use of small hand planters. These could be used to advantage for the first planting also in sections where comparatively small areas are planted and where it is at present the custom to drop the corn by hand and cover with the hoe.

It is the practice in some localities to plant a much larger number of kernels than the number of stalks desired and to thin to the desired stand when the corn plants are about six to eight inches tall. This method may be satisfactory where plenty of labor is available, but where it is desirable to economize labor it would be advisable to plant tested seed at about the same rate as the stand desired and do no thinning.

A more general use of efficient harvesting machinery would permit a more economical use of labor. A corn binder with an attachment for elevating the bundles of corn into a wagon should be used much more extensively than it is for harvesting ensilage corn. There is also on the market a machine that converts the corn into ensilage in the field, elevating it into a wagon, from which it is sucked or lifted into the silo. The use of either of these machines, especially the latter, would do away with the necessity of much laborious work.

Work Done by Hand.

A large percentage of the cutting and shocking of corn is done by hand labor. In some sections, because of unfavorable topography or other reasons, it is not practicable to use machine cutters. However, the greater part of the corn that is now cut by hand labor could be harvested by machinery, economizing labor and doing the work in a less laborious manner.

Much of the corn that is now husked from the shocks could be handled more economically and with a saving in feed value of stover by substituting machine huskers and shedders for hand labor. The use of corn pickers would accomplish similar results in the case of corn husked from the standing stalks. Unloading and elevating machinery at the crib should be introduced and more generally used in many sections where it is now unknown or not commonly used. Where such facilities are not available cribs should be constructed in such a manner that they can be filled and emptied with the least possible labor. For level ground double cribs with an elevated driveway and approaches that will enable the loads to be driven through the cribs and dumped or scooped out of the wagons without any high pitching are very satisfactory.

CALL FOR MORE CORN

Wheat excepted, corn is the most valuable and indispensable of the world's grain crops. It holds a commanding position in the agriculture of the United States. Its vast acreage and heavy yields are responsible to no small extent for the success of agriculture. The department of agriculture, in its program issued early in February, which re-emphasized and amplified the food production program for 1918 published by the department in August, 1917, recommended that an acreage of corn approximately equal to that of 1917, which was the largest on record, should be planted in 1918, with possibly slight reductions in certain sections to free areas for spring wheat. In 1917 the acreage devoted to corn was approximately 119,755,000 acres, compared with 105,672,000 acres, the average for 1911-15, and with 107,083,000 acres for 1912 and 106,197,000 acres for 1915.

How Potato Spraying Paid.

Some potato growers, according to a recent statement from the department of agriculture, have expressed the opinion that it does not pay to spray potatoes for late blight. That thorough spraying will control the blight in seasons of bad infection has been proved many times in the past, says the statement, and most recently in Aroostook county, Me., in 1917. Among other places in the county this was shown conclusively at Aroostook farm, where extensive experiments were conducted by the United States department of agriculture in co-operation with the Maine Agricultural Experiment station. In one block where small test plots sprayed with standard bordeaux mixture were interspersed with untreated plots, the average yield on 11 of the former was at the rate of 181.2 bushels per acre, while that on an equal number of untreated plots was at the rate of 143.5 bushels per acre, an increase of 37.7 bushels per acre, or more than 26 per cent in favor of bordeaux mixture.

Test Your Seed Corn.

It is not too late in most sections to test seed corn. Five or six days are ample for the test. Never before has it been of such importance to determine the germination of seed corn before planting. Because of unusual conditions last season, much of the seed held over will not be fit to plant, at least at the regular rate of seeding. The germination test will show how much of the seed will grow. Let the rag doll tester make this determination for you. Your county agent or your agricultural college or, if you have time to write to Washington, the department of agriculture, will describe the use of this simple device. It will be well, specialists of the department of agriculture say, to retain all ears showing a germination of 60 per cent or more. The poorer germinating ears will have to be used if the supply of seed germinating 80 per cent or better is not sufficient. Keep the poorer seed separate and if it must be used plant it thicker than the rest.

Temperance Notes

A QUESTION OF HEALTH AND OF DOLLARS.

"For every dollar the federal government collects in liquor taxes, the local taxpayers of the country spend $10 to repair the damage done by liquor," points out Haven Emerson, health commissioner, New York city. "Is it the federal government that maintains the alcoholic wards of hospitals, supports the inebriate farms, pays the costs of the police, the courts, the prisons and [illegible] or poor farms?

"Come with me to the hospitals and the clinics, visit the homes of the poor, and see where the public must spend its money to rescue the remnants that liquor has left. Can you not see that it is worth a greater sacrifice than $500,000,000 a year to liberate a country from the bondage of the alcohol habit? There is no need to drag ethics into the matter. It is a matter of lives, brains, health, bread and dollars and our promises due to our allies. Nothing so practical, nothing so patriotic, nothing so logical can be done by this country now as to face the issue in a manly way. As Lloyd-George said, 'England is fighting Germany, Austria and drink.' Let us finish the drink first, and free ourselves forever from the most habit-forming of drugs, and then go ahead and show our allies our effectiveness, our self-control, as only a nonalcoholized country can. The world has never seen a nonalcoholized nation in war."

ENFORCING NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

The champions of the liquor traffic advance this argument against national constitutional prohibition. They say in effect, it would not be wise for the American people to do a thing that the federal government couldn't enforce if they did it. Is that the challenge? Is that the issue? Are we to drive this thing from the field of morals, are we to drive it from the domain of economics, are we to drive it from the domain of decent civics and then have it turn to us and say to us: "All you say of me is true, but you can't inhibit me, bad as I am, for I am greater than your government, and your institutions!" Men, women, it is that issue that summons me to such conflict as with my poor powers I am capable of waging. For I am not willing to confess that there is anything beneath the stars or under God Almighty himself greater than the sovereignty of my countrymen!—Ex-Gov. J. Frank Hanly of Indiana.

A MODERATE DRINKER.

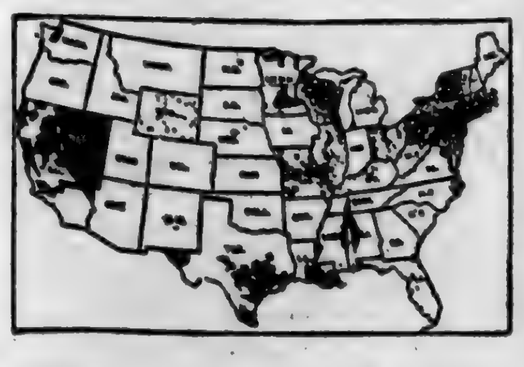
It was at the bedside of a very sick man. The physicians gravely watched the struggle between life and death. All depended upon the heart. Could it cope with the crisis? Life hung by a thread. The thread snapped. The newspapers said he died of pneumonia, and so he did. But the physicians remarked, "Too bad he used alcohol, otherwise he could have passed the crisis."

Yet this man was no drunkard—just a moderate drinker. He could "take it or leave it alone, just as he liked," and all the rest of it; was a highly respected citizen, and a staunch supporter of "personal liberty"—to take a drink when he wanted it.

THE USUAL STORY.

"You need not talk bone-dry prohibition to me," says County Commissioner Charnock of Sioux Falls, S. D. "If from no other than a strictly business basis, I would be strong for it. The county charges have dropped one-half in the past six months. Many of the floaters, who were always asking aid in the winter, have gone and the fellows who used to drink up their wages are now spending their money for necessities. There are only about ten or twelve county prisoners in the jail now and our bill for their jail maintenance will be about $250 this winter, as against $1,000 last winter."

PROHIBITION MAP OF THE UNITED STATES.



There are twenty-seven prohibition states. The District of Columbia, Alaska and Porto Rico are also dry. More than 88 per cent of the country's area is dry territory and more than 61 per cent of the people live under prohibition.

IT'S THAT KIND OF BUSINESS.

I am shouting happy to think that I am going to live long enough to preach the funeral sermon of the liquor business in America. I am overwhelmingly glad that I can see the end of this lawless, anarchistic, pimple-making, vice-producing, Sabbath-breaking, pocket-emptying, honor-wrecking, rag-bedecking, blood-polluting, riot-making, infamous, corrupt, God-forsaken business.—Billy Sunday.

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than May 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

IS HUMANITY'S GREATEST FOE

It is always a terror to old people and a menace at some time or another to every human being, young or old. LESSON FOR APRIL 21

JESUS TRANSFIGURED, OR A FOREGLEAM OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 9:2-29.

GOLDEN TEXT—This is my beloved Son: hear ye Him.—Mark 9:7.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matthew 17:1-20; Luke 9:28-43; II Peter 1:1-21.

PRIMARY TOPIC—With Jesus on the mountain.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Meeting difficulties with prayer.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—James 5:15-18.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Vision and service.

The hopes of the disciples were crushed when Christ announced his death on the cross. They were unable to see how victory could issue from death. Jesus took with him Peter, James and John, and went into the mountain apart by themselves. According to Luke, they went there to pray (Luke 9:28). While, doubtless, he longed for fellowship and sympathy as the shadows of the cross were falling upon him, his chief desire was to get the disciples apart and into a state of receptivity, so that he might show them the methods of the kingdom. Before going into the mountain, he declared that there were some standing in his presence who would not taste of death till they had seen the kingdom of God come with power (v. 1). That their drooping spirits might be revived and their confidence restored, he was transfigured before them. The disciples sorely needed such a vision. If the faith of the disciples was to be kept through the dark hour of the cross which was looming large before them the light of the eternal must beam forth. The disciple now, as then, needs a glimpse of the glory beyond the cross in order to face the issues of the hour.

I. Jesus Christ Glorified on the Mountain (vv. 2, 3). He took his disciples "by themselves" and was "transfigured before them." This shows the purpose terminated upon the disciples and not upon himself. Christ's rebuke of Peter for his unwillingness to hear concerning his death apparently for a time estranged the disciples from him. To heal this breech, an unusual transaction was required. His "shining raiment" was typical of that glory which shall be manifest when he comes back to the earth.

II. Peter, James and John Represent Israel in the Flesh in Connection With the Kingdom (v. 2). Christ is peculiarly the King of Israel. According to Ezekiel 37:21-27, they are to be the central people in the kingdom. This people shall be gathered from among the nations, united as one in that kingdom in their own country.

III. Moses and Elias Appeared in Glory With Jesus (vv. 4-13). These men in the glorified state are typical of the state of the saints in glory. Moses, who was once denied an entrance to Palestine, appears now in glory, representing the redeemed of the Lord who shall pass through death into the kingdom. The thousands of the Lord who have fallen asleep, at Christ's coming shall be awakened and pass into the kingdom through translation. Many shall be living upon the earth when the Lord shall come, and they, without dying, shall be changed and pass into the kingdom (1 Cor. 15:50-53; 1 Thess. 4:14-18).

1. Peter's foolish proposal (vv. 5, 6).

Moses and Elias, who had been a long time in glory, would be ill at home in a tabernacle on the mountainside. It would have been to Peter's credit to have been silent, since he knew not what to say.

2. The Divine voice out of the cloud (vv. 7, 8).

He is declared to be the beloved Son in whom God is well pleased. When one desires to know what pleases God, look at his perfect Son, Jesus Christ.

3. Jesus' charge (vv. 9-13).

He instructed them that they should tell no man concerning the things which they had seen until he had risen from the dead.

IV. The Mighty Power of the Divine Servant (vv. 14-29). When they descended from the mountain, they saw a great multitude in a state of perplexity. The immediate cause of their perplexity was the grievous state of a young man who was possessed with a demon (v. 18). The father of the the young man had appealed to the disciples to cast the demon out, but they were unable. When they brought him to Jesus, the foul spirit was rebuked (v. 25), and came forth. This young man's state is representative of the nations who are oppressed by the devil. The people were grievously oppressed.

There are times when the devil is especially active in the oppression of men. During Christ's sojourn on earth he seems to have been very active, and we have reason to believe from the Scriptures that just preceding his second coming he will be even more active; for he knows that his time is short. One of the ominous signs of the imminent coming of the Lord is the almost universal activity of the devil among the nations in this hour. When he comes he will cast out the demons, and the nations shall be brought into the kingdom which he will establish (Isa. 11:10-12).

IN ANOTHER KEY

A LITTLE BEDTIME STORY.

When Johnny Chuck ended his winter's hibernation and appeared in the doorway of his house, he found Peter Rabbit waiting for him, a-quiver with curiosity.

"So you are awake at last, Johnny?" exclaimed Peter. "I was in your house several weeks ago, and there you lay with your eyes closed and your hands embracing your stomach, sounder asleep than I ever saw anybody before."

"Oh, I wasn't asleep," replied Johnny. "I was in a brown study. Late last fall Sammy Jay, who thinks he's smart, told me a conundrum. He asked: 'What is the difference between an American soldier and a butcher in a packing plant?' He answered it himself. 'One is a defender and the other a beef ender.' And then he laughed. I have been studying over that all winter, trying to figure out whether he is a fool or he thinks I am."—Kansas City Star.

Helps Considerably.

"They've been married twenty years and they are still in love."

"After all, there is such a thing as lasting affection."

"Perhaps. But taking a practical view of the matter, both had enough money when they married to do what they liked, and they have never had to borrow from each other."

Absentminded.

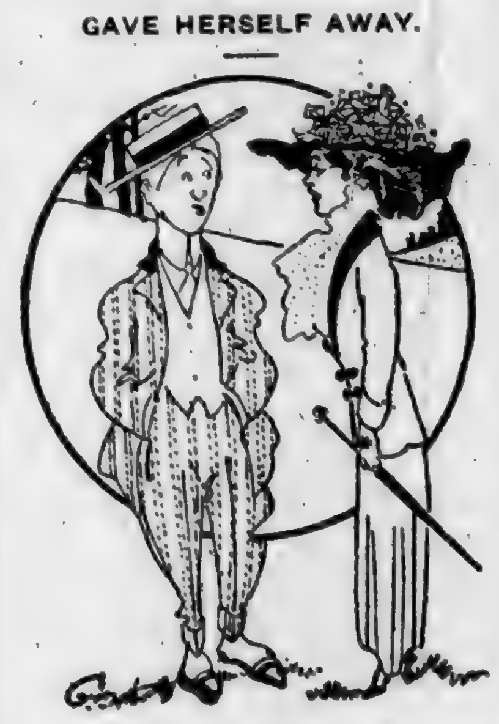
"What's wrong with the boss?"

"You know he has been in the habit lately of having his hands manicured. You hold your fingers in a little bowl of water, I believe."

"I know."

"Well, the minute the new stenographer seated herself at his desk he dipped his hand into the ink well."

GAVE HERSELF AWAY.



He—I bet you've told everyone what I told you as a secret last night.

She—Why, the idea! There's a whole lot of girls I haven't seen yet.

Joyous Assumption.

Why They Were There.

Mr. Bacon—Look at the item in this paper: The total wealth of the United States is estimated at $130,000,000,000.

Mrs. Bacon—Why are there so many ciphers in there?

"The ciphers, my dear, represent the wealth of a large proportion of the people."

Too Much Company.

"Have you ever loved before?" asked the coy maid.

"Yes," yawned the worldly young man, "but—er—never before a chaperone, two small brothers and a pet bulldog."

And then she suggested a trip down the old road to see the stars.

A Pessimist.

Mrs. Hickson—In the old days love letters were written with goose quills.

Mr. Hickson—Yes; they were written by many a goose, too.

Close to It.

Nick—Did her face light up?

The Main Point.

George—The idea of accepting such a buffoon of a man for a husband! Why, his name doesn't look well on a visiting card.

Evelyn—No; but it looks rather inviting on a check.

Speaking Gently.

"You say he has a lovely disposition."

"Wonderfully lovely. I have known him to go all over the golf links and never say anything more emphatic than 'Oh, fudge!'"

Worth Fighting For

SHALL this little girl grow up in the sort of American home we know, healthy and happy? Shall she have the advantage of living and learning in a free land, under free institutions? Shall such children develop into the Liberty-loving citizens that a free America may be proud of?

For over two hundred years Americans have fought valiantly, and died gallantly, to win for themselves and hand down to their posterity the blessings of liberty, justice, self-government and equal opportunity. This precious heritage, bought at so great a price, is now threatened.

The question which today confronts America as a nation, and you as an individual, is whether or not a free America is worth fighting for

Are American children in this and all future generations to receive unimpaired the legacy of freedom of which we are now the custodians, or shall their country be turned over bodily to the brutal, rapacious, power-mad enemy which has forced us into this war?

This question cannot be answered by word of mouth, but by deeds alone.

Notice to Registrants.

The Navy Department, in order that registrants may have an opportunity to choose that branch of the service and trade occupation that they may prefer, has opened the Naval Reserve to such registrants who upon enrollment will be placed on waiting orders. Information in detail for such registrants may be obtained from any Postmaster or any Naval Recruiting Office. It is important, however, that a registrant should take the precaution to enroll before being called by his Local Board to fill a quota, as under such circumstances the Local Board is not permitted to authorize his enrollment in the Navy. Men of draft age are accepted for enlistment or enrollment in the Navy and always have been, although many Editors seem to be misinformed on this point.

VOL. XXXII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, APRIL 25 1918 NO. 17

Dry Federation Meeting

A fair sized audience gathered at the Dry Federation meeting at Widney opera house Sunday evening, but not so large as there would have been had the weather been pleasant. Those who did not attend missed a treat, for never in the history of the town was a St. Joe audience privileged to listen to a more forceful, earnest, eloquent, instructive, entertaining speaker than James E. Wortendyke, who made the address of the evening.

Mr. Wortendyke is devoting his entire time and energy to work for temperance, sacrificing his law practice and the pleasures of home to the cause. He comes from Los Angeles, Cal., to which place he has not been for over a year and where he does not expect to go until the holidays. Rev. J. C. Coons presided over the meeting.

The speaker's subject was "The World's Struggle For Liberty;" and he traced this struggle from the time that Cain, selfish and autocratic, and Abel, unselfish and imbued with love of man, made their offerings to God, down through Jewish history to the crucifixion. Then, after the downfall of the Roman empire through the dark ages, he showed that autocracy stifled liberty; and that, in modern times, central Europe became the seat of autocracy.

Throughout all this time, however, the spirit of liberty was not dead; and, with the discovery of America, began the dawn of a new era—the era of freedom. The Pilgrim Fathers first planted liberty on American soil, and they and the other colonies enjoyed its blessings until the mother country began to curtail their privileges by tyrannical acts. But the spirit of liberty could not be conquered in America; and, on July 4, 1776, occurred one of the most momentous events in the history of the world: the Declaration of Independence was Liberty's answer to Christ on the cross, to Abel, to Daniel, to every lover of liberty from the beginning.

The News has not sufficient space to give a full outline of Mr. Wortendyke's address. He closed with an eloquent and patriotic plea for his hearers to do their share in making the world safe for democracy by overthrowing the autocratic powers of central Europe, in which he paid tribute to the sacrifices of the soldier boys and of the motherhood of America and urged the prohibition of the liquor traffic as a war measure.

At the conclusion of the address, pledge envelopes were passed among the audience and subscriptions were made to the Dry Federation cause. The amount subscribed was not made public.

An account of the meeting would be incomplete without mention of J. W. Huddleston, the singer and entertainer. He is a whole crowd in himself: and not because of his avoirdupois, either. He is a favorite with St Joe audiences, and there is a reason: he is the embodiment of good humor and he can sing, too. He entertained the audience twice—before and after Mr. Wortendyke's address, and the applause that followed his efforts attested to the pleasure of his hearers.

"That's It" Wasn't It

On Wednesday evening, a party of five St. Joe gentlemen—Messrs. John Betz, Sol Barney, J. C. Hull, Frank Kinsey and Supt. Fred Smith—went to Butler to attend the Odd Fellows lodge at that place, going in the Betz auto. The machine pulled off a number of acrobatic stunts—nearly everything but looping the loop. On the way home, it gave an imitation of a British tank demolishing wire entanglements. Indiana is dry and the gentlemen are all sober, respectable citizens. Hence, the machine's erratics were due to the slippery roads. Yes, "That's It."

LOCAL ITEMS IN BRIEF.

Tim Agler and family moved to Ft. Wayne, Tuesday of this week.

Get those old shoes repaired now, and be ready for the spring work. Save leather as well as foodstuffs. Henley, St. Joe.

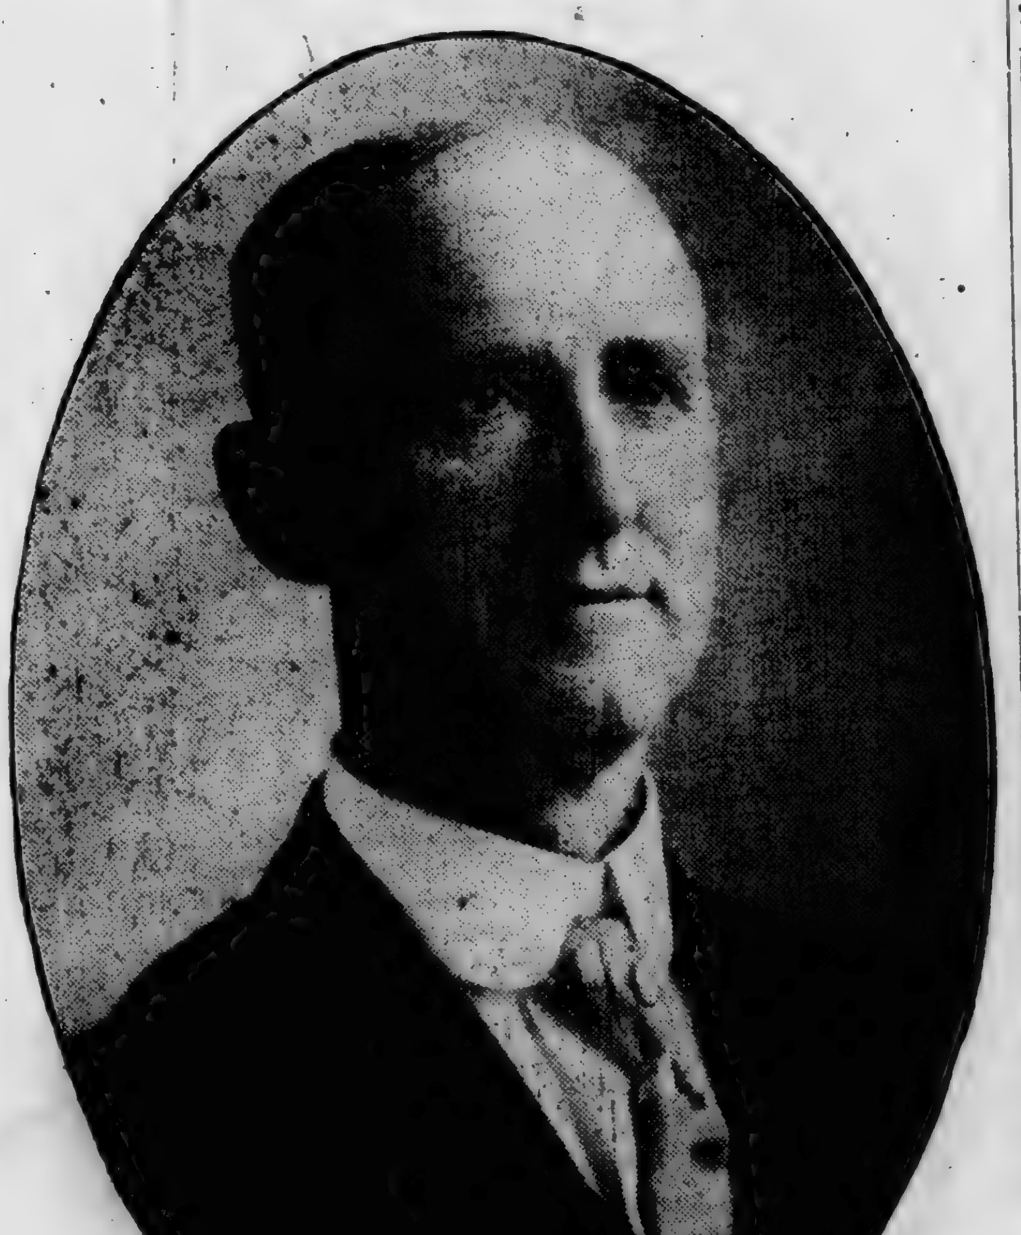
FOR RECORDER



Editor News:—Please make the following announcement that I will again make the race for County Recorder. I also at this time wish to thank the people of the county for the many favors shown me four years ago, and will thank them in advance for any favors extended at the coming primary. I assure them that their confidence will not be misplaced. Simeon H. Maurer.

THE PEDDLER OF DESTINY

Now the green mist of spring across the land
Is gathering, bud by bud and leaf by leaf—
Spring of a year marked deep with fate, and I,
A peddler, take the April road.
My pack's before you, but the goods I bring
I must cry to you, for you see them not.
And yet no richer market ever roared
Across the sunlit squares of Samarcand.
What do I bring, you wonder? To each one
I bring a fragment of the peace to come,
A moment from the golden future plucked,

You think I wander. Nay, but hark you now.
What shall the morrow hold, how shall you live
You—you, my friend—each one of you—
If the dark powers prevail—if the strong foe,
Blind with desire, with fire of battle drunk,
Sweep on across a tender, teeming world
And blast it into waste and trodden slime?
You will not have it so? We, we, the world,
Will rise—rise and resist. But how? Thus, mark:
We'll place across his path a wall of might,
A wall impassable—higher than towers
Of high cathedrals—deeper than the sea—
A wall of the high hearts of youth,
Of young men's dreams and young men's lives; and we Behind that wall shall come and go in peace.

Now stands that wall. And now the battle storm
Tears through the heart of youth. Yet youth, renewed
Out of high justice, glories long ago
And love—youth battles on for you, and for
The world that in youth's dreams is crescent still.
And the wall stands.

And we shall come and go
And traffic hopefully. What will you buy?
If I should say now—Give
Down to the threadbare verge of need, to keep
Your sons, your soldiers, from the screaming death,
What could you answer? But I cry not so. I bring
A richer market than the Orient East
Gleams with, when golden caravans come home.
To everyone I bring his chance to lift
A banner for the dawn of righteousness;
I bring a shield for those who man the wall,
And food and drink for those who fight for you—
Pledges of love and faith from you to them;
I bring a hope that when the fires of war
Bur down, a juster will—more like the will
Of God—shall lie upon our enemies;
I bring the future years
Fulfilled of peace and neighbor-love and law
Shaped to the happier blossoming of life.

All these I bring you—is my market good?
Stay, now—though gold be power—I will not sell.
But keep your gold and I will hold it safe—
More safe than you—more safe than any chest
Of iron ribs you can devise for it.
Lend it to keep it—lend it to increase,
And it shall still be yours; but in your name
It shall relume the torch of Liberty,
It shall make sure the road of coming peace,
It shall renew the soaring dreams of youth
And it shall march with our land's destiny.

—Thomas Wood Stevens.

BRAINSTORM

The time draws near when a certain editor's burden of sin will be lightened by the absence of cigarette ads in his paper. Sad to relate, his exchequer will be lightened by the absence of a few simoleons. Thus are the "jis" and "sorrers" of life intermixed.

Believing that cleanliness is next to Godliness applies to communities as well as to individuals, the town authorities have resolved to put their belief into effect by setting apart Thursday, May 2, as "clean-up" day. Clean yards, alleys and highways contribute both to health and attractiveness. Pestilence breeds in refuge heaps, which are also unsightly and make a bad impression upon visitors. Every citizen should "red up" his premises. It is urged that nothing be hauled to the dump that can be burned.

The distillers and wholesale liquor dealers have issued a manual, in which is given the names of men who did not advocate prohibition, beginning with Jesus Christ and ending with George Washington. The list includes St. Paul, John the Baptist, all the apostles, John Calvin, Martin Luther, the popes of Rome, Benjamin Franklin, Daniel Webster, Alfred Tennyson and others. The use of Christ's name as a defender of the liquor business is downright blasphemy. Had the twentieth century saloon existed in His time, He would have been emphatic in its denunciation. The devil never advocated prohibition, and does not today.

The News is non-partisan: it will not advocate the candidacy of any man for office because he is a member of any particular party. At the same time, in the interests of good citizenship, this paper feels it to be a duty to speak a good word for a deserving candidate, regardless of his party affiliations; and it is with pleasure that attention is called to the fact that Henry C. Hathaway is out after the nomination for county recorder on the Republican ticket. He is a citizen of Concord township, and for four years has served as township trustee, giving general satisfaction; and, if nominated, will add strength to the ticket in this part of the county. The News unhesitatingly recommends him to the Republicans of DeKalb county.

Going to New Haven

A loss to St. Joe as the result of the fire will be the moving of H. L. Dunkle and family from town. Mr. Dunkle has purchased 2.65 acres of land on the Lincoln highway between Fort Wayne and New Haven, near the latter place. His new property has on it a nice stucco bungalow. He and his family will occupy their new home within thirty days. He expects to become a tiller of the soil on a limited scale.

Dr. Carey Promoted

Word has been received at Fort Wayne that Dr. W. W. Carey, formerly of Spencerville, has been promoted from first lieutenant to captain in the medical corps and that two silver bars instead of one will soon ornament his shoulders, indicative of his new rank. Captain Carey has been stationed at Camp Meade, Md, where his capable work won his advancement.

GROUND GLASS IN FOOD ONLY ONCE

MORE THAN TWO HUNDRED CASES OF THIS ALLEGED OUTRAGE HAVE BEEN INVESTIGATED.

PREFERENCE LIST FOR COAL

Issued by Priorities Board for Guidance of Distributing Agencies—Council of Defense Favors School District Organizations.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—The frequent and widespread publication of statements concerning the presence of ground glass in foodstuffs has led the committee on public information to inquire into the authenticity of these reports. It has been advised by the food administration that thorough investigations, of more than 200 of the cases has disclosed only one instance in which ground glass was found in the foodstuffs inspected.

The case in which glass was found occurred at Fort Smith, Ark. A baker in that town had had trouble with his employees, one of whom, desiring to destroy his employer's business, had filled with glass a loaf of bread which was to be delivered to an orphanage. When the bread was served to the inmates of the institution several of them suffered lacerations of their lips. No more serious injuries resulted.

The first preference list issued by the priorities board, which names industries whose operation is considered of exceptional importance to the country during the war, is for the guidance of all agencies of the United States in the distribution of coal and coke. Included in the list are plants engaged in the manufacture of the following:

Aircraft and supplies; ammunition and small arms for the United States government or the allies; chemicals; coke; electrical equipment; electrodes; explosives; farm implements and farm operating equipment; feed; ferro-alloys; fertilizers; fire brick; food; food containers; gas; gas-producing machinery; guns; hemp, jute, and cotton bags; insecticides; iron and steel; machine tools; mining tools and equipment; oil-well equipment; locomotives, cars, and other railway supplies; ships (not including pleasure craft); soap; tanned leather, save for patent leather; tanning extracts; tin plate; binder twine and rope; wire rope and rope wire.

Army and navy camps and cantonments are included in the list as well as mines, newspapers and periodicals, oil refineries, public institutions and buildings, public utilities, railways, producers and wholesalers of seeds, except flower seeds.

In a statement urging the creation of "community councils" the council of national defense cities these advantages of the school district as a unit of community organization:

The school district is small enough to permit individual contact, and is non-political.

The schoolhouse supplies a meeting place in each district, and in many schools includes domestic science, manual training, and other facilities.

The school district reaches children and parents alike, and in the cities the school is, to a large extent, already in touch with the alien population.

The school is an established center of information and education.

The school principal or faculty provides a tried agency through whose assistance community organization can be quickly effected.

The school district, with the schoolhouse as its center, is already a social community, especially in farm districts.

Wage increases in the United States are not keeping pace with the advance in the cost of living, Assistant Secretary of Labor Post asserts. Figures compiled by the bureau of labor statistics of the department of labor, he says, show that while the cost of food last year increased 25 per cent for the entire country, wages rose only one-half or two-thirds of that rate.

The statement issued by the bureau of labor statistics showing the increased living costs throughout the United States for the year ending January 15 says:

"Comparing January 15, 1918, with January 15, 1917, the rate of food as a whole increased 25 per cent. All articles show decided increases with the exception of potatoes, which decreased 16 per cent. Cornmeal shows the greatest price change, an increase of 77 per cent. Bacon increased 64 per cent; lard, 53 per cent; pork chops, 44 per cent; ham, 42 per cent; milk, 35 per cent; hens, 29 per cent; butter, 25 per cent; eggs, 23 per cent; bread, 19 per cent; sugar, 18 per cent; and flour, 17 per cent."

A review of the first year of operation of the federal farm loan system shows that 2,808 national farm loan associations were incorporated, representing about four associations to each five counties of the United States. They average 20 members, or a total membership of about 56,000 farmers.

The 12 land banks have received applications for over 120,000 loans, amounting to about $300,000,000. About 80,000 loans, amounting to over $160,000,000, have been approved, and on 30,000 of these loans over $80,000,000 has been paid to the farmers.

Under the new baking rules issued by the food administration, the substitute for wheat-flour content of all bread and rolls must amount to 25 per cent. The substitute content hereafter required in various products follow:

Sweet yeast dough goods, 33 1-3 per cent; crackers, 15 per cent; cookies and ice cream cones, 33 1-3 per cent; cakes, 33 1-3 per cent; pies, 33 1-3 per cent; fried cakes, 33 1-3 per cent; pastry, 33 1-3 per cent; batter cakes, waffles, quickbreads—such as muffins and Boston brown bread, 66 2-3 per cent.

Under the new rules no public eating place may serve more than two ounces of bread and rolls or more than four ounces of quickbread to any one person at any one meal.

With customers who buy loaf bread, bakers are urged to promote the use of the three-quarter pound loaf, following the food administration's request that the 12-ounce loaf be used where the 16-ounce loaf was used before.

Bakers are urged to introduce "quick-breads" as a wheat-saving measure. These quick breads, including muffins, baking-powder biscuits, corn bread, Boston brown bread, griddle cakes, and waffles, must contain two-thirds wheat-flour substitutes.

The use of the words "milk" or "cream" on wrappers and labels is no longer prohibited, but milk bread must still be sold at the same price as bread made without milk.

The official review of the first year of war issued by the committee on public information contained the following description of the work of American engineers in France:

American engineers have gone into French forests and done the work of the pioneers of our own Northwest. They have frequently been under fire. One of their first tasks was the reconstruction and extension of a railroad 600 miles long to carry our products from ports of disembarkation to general bases of operation.

The First Engineers troops, 1,100 strong, arrived in France about three months after war was declared. Since then the number has been greatly augmented. These troops have been constantly engaged in general engineering work, including the construction of railways, docks, wharves, cantonments, and hospitals.

An American army locomotive was built in this country in 21 days and shipped to the Expeditionary Forces. Many other locomotives, cars, logging trains, tracks, disassembled buildings and other equipment have been shipped to augment the output and facilitate the construction operations of American forces abroad.

The federal trade commission has issued orders to 98 lumber companies of the middle West and far West requiring them to stop certain trade practices in relation to mail-order lumber concerns. Among the practices which are barred by the orders are the following:

Obtaining from mail-order concerns, in bad faith or by subterfuge, estimates of the prices of lumber and building material and obtaining catalogues and special information intended only for bona fide customers and prospective customers.

Through actual or threatened withdrawal of patronage, inducing manufacturers or wholesalers to refuse to furnish supplies of lumber and building material to mail-order concerns.

Following or causing salesmen of mail-order concerns to be followed from place to place with the object of hindering and embarrassing them in their negotiations with prospective customers.

The latest bread allowances in France, placing the ration at about two-thirds of that heretofore maintained, limit maximum consumption, per day, as follows:

Persons from thirteen to sixty years old 10½ ounces (hard workers in this age class may receive 3½ ounces more.)

Persons over sixty, seven ounces.

Parents of soldiers in camps are warned by the war department of a swindle which has been successfully operated in various camps.

A telegram is sent informing that the soldier has a furlough, and requesting funds by wire to come home, waiving identification. The rest is a mere matter of detail.

Parents and friends should be warned of this game and of the similar one where the telegraphic request is to mail money to the soldier, care general delivery.

The total amount of foodstuffs shipped during March from the United States and Canada to the allies, according to the food administration, was about 1,100,000 tons, compared with 750,000 tons in February.

Representatives of the musical-instrument industry have agreed to a curtailment of their output to 70 per cent of normal during April and May.

Three landing fields have been obtained for the proposed Washington-New York airplane postal service, at Washington, Philadelphia, and New York. According to the post office department, the service will start not later than May 15.

Red Cross workers at line of communication canteens in France accompany American soldiers on shopping trips, to see that they receive correct change and otherwise advise them in their encounters with French shop keepers.

Indiana Brevities

Crawfordsville.—The Crawfordsville school authorities are proud of the record of the Crawfordsville high school in war work in this city. One hundred and sixty-seven C. H. S. boys are now in the service. Each pupil in the school is the owner of a Thrift stamp. The school has adopted five French and three Belgian children. The school membership has invested $15,101 in Thrift stamps and Liberty bonds and has given $1,100 to the army Y. M. C. A. The girls have done much work in the Red Cross, in sewing and knitting.

Evansville.—The development of southwestern Indiana as a bee-keeping district was proposed by Professor Baldwin of Purdue university, and he is arranging to hold several meetings with farmers of Vanderburg county. He proposes the abolition of all comb honey in the markets as a war measure, as it means added expense and work at a time when a labor shortage exists and it prevents swarming. Knox county has developed into a bee-keeping country through the increased planting of alfalfa, and the wild propagation of a certain species of milkweed, which produces a fine grade of honey.

Indianapolis.—G. I. Christie of the food production and conservation committee of the state council of defense has asked garden committees and supervisors of the state to investigate reports that exorbitant rentals are being charged by lot owners for the use of their lots as patriotic gardens and to take steps to stop this practice. Professor Christie, in his communication, states that garden work is seriously handicapped in some parts of the state by this practice. In some communities, he says, real estate associations are encouraging the practice of charging high rentals for vacant lots.

Indianapolis.—A two-day council of the executive board of the National American Suffrage association was held here. The meeting was called by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the national organization, to make plans intended to assure ratification by states of the federal amendment to the constitution, which will come up in the senate, probably early in May. Other plans will be made to assist in the election or defeat of congressional nominees next fall if the federal amendments fail of passage in the senate.

Huntington. — All candidates for nomination as candidates for the legislature went on record as favoring state-wide prohibition and the ratification of the national prohibition amendment at a Dry Federation meeting here. The men are Oliver Kline, Republican, and W. O. Taylor, Democrat, candidates for the joint senatorship nomination; C. F. Juillerate, Democrat; George W. Frazier, Ed Youse and Harley Rittgers, Republicans, candidates for nomination for representative.

Jeffersonville.—A letter has been received by David C. Peyton, general superintendent of the Indiana reformatory, from Tony Staton, chief of police at Collinsville, Ill., confirming the identification of Robert Paul Prager, the young German who was lynched there April 4, with the young man of the same name who was committed to the Indiana reformatory from Lake county for petit larceny, December 17, 1912, and became delinquent shortly after his parole February 27, 1914, to the Howard institution at Chicago.

Lafayette.—Purdue university's agricultural extension department has issued a bulletin on the home preservation of eggs. The author is A. G. Phillips, head of the division of poultry husbandry. The bulletin says: "When eggs are plentiful in April and May they should be put away to help overcome the shortage of supply in the fall and winter. The housewife can buy when they are cheap and have eggs at a time of the year when retail prices are sometimes prohibitive."

Hattiesburg, Miss.—Hundreds of soldiers at Camp Shelby here will be instructed in the science of machine gun fire. The instructors have all been chosen from among the troops at the local camp, and the greater part of them are from Indiana. The problems have been worked out by Maj. William P. Carpenter of Indianapolis, who will command the school, and Maj. A. J. Jackson, machine gun corps, British army, attached to the headquarters of the Seventy-sixth infantry brigade.

South Bend.—Commissioners to the general assembly were elected by the Logansport presbytery at the closing session of the state meeting held in Mishawaka, those named being: Ministers—Rev. F. E. Walton, Gary; Rev. M. H. Krause, Hammond. Alternates—Rev. C. A. Lippincott and Rev. G. W. Allison, South Bend. Lay commissioners—A. R. McArthur of Gary; H. P. Sims, Schneider. Alternates—P. C. Hubbs, Logansport, and J. G. Rice, Hammond.

Indianapolis.—Indiana farmers are giving the lie to the charge that they are slackers in the Third Liberty loan drive. Reports received show that the rural communities of the state are making a showing proportionately better than are the manufacturing and urban centers.

Warsaw.—Kosciusko county farmers are responding to the governor's call for wheat, and during the last week about 15,000 bushels were marketed. It had been reported that there was no wheat in storage in the county, but the government's threat to seize it brought some to light.

Bloomington.—Before adjourning its sessions here, the annual meeting of the Indianapolis Presbyterian Missionary society elected officers as follows: President, Mrs. A. G. Brown, Indianapolis; vice presidents, Mrs. J. H. Holliday and William H. Hubbard, Indianapolis; Mrs. Charles H. Springer, Bloomington; recording secretary, Mrs. Lucy Mayo, Indianapolis; foreign secretary, Mrs. H. C. Robinson, Martinsville; home secretary, Mrs. H. W. Grossman; Indianapolis; home treasurer, Mrs. H. G. Goughlen, Indianapolis; foreign treasurer, Mrs. William Griffiths, Indianapolis; guild secretary, Miss Esther Aiken, Franklin. The association pledged to increase all of its contributions to home and foreign missions over the amount last year, which was $900. The conference next year will be held in Indianapolis.

Indianapolis.—Indiana educators are worrying over where they are going to get enough school teachers for the next school year. Horace Ellis, state superintendent of public instruction, declared that it looks very much as if Indiana would temporarily have to lower its standard requirements for public school teachers or let down the bars to teachers trained in other states. The shortage is laid to the war. Its call found a quick response in the virility of the Hoosier school masters and mistresses, according to Doctor Ellis. Especially has the vocational education stock been depleted. Manual training teachers also are scarce. Woman teachers have heard the call of the Red Cross and the whole situation has developed many new problems.

Indianapolis.—Just now, when the coal mines should be working to their utmost capacity and the output of coal should be at its heaviest point, Indiana coal mines are working only about half time and producing only about half as much coal as they might produce. It is this fact that caused William Greene, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America; E. I. Lewis, chairman of the Indiana public service commission, and Jihn A. George, president of the Indianapolis Coal company, to agree, in separate interviews, that there is a coal famine in prospect for next winter that will make last year's coal shortage fade into insignificance.

Washington, D. C.—Pensions have been granted the following Indianians: Thomas Buckner, National Military home, $20; William F. Porter, Lagro, $20, and $25 each to Catherine B. Denius, Newcastle; Mary P. Ciseny, Warsaw; Carrie B. Cooke, Laporte; Mary Becker, North Vernon; Sarah W. Wohlenord, Huntington; Melissa J. Thomas, Idaville; Clarissa Snodgrass, Sheridan; Alzina Beckner, Elwood; Ella M. Oliver, Walcott; Evaline McFarland, Southport; Al'Mary Lawrence, Terre Haute; Bridget Kingsley, Inidanapolis; Charlotte Hinds, Elwaad; Bertha A. Frakes, Laconia, and Mary A. Emahiser, Akron.

Indianapolis.—Retail coal dealers and jobbers are circulating a petition among themselves, which will be sent to the national fuel administration, asking that Illinois coal be permitted to be shipped into Indianapolis. The zoning system, recently put in force by the administration, shuts off this cial from Indianapolis, and in the past large quantities of the product have ben sold to local consumers. The shipment of this cial to the city is by direct rail connection, and is generally speedy.

Jeffersonville.—The transfer of 200 men from the Indiana reformatory here to the Indiana state prison at Michigan City was authorized by the board of trustees at its monthly session, with the approval of Governor Goodrich. The transfer is to be made on account of a demand for men at the prison to work in the binder twine factory, but incidentally it will relieve the pressure here, where accommodations have been strained for several years, since the number of inmates has run up to nearly 1,300.

Evansville.—Rev. H. J. Schneider has resigned as a member of the city school board, and the resignation has been accepted by Benjamin Bosse, mayor. Rev. Mr. Schneider's action came as the result of a meeting of more than 100 prominent business men, at which the mayor was asked to remove him at once. He opposed the elimination of teaching German in the city schools.

Winchester.—The farmers in this county are nearly through plowing for corn. Oats are all sowed and many fields are up. More barley and spring wheat have been sowed than ever before. Most of the spring seed wheat was shipped from Minnesota. The spring has been exceedingly favorable for the planting of crops. Winter wheat is in excellent condition. Fruit is generally safe, except the peaches and plums.

Fort Wayne.—The board of county commissioners offered to Prof. A. T. Wiancko of Purdue university a 20-acre tract at the county farm to be used as a new Purdue experiment station. The offer is expected to be accepted, according to the statement of Professor Wiancko, after he inspected the land.

Indianapolis.—About 275 bushels of wheat were hauled to this city by motor trucks, following orders given by Stanley Wyckoff, federal food administrator for Marion county, to Sam Pfender, a farmer living 14 miles southeast of Indianapolis, and Roy and David Pfender, his two sons, whose farms adjoin that of their father. Mr. Wyckoff visited the three farms, and finding that wheat was withheld from market, ordered it brought to the city. The farmers did not haul it in and Wyckoff sent the trucks after it.

AMERICANS AND TRUE DEMOCRACY

Dollars Are Needed as Exemplification of Spirit.

TIME TO BUY LIBERTY BONDS

Citizens Must Lend Their Financial Assistance to Government to Forever Eliminate Effects of Germany's Influence.

By GEORGE E. BOWEN
of the Vigilantes.

In the main, it cannot be said of America that she is without her Americans, or that the faith and service of the mass is un-American in spirit.

Dollars do not always go with democracy, but when informed, inspired and enlisted they can be mighty useful to it.

There has been a mistaken idea in certain sections of America that dollars, according to the number of them, spelled "aristocracy."

They don't. That is an imported idea. And that it is perishing in the land of its origin, witness the war and the consternation of the few aristocrats, both external and inbred.

There have been, possibly are, a few external aristocrats in America, who, in a moment of excessive vanity measured their social importance by the size of their material fortunes.

Millionaire Privates in Ranks.

There are millionaire privates in the ranks of the American army and navy who have renounced all the prestige of fortune for the prvilege of comradeship.

In the crucial test humanity was first, last, and all the way between. Men are more than money. The outer veneer has been quickly shed. The man has emerged.

What he thought was his pride, in days of social and financial triumph, he finds was but a cheap and trivial plaything. Now, his real pride is a thing of purpose, power and dignity.

Before the war is over, dollars that hid in aristocratic seclusion or vaunted themselves in ostentatious power are going voluntarily and humbly to join the forces of democracy.

After the war they are going to develop a system of popular redistribution relieving the old congestion whose fevers broke out in many forms of luxury and extravagance incompatible with universal contentment.

The only aristocracy America wants or needs is of the heart and of the mind.

The shoulder touch of men on the march or in the trenches has welded this feeling into a living creed, a saving faith.

The escutcheon of American manhood may be either a splash of Belgian mud or a splotch of German blood.

Drawing True Men Together.

In place of the dollar crest will be the sign of the courage test.

There was a lot of sound democracy in the old ultimatum—"millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute."

Therein is the basic principle of resistance of Prussianism. That principle is drawing all true men together. It is putting service above self. It is asking America to take the gold of vanity and pour it into the cause of humanity.

It laughs at dollars and dynamite and royal degenerates.

The America annointed of this spirit is at last to carry it forth to a perishing world.

And the despised American dollar shall, with the courage, generosity and chivalry of American manhood, be the instrument of salvation.

The day of contribution is at hand. Where is your dollar?

NO EXEMPTION

If you cannot launch a bullet at the fiend
across the sea,
Buy a bond!
It will reach its little target straighter than a homing bee—
Buy a bond!
If you've bought a lot before,
Don't believe you've done your chore—
Buy a half a dozen more!
Buy a bond!
—Strickland Gillilan.

First Colonial General Hospital.

It was on February 7, 1751, that the first general hospital was chartered in the colonies—the Pennsylvania state hospital in Philadelphia. Joshua Crosby was the first president of the institution, and Benjamin Franklin, who had been prominent in urging the establishment of an institution for the care of the sick, was the first clerk. It was in this hospital in 1769 that Thomas Bond gave the first clinical instruction in America.

The Difficulty.

"I understand young Loftus draws quite a small salary in his clerical work. He could make much more just now by going into a factory."

"Yes, but then he would have to draw wages."

Some Needed.

"That baby does nothing but scream all the time."

"Well, dear, I'm as loyal as you are, but you must agree with me that this is one case where we must be neel fists."

Women in Business World.

More than 1,000 firms, partnerships, and individuals doing business in Pennsylvania under assumed names have registered the real names of their owners, and in many cases it has been found that women were not only managers but owners of stores, factories and other industries.

President's Power Supreme.

In time of war the president of the United States is commander in chief of the army and navy. The members of his cabinet are responsible to him personally, not to congress. None of them may be removed without his consent, except by impeachment.

Liked Frederick Best.

Marjorie is fair and feels real proud of her pretty blue bonnet. The other day she came home from kindergarten and said: "Frederick telled me my bonnet is pretty, but James said 'High cost of living' at me."

Extremes.

Heaven pity the woman whose husband is so wild that she can't control him, or the one whose spouse is so good that he's monotonous.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Simple but Good Advice.

"Don't bother too much," said Uncle Eben, "'bout puttin' yoh bes' foot forward. Jes' keep both feet movin' till you gits whar you's g'ine to."

Knew What He Wanted to Say.

My little nephew is trying hard to be polite, but sometimes he gets things twisted. One day, as I turned around rather suddenly, I accidentally gave him quite a bump with my elbow right in his eye.

"Oh, excuse me, dear?" I exclaimed, contritely.

"You're welcome," he answered, amid his sobs.—Chicago Tribune.

ECZEMA CAUSED YEARS OF INTENSE AGONY

"I have suffered intense agony from Eczema on my leg and other parts of my body for years, and received only temporary relief from other preparations. It is only a month since I started to use PETERSON'S OINTMENT, and there is no sign of Eczema or itching. You can refer to me."—Geo. C. Talbot, 27 Penfield St., Buffalo, N. Y.

I've got a hundred testimonials, says Peterson, just as sincere and honest as this one. Years ago, when I first started to put out PETERSON'S OINTMENT, I made up my mind to give a big box for a small price, and I'm still doing it, as every druggist in the country knows.

I guarantee PETERSON'S OINTMENT because I know that its mighty healing power is marvelous. I say to every one who buys a box that it is rigidly guaranteed for Eczema, Pimples, Salt Rheum, Old Sores, Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles, Ulcers, Skin Diseases, Chafing, Burns, Scalds and Sunburn, and if not satisfactory any druggist will return your money. 30 cents.

His Own Fault.

"Flubdub doesn't think much of Plunkville hospitality. He's always abusing that town."

"It's his own fault. I don't know what he did, but they had to put him in jail."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

EMPEY LEARNS HOW THE TOMMIES ARE FED IN THE FRONT-LINE TRENCH AND BACK OF IT.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead.

After dinner I tried to wash out the dixie with cold water and a rag, and learned another maxim of the trenches—"It can't be done." I slyly watched one of the older men from another section, and was horrified to see him throw into his dixie four or five double handfuls of mud. Then he poured in some water, and with his hands scoured the dixie inside and out. I thought he was taking an awful risk. Supposing the cook should have seen him! After half an hour of unsuccessful efforts I returned my dixie to the cook shack, being careful to put on the cover, and returned to the billet. Pretty soon the cook poked his head in the door and shouted: "Hey, Yank, come out here and clean your dixie!" I protested that I had wasted a half-hour on it already, and had used up my only remaining shirt in the attempt. With a look of disdain he exclaimed: "Blow me, your shirt! Why in —— didn't you use mud?"

Without a word in reply I got busy with the mud, and soon my dixie was bright and shining.

Most of the afternoon was spent by the men writing letters home. I used my spare time to chop wood for the cook and go with the quartermaster to draw coal. I got back just in time to issue our third meal, which consisted of hot tea. I rinsed out my dixie and returned it to the cookhouse, and went back to the billet with an exhilarated feeling that my day's labor was done. I had fallen asleep on the straw when once again the cook appeared in the door of the billet with: "Blime me, you Yanks are lazy. Who in —— a-goin' to draw the water for the mornin' tea? Do you think I'm a-goin' to? Well, I'm not," and he left. I filled the dixie with water from an old squeaking well, and once again lay down in the straw.

CHAPTER VII.

Rations.

Just dozing off; Mr. Lance Corporal butted in.

He ordered me to go with him and help him draw the next day's rations, also told me to take my waterproof.

Every evening, from each platoon or machine-gun section, a lance corporal and private go to the quartermaster sergeant at the company stores and draw rations for the following day.

The "quarter," as the quartermaster sergeant is called, receives daily from the orderly room (captain's office) a slip showing the number of men entitled to rations, so there is no chance of putting anything over on him. Many arguments take place between the "quarter" and the platoon noncom, but the former always wins out. Tommy says the "quarter" got his job because he was a burglar in civil life.

Then I spread the waterproof sheet on the ground, while the quartermaster's batman dumped the rations on it. The corporal was smoking a fag. I carried the rations back to the billet. The corporal was still smoking a fag. How I envied him. But when the issue commenced my envy died, and I realized that the first requisite of a noncommissioned officer on active service is diplomacy. There were 19 men in our section, and they soon formed a semicircle around us after the corporal had called out, "Rations up."

The quartermaster sergeant had given a slip to the corporal on which was written a list of the rations. Sitting on the floor, using a wooden box as a table, the issue commenced. On the left of the corporal the rations were piled. They consisted of the following:

Six loaves of fresh bread, each loaf of a different size, perhaps one out of the six being as flat as a pancake, the result of an army service corps man placing a box of bully beef on it during transportation.

Three tins of jam, one apple and the other two plum.

Seventeen Bermuda onions, all different sizes.

Two one-pound tins of butter.

A handful of raisins.

A tin of biscuits, or as Tommy calls them "jaw breakers."

A bottle of mustard pickles.

The "bully beef," spuds, condensed milk, fresh meat, bacon and "Maconochie rations" (a can filled with meat, vegetables and greasy water), had been turned over to the company cook to make a stew for next day's dinner. He also received the tea, sugar, salt, pepper and flour.

Scratching his head, the corporal studied the slip issued to him by the quarter. Then in a slow, mystified voice he read out, "No. 1 section, 19 men. Bread, loaves, six." He looked puzzled and soliloquized in a musing voice:

"Six loaves, nineteen men. Let's see, that's three in a loaf for fifteen men—well, to make it even, four of you'll have to muck in on one loaf."

The four that got stuck made a howl, but to no avail. The bread was dished out. Pretty soon from a far corner of the billet, three indignant Tommies accosted the corporal with:

The corporal answered:

"Well, don't blame me, I didn't bake it; somebody's got to get it, so shut up until I dish out these blinkin' rations."

Then the corporal started on the jam.

"Jam, three tins—apple one, plum two. Nineteen men, three tins. Six in a tin makes twelve men for two tins, seven in the remaining tin."

He passed around the jam, and there was another riot. Some didn't like apple, while others who received plum were partial to apple. After a while differences were adjusted and the issue went on.

"Bermuda onions, seventeen."

The corporal avoided a row by saying that he did not want an onion, and I said they make your breath smell, so I guessed I would do without one too. The corporal looked his gratitude.

"Cheese, pounds, two."

The corporal borrowed a jackknife (corporals are always borrowing), and sliced the cheese—each slicing bringing forth a pert remark from the onlookers as to the corporal's eyesight.

"Raisins, ounces, eight."

By this time the corporal's nerves had gone west, and in despair he said that the raisins were to be turned over to the cook for "duff" (plum pudding). This decision elicited a little "grousing," but quiet was finally restored.

"Biscuits, tins, one."

With his borrowed jackknife, the corporal opened the tin of biscuits, and told everyone to help themselves—nobody responded to this invitation. Tommy is "fed up" with biscuits.

"Butter, tins, two."

"Nine in one, ten in the other."

Another rumpus.

"Pickles, mustard, bottles, one."

Nineteen names were put in a steel helmet, the last one out winning the pickles. On the next issue there were only 18 names, as the winner is eliminated until every man in the section has won a bottle.

The raffle is closely watched, because Tommy is suspicious when it comes to gambling with his rations.

At the different French estaminets in the village and at the canteens Tommy buys fresh eggs, milk, bread and pastry. Occasionally when he is flush, he invests in a tin of pears or apricots. His pay is only a shilling a day, 24 cents, or a cent an hour. Just imagine, a cent an hour for being under fire—not much chance of getting rich out there.

When he goes into the fire trench (front line), Tommy's menu takes a tumble. He carries in his haversack what the government calls emergency or iron rations. They are not supposed to be opened until Tommy dies of starvation. They consist of one tin of bully beef, four biscuits, a little tin which contains tea, sugar and Oxo cubes (concentrated beef tablets). These are only to be used when the enemy establishes a curtain of shell fire on the communication trenches, thus preventing the "carrying in" of rations, or when in an attack a body of troops has been cut off from its base of supplies.

The rations are brought up at night by the company transport. This is a section of the company in charge of the quartermaster sergeant, composed of men, mules and limbers (two-wheeled wagons), which supplies Tommy's wants while in the front line. They are constantly under shell fire. The rations are unloaded at the entrance to the communication trenches and are "carried in" by men detailed for that purpose. The quartermaster sergeant never goes into the front-line trench. He doesn't have to, and I have never heard of one volunteering to do so.

The company sergeant major sorts the rations and sends them in.

Tommy's trench rations consist of all the bully beef he can eat, biscuits, cheese, tinned butter (sometimes 17 men to a tin), jam or marmalade, and occasionally fresh bread (ten to a loaf). When it is possible he gets tea and stew.

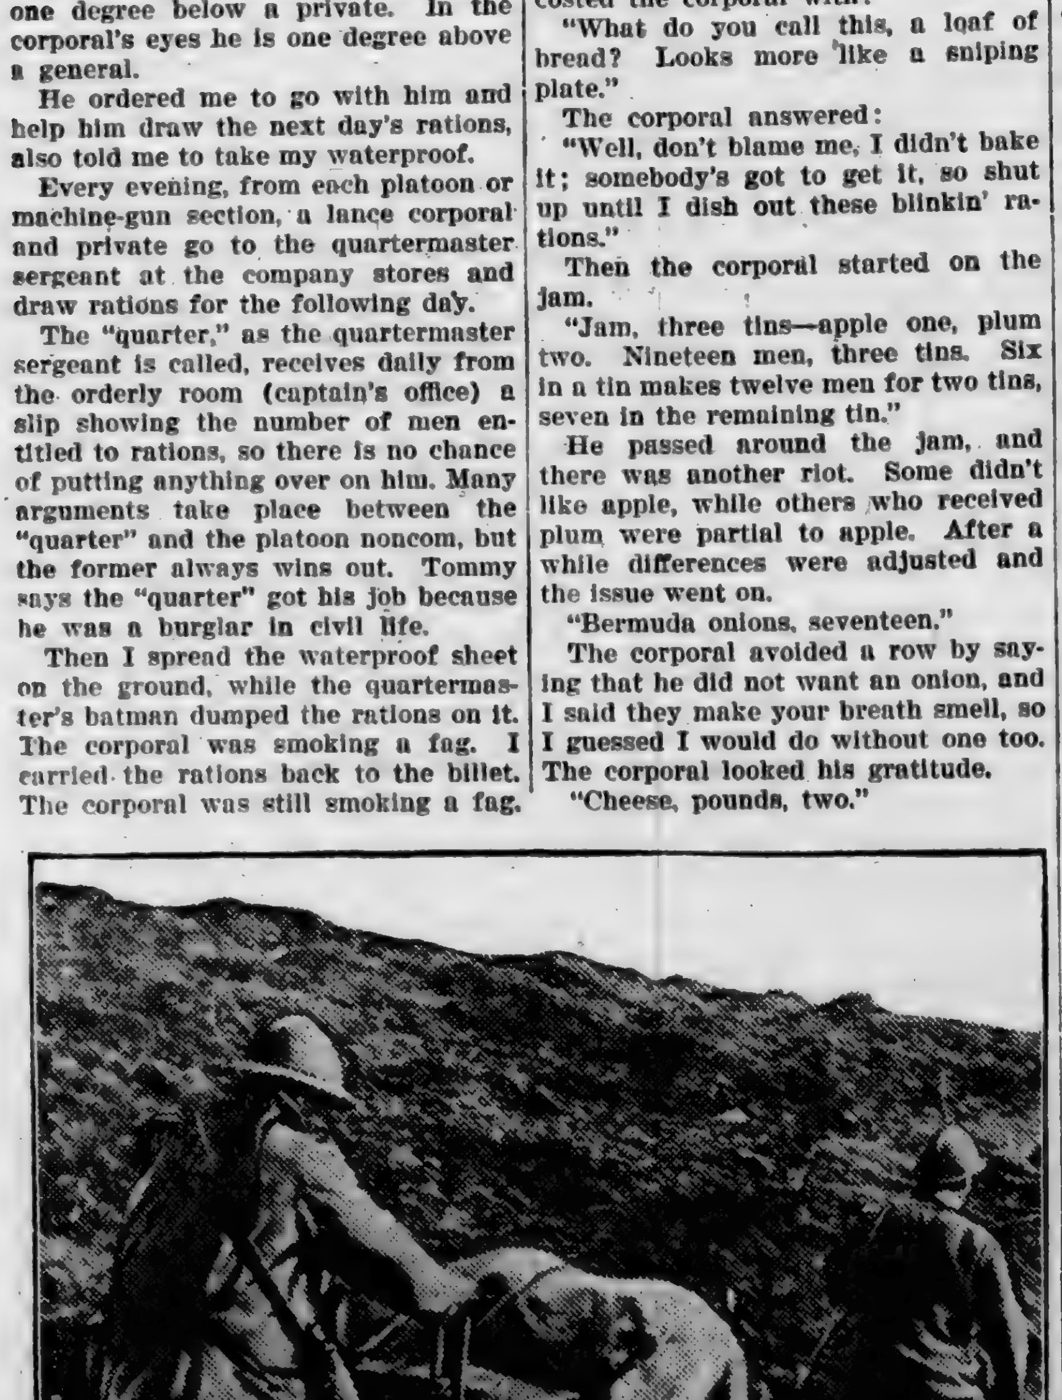
When things are quiet, and Fritz is behaving like a gentleman, which seldom happens, Tommy has the opportunity of making dessert. This is "trench pudding." It is made from broken biscuits, condensed milk, jam—a little water added, slightly flavored with mud—put into a canteen and cooked over a little spirit stove known as "Tommy's cooker."

(A firm in Blighty widely advertises these cookers as a necessity for the men in the trenches. Gullible people buy them—ship them to the Tommies, who, immediately upon receipt of same throw them over the parapet. Sometimes a Tommy falls for the ad, and uses the cooker in a dugout to the disgust and discomfort of the other occupants.)

This mess is stirred up in a tin and allowed to simmer over the flames from the cooker until Tommy decides that it has reached sufficient (gluelike) consistency. He takes his bayonet and by means of the handle carries the mess up in the front trench to cool. After it has cooled off he tries to eat it. Generally one or two Tommies in a section have cast-iron stomachs and the tin is soon emptied. Once I tasted trench pudding, but only once.

In addition to the regular ration issue Tommy uses another channel to enlarge his menu.

In the English papers a "Lonely Soldier" column is run. This is for the soldiers at the front who are supposed to be without friends or relatives. They write to the papers and their names are published. Girls and women in England answer them, and send out parcels of foodstuffs, cigarettes, candy, etc. I have known a "lonely" soldier to receive as many as five parcels and eleven letters in one week.



Taking Provisions to the Front.

Empey realizes for the first time how death lurks in the trenches when a comrade falls by his side. He tells about it in the next installment.

Our Part in Feeding the Nation

(Special Information Service, United States Department of Agriculture.)

ENGLAND FINDS WOMEN NEED TRAINING FOR FARMS

On Practice Farms, Sometimes Conducted at Agricultural Colleges, English Women Learn to Do Light Farm Work.

ENGLAND TO USE WOMEN ON FARMS

Attempt, Not Only to Maintain Agricultural Production, but to Increase It.

PLAN TO OBTAIN VOLUNTEERS

Must Pass Examination as to Ability to Endure Work—Labor Usually Undertaken Has Been Connected With Live Stock.

Great Britain has attempted, on account of the submarine warfare, not only to maintain her agricultural production but to increase it. To do this an active campaign was undertaken to place women on the land. This work is carried on under the direct supervision of their national board of agriculture. The organization is somewhat similar to that found in our county agent organization, there being district agents, a county community with a county organizer and local agents in every county. The functions of the local organizations are: first, to secure women land workers; second, to train them; and third, to find farms for them to work on. The work of obtaining volunteers has been carried on by means of posters, personal visits, meetings, competitions, and so on.

As soon as a woman indicates her desire to take up work on the land, she must submit to a physical examination in order that the committee may be sure that she is physically fit to endure the strain of farm work. She is also examined as to her personality, in order to determine whether she can get on with farm conditions.

Types of Practice Farms.

After she has been accepted, she is sent to one of the practice farms. These farms are of various types. In some instances they are agricultural colleges that have been turned over to the training women. In other instances, the women are gathered together in a home and sent out to the neighboring farms to be trained by experienced farm workers. In still other instances successful farmers have turned their farms over to the county organizations to be used in training women, the women living on the farm and participating in all operations. During the training period the workers are without any expense as far as their living is concerned, and are furnished with a complete outfit, consisting of boots, clogs, leggings, breeches, hat, and two pairs of overalls.

Work Undertaken.

The most usual types of agricultural labor undertaken by the workers have been those connected with live stock and intensive farming, such as growing mangel, raising calves, milking, care of live stock, etc. The period of training generally lasted four weeks. If, at the end of this time, the students showed sufficient skill, they were listed and efforts were made to place them on farms. However, before any of the women land workers were allowed to undertake farm work, the farm was inspected and suitable quarters were found for the workers. Their experience seems to show that it is impracticable to send the women out to work as individuals, but that they must be kept together. As a result of this situation, usually one member of the group becomes matron of the party and general chaperon. Another, more skilled than the rest, becomes group leader or forewoman. Although many of the workers were from the well-to-do classes, they were compelled to accept the prevailing wage in the community and were required to do as much as the regular agricultural workers for the same pay.

In order to increase the demand for women workers, and to add interest in this kind of work, competitions have been held throughout the country. The competitors were judged upon their ability to milk, kill and dress poultry, harness horses, hoe root-crops, drive a harrow, spread manure, trim a hedge, and drive a cart. Thus it is found that our English-speaking allies have increased their production under actual war conditions.

VALUABLE EXPERIENCE.

England's experience in training more than 300,000 women to help make up the deficiency in man power on her farms will be valuable to workers in this country should it become necessary under labor stringencies in certain sections to enlist women farm workers. At this time it is not apparent to officials of the United States department of agriculture that the farm labor needs will require the services of women in other than the lighter tasks to which they already are accustomed. But in order that food production plans for this year shall not fall down, the department has advised its field representatives to be prepared to encourage women to perform farm labor if the situation demands it.

Towns Can Help Farmers.

There is an opportunity now for urban people sympathetically and constructively to study the farm-labor situation and to render assistance, said David F. Houston, secretary of agriculture, in a recent statement. In many towns and cities there are men who have had farming experience, who are able-bodied and who doubtless would be willing to serve the nation in the field of agriculture at this time. Especially for the seasonal strains of planting, cultivating and harvesting, it will not be too much to ask such men to aid the farmers in the necessary undertaking of maintaining and, if possible, supplementing, the food supply in order to feed the armies and to sustain the civilian population behind them.

If it appears that the farmers of a community or region are not able to secure the necessary labor by the usual methods, then the leaders in the town or city immediately dependent upon that region should organize, establish touch with representative farm leaders, and see if they cannot assist in solving the problem. The department of agriculture and labor will render every possible aid, but each community knows its own problems, and urban people, especially business men, could co-operate effectively with the farmers and also render much assistance.

Men and Boys First!

The farmers will need human help to handle and harvest the vast acreages needed to produce enough bread for the nation and the allies. This work calls for brawn, muscle, physical endurance. Time to think of women at heavy work in the fields when there are no American men and boys to be spared from store, office or factory.

No business save fighting and providing the things fighters must have to win battles is more important than producing enough food. Give your attention to food production on some farm. Help your employees to get out to the farms at harvest and other critical seasons.

Work Women Can Do.

Women and girls who wish to help the farms produce more food can be of immediate service in the lighter farm tasks such as fruit and berry picking, sorting and packing. They can help over-busy farm women in their household tasks, especially in preparing the large amount of food needed for harvesting crews.

Indirectly they can help the farmers with their heavy work by taking the place of their men folks who perform lighter tasks in office, store, or factory, thereby relieving these men at critical times to go out to the farms and help with the heavy work unsuited to women's physical strength.

GOVERNMENT BULLETINS

It costs you nothing to get government bulletins from the department of agriculture at Washington, giving results of experiments made by poultry experts. These bulletins contain information on all phases of poultry raising, from proper building facilities to the brooding of early hatched chicks.

TABLE TALK AT ITS BEST

Excellent Recommendations From Those Who Were Recognized as Highly Proficient in the Art.

"Table talk," says Leigh Hunt, "to be perfect should be sincere without bigotry, differing with discord, sometimes grave, always agreeable, touching on deep points, dwelling most on seasonable ones, and letting everybody speak and be heard." There is a story of a Frenchman at one of Rogers' breakfasts who listened to Macaulay's endless eloquence, and, seeing another talker waiting his chance, fastened his eyes on Macaulay and muttered, "S'il tousse, il est perdu."—In regard to the part of anecdotes in table talk, I quote two opinions. "He who has stored his memory with slight anecdotes, private incidents and personal peculiarities," according to Doctor Johnson, "seldom fails to find his audience favorable." "Of all the bores," exclaimed De Quincey, "whom man in his folly hesitates to hang, and heaven in its mysterious wisdom suffers to propagate his species, the most insufferable is the teller of good stories."—Exchange.

"How far in?"

To win the war it is unavoidable that the rights of the individual be infringed. It is unavoidable that his personal comfort be temporarily ignored, his personal property temporarily conscripted, his personal fortunes temporarily impaired.

We Must Make Haste
We Must Strike Hard

There is no time to weigh too carefully the questions of individual equity. The big job, the one job, is to win the war. There will be plenty of time to talk about it and adjust grievances afterward.

Helping the Meat and Milk Supply

(Special Information Service, United States Department of Agriculture.)

CONVERT NATION TO CHEESE. WOMEN'S TASK

Women Food Specialists in Washington Entertaining Officials of the United States Department of Agriculture and the Food Administration at a Cottage Cheese Luncheon.

COTTAGE CHEESE AS STAPLE FOOD

Thirty Billion Pounds of Skim Milk Available for Making Substitute for Meat.

IMPROVED WAYS OF SERVING

Federal and State Agencies Organized to Convince American Housewives of Great Value—How to Make Some of New Dishes.

Almost 30,000,000,000 pounds of skim milk are available for making cottage cheese. Skim milk made into cheese is seven times more valuable as a food than as a feed for live stock. A pound of cottage cheese used in the home releases a pound of meat for shipment to our soldiers.

These were the actuating principles behind the organization of a cottage cheese demonstration corps of the dairy division, United States department of agriculture, which recently undertook a nation-wide drive to make cottage cheese a staple food throughout the land. Forty-seven women specialists from almost as many states make up the corps that will carry the message.

These women have been in training in Washington for several weeks learning how to make cottage cheese and how to serve it in the newest and most attractive dishes. In the accompanying picture they are shown demonstrating their new creations in a cottage cheese luncheon to officials of the department of agriculture. The luncheon was held in one of the rooms of the dairy division. Among the guests were Assistant Secretaries Carl Vrooman, Raymond A. Pearson and Clarence Ousley, Dean H. L. Russell of the food administration, chiefs of several bureaus and a score of the department's food and demonstrating experts. Here is what the guests ate:

COTTAGE CHEESE LUNCHEON.

First Course—Astonishment.
Cream of Cottage Cheese Soup
Croutons.

Second Course—Interest.
Cottage Cheese Sausages—Creamed Potatoes
Mustard Pickles
Graham Muffins—Coffee
Whey Honey.

Third Course—Admiration.
Cottage Cheese Salad
Wafers
Whey Punch.

Fourth Course—Devotion.
Cottage Cheese Tart
Mints.

Five women demonstrators started the campaign in Cleveland, O., a few days later. The others will go to other big cities, small towns and rural communities. Women will be taught how to make cottage cheese, its food value and how to use it. Regular home demonstrators and county agents of the states' relation service will help the cottage cheese force and experts from the bureau of markets will encourage and assist food dealers to make cottage cheese one of their regular staples. Representatives of the state extension forces also will help. Meanwhile the commercial dairying experts of the department are working with the big creameries to turn their skim milk into this product to meet the big demand certain to develop.

Cottage Cheese Sausage.

1 cupful cottage cheese
1 cupful dry bread crumbs, or ½ cupful cold cooked rice and ½ cupful bread crumbs
¼ cupful peanut butter
¼ cupful chopped peanut meats
½ teaspoonful powdered sage
½ teaspoonful thyme
1 teaspoonful salt
¼ teaspoonful pepper
¼ teaspoonful soda or more
1 tablespoonful of chopped onion

Mix all dry ingredients thoroughly with bread crumbs. Blend peanut butter and onion with the cheese, and mix them with the bread crumbs, form into flat cakes, dust with bread crumbs or cornmeal, and fry a delicate brown in a little fat in a hot frying pan.

Cottage Cheese Tart.

1 1-3 cupfuls of cottage cheese
Whites of 2 egg beaten stiff
1-3 cupful of heavy cream, whipped
1-3 cupful sugar
2 teaspoonfuls lemon juice
Few gratings of lemon rind
2 to 3 tablespoonfuls sweet milk

Soften the cheese with the milk. Add part of the whipped cream, and the flavoring, which should be very delicate. Fold in last the beaten egg whites. Heap lightly into ready cooked, delicately browned pastry cases, made by baking pie crust in muffin tins or on the bottom of inverted pie tins. Garnish the top of the tart with the rest of the whipped cream, and with fresh or canned fruit if desired. This makes a large one-crust pie or tart.

Conservation Crust.

¾ cupful cornmeal, cornflour or other substitute
¾ cupful of wheat flour
1 teaspoonful salt
¾ teaspoonful baking powder
3 tablespoonfuls of shortening
Cold water to mix (About ½ cupful)

Sift together the dry ingredients, cut in the shortening, blending it thoroughly with the dry materials. Mix with very cold water to a rather stiff dough. Roll as thin as can be handled. Line two pie tins and use the trimmings to cross-bar the tops if desired. This crust may be baked before the pie, if the nature of the filling makes it desirable.

Cottage Cheese Salad.

Cottage cheese lends itself especially well to salads. If enough is used, the salad may serve as the main dish of the meal. French, mayonnaise and boiled dressing all go well with cheese salad.

Cottage Cheese and Peanut Butter Soup.

3 cupfuls milk
2 tablespoonfuls of flour
3 tablespoonfuls peanut butter
Few drops of onion juice
Bit of bay leaf and ground sage
1 tablespoonful butter
1 cupful of cottage cheese
¼ teaspoonful soda or more
Cayenne pepper
1 teaspoonful salt

Heat the milk with the bay leaf, salt, pepper and onion juice in a double boiler. Soften the butter and blend with it the flour. Pour hot milk gradually on this paste and beat until smooth. Bring to a boil and cook over hot water for ten minutes, then cool slightly. Blend cottage cheese, soda and peanut butter, softening with a little of the warm sauce to a smooth thick cream. Add the cream to the sauce and reheat carefully. Avoid boiling the sauce, for this will toughen the cheese. Serve with croutons.

American Wealth and Gay Clothes

New York.—Paris has sent her clothes over here. We have viewed them. They have been acceptable in large measure and approved of in full measure. And yet observes a prominent fashion writer, we don't understand why they should be as they are. They are a somersault from what has been. Paris has preached demureness, economy, simplicity and modesty. Her cloths have been symbolic of the tidal wave of depression that swept over her spirit since 1914.

The Reason for the Change.

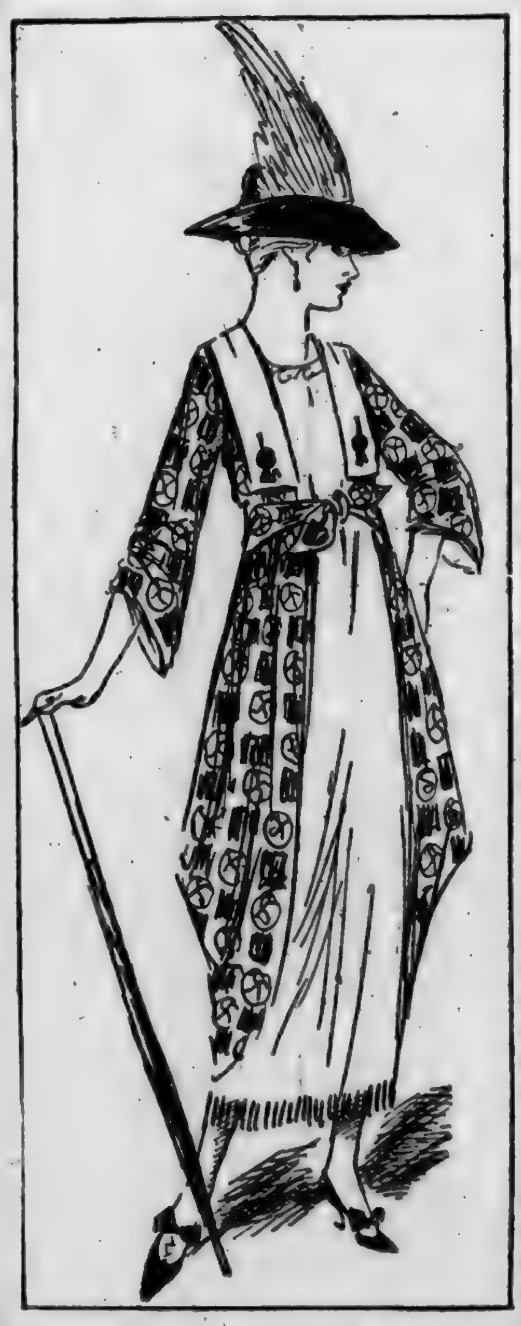
Do you realize why Paris has sent us over such brilliant, alluring, rich clothes? It is because American money has burst upon her with such force that she has gone up in a balloon, figuratively speaking.

France settled herself down for demure clothes on the day of the war and has kept to this contract with herself, compelling the rest of the world to dress likewise; but in the autumn of 1917 there burst upon her astonished vision the vanguard of America. They were not commercial buyers; they were not cosmopolitan multi-millionaires who aped the French woman. They were the true representatives of a country whose vastness and resources France had only guessed at. Boys in blue flannel sailor suits had bank accounts of ten thousand dollars each; women in Red Cross uniforms could afford five hundred dollars per gown, if they wished; privates in khaki paid their bills without looking at their change; canteen workers hid under their collars strings of pearls worth fifty thousand dollars. All these Americans laughed and went to the theater and ordered expensive dinners and joked with the midinettes.

The confusing part about this situation is that America is getting into the spirit of economy and somberness that Paris had a year ago. Our reformers preach standardization, uniformity in clothes; our economists preach conservation; our emotionalists beg us to go about in black without smiles and turning our heads from the wiles of pleasure, as though we were early Puritans.

Chemise Robe.

Among the new evening gowns from France this spring the twelfth century tunic is as frequently seen as in the street gowns, but the effect of the two is strongly differentiated. For the evening the designers use a narrow, slim, primitive slip of satin or metallic cloth the latter preferred. Over this slip drops a much wider, more voluminous, transparent robe. It is cut like a chemise; it has a half low decolletage; the sleeves usually cover the entire arm, but are cut to fall half a foot away from it, and the entire effect is one of exquisite veiling.



Tunic of black and white figured foulard over a narrow slip of white crepe de chine. The short, narrow skirt is finished at the hem with black fringe. Note unusual collar.

Doucet does this in the most brilliant manner, and he shows his competitors something in the way of an underslip, making a corslet and then a short skirt of soft gold tissue, which gives a far more graceful, undulating movement of the body when it is seen beneath the transparent chemise.

There are chemise gowns of rare lace, seldom in white, but in ivory tints and also in cloudy gray. These are dropped over a slim underslip of tissue, silver and steel as well as gold, and the note of color is given by an extraordinary sash. It may be of Chinese blue taffeta, of splendid Chinese brocade, of deep gold and black brocaded ribbon, and one end of it always trails down the back panel and adds to the brilliancy of the short train.

We have demure capes made of gaberdine and serge which are as serviceable as those worn by the Italian police, and those who care for the quietness of distinguished clothes can put one of these over a slightly worn and much-used frock, thereby enclosing an old friend in a new frame and presenting a brave front to a world that is not too critical in these war days.

But Paris does not stop at these demure capes. Her ecstatic mood shows itself in capricious and exquisite garments called capes, which are fashioned for afternoon and evening wear. They are made in Chinese colors, in Slavic tones, of satin and chiffon and metal embroidery. Sometimes they are maroon colored faille lined with light blue taffeta and worn over a gray gown of crepe de chine or satin and chiffon.

What the Prophets Whisper.

There is no disputing the fact that French women have yielded to the American desire to wear short skirts on the street, and the skirts in these new clothes are both narrow and short. The women who appeared on the street in them without leggings or high shoes have created unpleasant criticism, which should compel them to change their style.

The smart women run a legging or a high cloth-top boot well up under the hem of these short skirts, and the effect is military and pleasing. But at the very moment that we are accepting with enthusiasm this continued style of short and narrow garments, the prophets say that the real French skirts are growing longer. And the smart American designers say the same. They are making the garments slim, without using an inch of surplus material, but they are dropping them to the ankles, omitting the leggings and the high boots, and coming back to the flat-heeled pumps with broad ribbon bows across the vamp.

Three or four of the best houses in New York emphasize these skirts, and those who are tired of the brevity of the skirts we have worn for years are accepting this new type of garment with more than the usual enthusiasm. If it had fullness it would be impossible for street usage, but its narrowness and the slight bias line at the sides, that comes from the material being pulled backward and upward, make it a pleasing picture on the street and an artistic contrast to the prevailing garment.

Miles of Tulle.

Even when France starts out to be demure she changes her mind and gets a little fling of gayety into the most somber gown. For example, she makes a black satin restaurant frock in the style of the eleventh century, with the long chemise, the slight girdling about the hips and the half-low-decolletage. Well and good. But she is weary of the black surface by the time she gets to the armholes and the neckline, so she swings in a pair of floating Chinese sleeves of jade green tulle edged with jet, and she winds a narrow scarf of tulle once around the neck, pulls its fullness once over the chin and weights its ends with jet tassels. When green isn't used, king's blue or wine color is chosen.

Every French designer used what she could of colored tulle. There must have been a competition over there as to who could reduce the amount of tulle in France most quickly.

One designer took it into her head to omit white collars and use as a substitute tulle wrapped about the neck and tied in a bow. This fashion is already considered quite smart over here. In restaurants, for luncheons and for any affair where the hat is retained the tulle which covers it forms this collar, and sometimes drops in long ends from the nape of the neck to the knees.

Temperance Notes

THE PROHIBITION SITUATION AT THE BEGINNING OF 1918.

A survey of the wet and dry situation throughout the country, taken by the board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Methodist church, shows that on January 1 there were 2,374 dry counties and 615 wet counties. This is a dry gain for the year 1917 of 88 counties.

The year 1917 gave the drys statewide victory in New Hampshire, Utah and Indiana by legislative action and in New Mexico by vote of the people. Iowa failed by a very small majority to make its prohibition constitutional. Ohio reduced its wet majority almost to the vanishing point. New Jersey elected a local option legislature and Kentucky elected one pledged to submission of state prohibition and ratification of the national amendment. New York added 105 towns to its dry list and Illinois closed saloons in the state capital.

The United States Supreme court upheld the Webb-Kenyon anti-shipping law and sustained the rigid Idaho bone-dry law.

Congress voted the District of Columbia dry, passed the Reed bone-dry law, shutting liquors out of all prohibition states; enacted a law prohibiting the sending of advertising of liquors through the mails into states where it is forbidden; enacted prohibition for Alaska in response to the action of the people at the polls; made Porto Rico prohibition territory; forbade the sale of liquor to soldiers and sailors; prohibited the manufacture and importation of distilled liquors during the war; gave the president power to stop brewing to save grain; and submitted an amendment to the Constitution for national prohibition.

HOW TO ENFORCE THE LAW.

"They tell me that the prohibitory law is not enforced," says William Jennings Bryan. "My answer is, elect men who will enforce it! Don't you know that the first thing that the liquor interests do is to name men who will not enforce the law? The man who accepts the nomination from the men interested in liquor must take an oath in advance that he will violate the oath that the Constitution requires him to take. That is the condition upon which they give their support!

"But I have another answer. If you tell me that we will have blind tigers if we don't have saloons, I answer that if a tiger were after my boy, the blinder the tiger, the safer my boy would be! If the tiger is blind, my boy must hunt him up; if the tiger can see, he can hunt my boy up. If we close the saloons and they still sell liquor, they do it in the byways and in the alleys, and those who sell are criminals; and those who deal with them do it with shame upon the face.

"If we close the saloons and then elect men who will enforce the law we are not to blame if, in spite of all we can do there may be some selling without a license. We are no more responsible after we have done all we can than we are for the work of a burglar who enters a house in spite of the fact that we have a law against burglary."

HOW THE SALOON PAYS ITS LICENSE MONEY.

Some one may claim that the saloon helps to pay his taxes. This is a great error. Can you squeeze water out of a sponge? If you think you can, go down to the drug store and buy one. I will squeeze it. How much water do I get?

The only way you can get water out of a sponge is to bring the water in a basin, drop in the sponge and let it absorb it. Then you can squeeze some of the water back.

If you want to get money out of a saloon, the only way is to put the saloon down in the community and for every $28,000 it takes from the pockets of the people you can squeeze one thousand of it back in the form of city license. The saloon must pick the pockets of the poor—to pour a thin golden stream of revenue.—Exchange.

NATIONWIDE PROHIBITION LOGICAL.

War efficiency and the liquor traffic have been treated in all belligerent countries as irreconcilable enemies. Every military administrator recognizes this. Congress recognized it when it inserted in the selective conscription law provision forbidding the sale of alcoholic liquors to soldiers and sailors. And when congress went that far it admitted the logic of attempting to check or abolish the use of intoxicating liquors in every other field of war effort—in the industrial sphere as well as in the fighting zones and the training camps.—New York Tribune.

FOLLOWS THE USE OF BEER.

During the Spanish-American war a group of physicians of this country signed this statement:

"It is not only in the state of drunkenness that men step into danger of incurring venereal diseases, but in the state of exhilaration and weakened self-control which follows the use of a comparatively small amount of alcoholic liquors. This impairment of self-control not only follows the use of the stronger liquors, but may also follow the use of beer."

HOW TO AVOID BACKACHE AND NERVOUSNESS

Told by Mrs. Lynch From Own Experience.

Providence, R. I.—"I was all run down in health, was nervous, had headaches, my back ached all the time. I was tired and had no ambition for anything. I had taken a number of medicines which did me no good. One day I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for women, so I tried it. My nervousness and backache and headaches disappeared. I gained in weight and feel fine, so I can honestly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman who is suffering as I was."—Mrs. ADELINE B. LYNCH, 100 Plain St., Providence, R. I.

Backache and nervousness are symptoms or nature's warnings, which indicate a functional disturbance or an unhealthy condition which often develops into a more serious ailment.

Women in this condition should not continue to drag along without help, but profit by Mrs. Lynch's experience, and try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and for special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Med. Co., Lynn, Mass.

OUR DEFENSE

In the spring we may be attacked at any moment. Toxic poisons pile up within us after a hard winter, and we feel "run-down," tired out, blue and discouraged. This is the time to put our house in order—cleanse the system and put fresh blood into our arteries. You can obtain an alterative extract from Blood root, Golden Seal, Stone and Queen's root, Cherry bark, rolled into a sugar-coated tablet and sold by most druggists, in sixty cent vials, as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This blood tonic, in tablet or liquid form, is just what you need for "Spring Fever," for that lack of ambition. It will fill you full of vim, vigor and vitality.

Chilliness, when other people feel warm enough, is a sign of biliousness, or of malarial poisons—so is a furred or coated tongue, loss of appetite, headaches or giddiness, and a dull, drowsy, debilitated feeling. It's your liver that's at fault. You want to stimulate it and invigorate it with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. With every trouble of the kind, these tiny little things act like a miracle. You can break up sudden attacks of Colds, Fevers, and Inflammations, with them. They'll give you permanent benefit for Indigestion, Constipation, Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, and Dizziness. They are small and pleasant to take, and the most thoroughly natural remedy. Twenty-five cents at most drug stores.

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than May 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR APRIL 28

JESUS REBUKES SELFISHNESS.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 9:30-50.

GOLDEN TEXT—If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.—Mark 9:35.

DEVOTIONAL READING—I Corinthians 13.

PRIMARY AND JUNIOR LESSON MATERIAL—Mark 9:30-37.

PRIMARY MEMORY VERSE—Be kind one to another.—Ephesians 4:32.

JUNIOR MEMORY VERSE—I John 4: 21.

I. The Stupidity of Selfishness. (vv. 30-32). Jesus with his disciples is on his way to Capernaum for the last time. He is soon to leave for Jerusalem, where he is to die on the cruel cross for the world's sins. He still seeks the way of retirement in order to be alone with his disciples, his object being to lead them into the apprehension of the meaning of the cross. The teaching which was interrupted at Caeserea by Peter's rebuke is now resumed, and with definiteness he declares the future event as already present.

1. "The Son of Man is delivered into the hands of men."

2. "They shall kill him."

3. "He shall rise the third day."

While pressing upon them continuously the fact and necessity of the cross, he never failed to show them the bright side—his triumphant victory over death in the resurrection. The hearts of the disciples were so steeped in selfishness that they failed to understand his teachings. If the disciples had more definitely attended to his teaching concerning the cross, they would have been better prepared for the hour of temptation which was so soon to overtake them.

II. The Wrangling of Selfishness. (vv. 33-37).

1. The searching question (v. 33).

The omniscient Christ knew the secrets of their hearts. The fact that the disciples were wrangling about official position while the Lord was facing humiliation and death for them and the whole world, shows how completely the Lord was alone in his sorrow.

2. The silent disciples (v. 34).

They were ashamed in his presence, because the selfishness of their hearts was revealed. To realize the presence of the Lord would shame us of much of our selfishness.

3. The stinging rebuke (vv. 35-37).

"If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all." The greatest among men are those who are willing to take the lowest place and serve others. This truth he enforced in a concrete way by placing a child in their midst. This child was an illustration of dependence and ignorance. By example and word he shows that true greatness is expressed by willingness to aid the weak, to instruct the ignorant and to serve those in need. All such render service not merely to those in need, but unto Christ and God. True greatness, therefore, consists not in selfseeking, but rendering cheerful service to the needy in the name of Christ.

III. The Intolerance of Selfishness (vv. 38-41).

1. John's guilty conscience (v. 38).

In the light of the teaching of Jesus, John was a little disturbed over having "forbid" a worker for Christ who did not follow after him. Doubtless this intolerance was in part due to jealousy for Christ, but also a selfish ambition. Many times Christians mistake bigotry for zeal for Christ.

2. Whom to tolerate (vv. 39-41).

(1) Those who are casting out devils (v. 39). We should really satisfy ourselves that supernatural works are being done. Are demons being cast out? However, this is not final, as there is a supernatural work not of God.

(2) Those who are not doing this work in Christ's name (v. 41). Any worker going forth in the name of Christ, and for the glory of Christ, should be given Godspeed. If he is doing a good work, even though not in your way, or if not a member of your church or school, "Forbid him not."

IV. The Awful Issue of Selfishness. (vv. 42-50).

Selfishness results in ruin to others (v. 42), and also to the individual (vv. 43, 45 and 47). In either case the issue is eternal torment in hell. Selfishness is opposed to God, and that which is opposed to God must be eternally separated from him. Self-renunciation should be so complete that we should be willing to abandon the most necessary and lawful things in life—hands, feet and eyes—when they become occasions for stumbling either to ourselves or to others.

Need of Influence.

"Every one of us needs influence and some impulse outside of ourselves to compel us to strive for our ideals. The best impulse that can uplift the life is the friendship of Jesus. He says: 'Ye are as friends if ye do whatsoever I command you.'"

God's Presence.

Did it ever occur to you that the signs of God's presence are granted to the farmer more than any other man? Look around your home and fields and see.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

SPRING BLOSSOMS.

"How do you feel?" asked the first apple blossom of a pear blossom on one of the other trees in the orchard.

"Splendidly," said the pear blossom. "How about yourself?"

"Never better," said the apple blossom. Now when the other pear blossoms and apple blossoms heard these two talking they all wanted to see what was going on.

And before long they were all out talking and chatting while some of them were having games with the Breeze Brothers who blew them to the ground and made it look as if the snow had come again.

"Did your trees have a secret to whisper to you?" asked the first apple blossom.

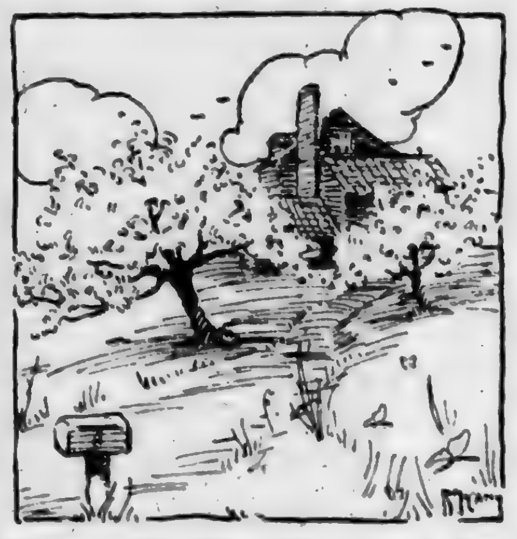
"Yes," answered the first pear blossom. "I was just about to ask you the same question."

"It's this way with us," said the first apple blossom. "You see the farmhouse is very shabby. It's been needing a coat of paint for so many years. And the people who live inside are so poor they can't afford anything they don't actually need.

"They don't have to have the paint. But they feel badly that they cannot afford to have their house painted for it would look so much brighter and prettier.

"Well, it's been this same way for so many, many years as I said before. And they have bad luck with the potatoes and the corn every year. Something always happens. Bugs eat up the potatoes and a storm is likely to come and hurt the corn just when it would be growing quite perfect.

"All these things my trees whispered to me and to all my sisters and brothers. The trees said, 'Little blossoms, you are very soon to come out and look at the world. You are to appear within a short time because the spring is here, and you are the spring blossoms. People love the spring because the blossoms are so beautiful and because the birds sing.



Make Their Dingy Home Look Like Fairyland.

"'But of all the glorious sights in the world there is none quite so perfect as an orchard filled with gorgeous blossoms.

"'Now in this farm-house the people are very poor. They cannot even afford to have their house painted. And so you must try to make up for it during this one season of the year. You must be just as beautiful as you can be, so that people will forget the house needs painting as they drive by, and will think the place is very lovely with all the wonderful trees so full of spring blossoms.

"'When the fall comes and the late summer you will give excellent fruit—for you never disappoint the people who live in the farm-house. They always say that they can depend on their orchard. Nothing, they say, ever happens to it.

"'And so pear trees, apple trees and even cherry trees, listen while I whisper to you.' And we heard the wind, at this time, carrying the secrets of every tree to the spring buds.

"'All of you be beautiful so for one season in the year the people in the farm-house will think they have the loveliest of homes. Make their dingy home look like a fairyland.'

"Yes," continued the first apple blossom, "I knew you must have been told the same secrets, because just at the end we heard the same whispering of every tree."

"We heard the same story," said the first pear blossom.

"And so did we," said the first cherry blossom.

Now some of the blossoms were out ahead of the others but they all looked their best, and indeed the orchard, which was in front of the shabby house, looked just like fairyland.

And how happy the first apple blossom and the first pear blossom were when they heard some people driving by say, "How wonderful it must be to live there and to see that orchard all through the spring! And more than that, the fragrance is quite the most perfect in the world."

And once again the blossoms gave joy to the people in the dingy farmhouse, who every year had the most beautiful place the country around, owing to the spring and their fine orchards.

Weariness, sleeplessness, nervousness, despondency, backache, stomach trouble, headache, pain in loins, and lower abdomen, gall-stones, gravel, difficulty when urinating, cloudy and bloody urine, rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, all warn you to look after your kidneys and bladder. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules are what you need.

They are not a "patent medicine" nor a "new discovery." For 200 years they have been a standard household remedy. They are the pure, original imported Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used, and are perfectly harmless. The healing, soothing oil soaks into the cells and lining of the kidneys and through the bladder, driving out the poisonous germs. New life, fresh strength and health will come as you continue this treatment. When completely restored to your usual vigor, continue taking a capsule or two each day. Why Buy Liberty Bonds?

By DARWIN P. KINGSLEY,
President, New York Life Insurance Co.

Why do you plan to give your children a good education? Will you get any money-dividends from that?

Why do you pay fire insurance premiums and life insurance premiums? You personally will get little if anything from that.

Why do you call the doctor quickly if the children are ailing? You don't stop to think whether you can afford it. Do you?

None of these expenditures are what we call good investments. They don't pay in money, yet all pay the finest of dividends.

Liberty Bonds represent the home, the school, the children; they represent all the great deeds of our fathers and grandfathers; they represent Bunker Hill and Yorktown and Gettysburg; they represent the blessed freedom under which we all live and they also represent the ORDER that makes freedom blessed.

They represent the boys "over there;" they represent devastated Belgium and homeless Serbia and murdered Armenia;

They are the defense that shall keep from our shores the monster criminals who outraged the women of Belgium and Northern France and made the men slaves;

They represent the strength that shall restore Belgium and rebuild France and avenge Serbia;

They are the voice of those who are too young or too old or too weak to fight; they are the sword of the women and the cannon of the children; they are the voice of a free people calling to cruelly wronged, freedom-loving men and bringing them succor.

Buy them? Of course you will buy them. You'll borrow to buy them.

You don't need to be urged. You would be ashamed to go home to your children if you did not buy them.

The rate of interest is important but not of first importance. They would pay, they would appeal to you, if they bore no interest whatever.

Add to the rate of interest the dividends they pay in self interest, in safety, in public order, in liberty and law and you have a larger return than you receive from any other thing that you own.

They will never become "scraps of paper." They are the best secured investment in the world.

Red Cross Department

The county supervisor, Mrs. Beidler, in a letter to Mrs. H. L Dunkle, says: "The St Joe shipment of April 5 was received and everything was fine."

Concerning the layettes, the Auburn Star compliments the St. Joe branch in the following way: "Members of the St. Joe branch of the DeKalb chapter of the Red Cross come to the front with their 'big bit.' Twenty one infants' layettes were received from the branch at county headquarters here for shipment. To those not familiar with the work represented in making these layettes, an inventory of one reveals the fact that it contains two baby dresses, two pairs bootees, three cotton and wool shirts, three woolen and three muslin brassieres, one baby jacket, one cape, one hood, one knit bonnet, twelve diapers, three bands, bag of miscellaneous things, safety pins (three sizes), bar soap, wash rag, box baby powder, thimble, package needles, spool of thread and two swaddling blankets. The same number of garments is necessary to complete each one, and the expense of providing the material is no small sum. The estimated cost of each one is about $5 00, and the St. Joe workers are to be commended for their splendid work in making and providing the layettes."

To Protoct War Gardens

The local authorities have received notice from H. E Barnard, federal food administrator, stating that last summer he received many complaints from persons whose gardens had been destroyed by their neighbor's chickens. They are instructed to see that the town marshal enforce the law regarding the running at large of chickens and other live stock. This is a time when food production is necessary, and the person that carelssly or indifferently allows his chickens to run at large should be punished.

Savings Stamps

Attention is called to a serious misunderstanding about the sale of liberty bonds and war savings stamps. These two plans are distinct in purpose and should not be confused. The sale of liberty bonds furnishes the main supply of money for war purposes; and the sale of thrift stamps and war savings stamps is intended to bring "baby bonds," the best of government securities, within the reach of all, and thereby raise an additional $2,000,000,000 out of the savings of all the people during 1918. Please remember this and help the government win the war. Do not exchange war savings stamps for liberty bonds or your liberty bonds for war savings stamps.

Scholes Going South

Frank Scholes, of this place, who has been acting surveyor since his son, Clark, resigned to enter the army, has followed in the latter's footsteps and has resigned to enter the government service (indirectly, at least). He will soon enter the employ of W. H. Schott, of Chicago, who has a big government contract. He was once before chief engineer for this contractor, in 1911, 1912, 1913 and 1914.

Mr. Scholes has undertaken a big job; and he will put it across, too. It will require the services of 5,000 men for eight months. He will have charge of the construction of 1,600 buildings, 40 miles of concrete road, 40 miles of sewers, 40 miles of water system and 40 miles of heating mains. The work is near Richmond, Va. He will take along with him a number of DeKalb county men. Among them are Will H. Maxwell, of St. Joe, present deputy surveyor; John H. W. Krontz, former surveyor, of Butler; Isaac Cosper, of Auburn.

It has been reported that Mr. Scholes, owing to his Virginia engagement, will withdraw his name from the Democratic primary ticket, where he is candidate for the nomination for surveyor. This is a mistake: he is still in the race. We have this from Mr. Scholes himself.

If you consider efficiency vote for Judson.

Baccalaureate Sermon

The speaker took as his theme the formation of character, and based his remarks upon the following text: "For as he thinketh in his heart so is he" (Prov. xxiii, 7). He stated that the difference between a baccalaureate sermon and a class address is in the application—the first applies to the spiritual side of life, the second to the worldly; and, after thus laying down the premises for his discourse, delivered a sermon that every young person in the audience can profit by. The central thought was that no one's character rises above his aspirations—what "he thinketh in his heart." If he thinketh low, he will will not rise above his thoughts; if he aspires high, he will develop a high Christian character. He closed by illustrating his entire sermon by showing the influence of the Great Stone Face in moulding the character of the young man whose aspirations were stimulated by the effigy on the mountain side.

The church was filled to its utmost capacity.

Cleve H. Grube

Mr. Grube stands squarely upon his record as a member of the last legislature. He is a progressive farmer of Stafford township, and is the only farmer-candidate on either ticket for Representative. He is the candidate of the rank and file of the Democratic Party, and is not identified with any machine, clique or faction within the county. He stands for clean politics. DeKalb county has made it a practice to give her faithful representatives two terms. She owes it to Cleve H. Grube to renominate him, for he has MADE GOOD.

Do your duty next Tuesday!

This will be the last issue of The News before the primary election—this time next week, the party tickets will have been named. It is the duty of every voter to go to the polls next Tuesday and see that none but good men are nominated—that is, so far as he is able to judge. Consult the list of candidates in another column and study the qualificatione of those who are seeking office. The man who fails in this duty has no right to grumble if poor men are nominated.

Frank L. Pyle is approved by Union township citizens as a candidate for county recorder. Union township citizens are loud in their endorsement of Frank Pyle, and do not hesitate to give their united support to his candidacy. Mr. Pyle was born and reared in this county, is a farmer and always has been prominent in the affairs of the Democratic party. He has now served his township five years as trustee and it can be said to his credit that the township never had a better trustee. The people of the township know the faithfulness with which he has conducted the office. This, with the successful way in which he has conducted his business for many years and his reputation for honesty in all his dealings, makes him a strong candidate. His nomination would increase the strength of the ticket this fall. He has always been active in his party's cause; and when qualification is considered, there is perhaps no better man in the county. His experience in public affairs has taught him that courtesy is necessary to success, and that is what the voters will receive from him at all times.

The Widney Suit Settled

About five years ago, H. M. Widney purchased the David Poper farm, just east of St. Joe, the eastern boundary line being the St. Joe river. He soon discovered that at flood times the current of the stream was deflected from the regular channel over and across a field lying just south of the railroad tract; and that the deflection grew out of the fact that the abutments supporting the B & O bridge across the St Joe river had been constructed at an angle of 57 degrees with the flow of the river and not parallel therewith.

Mr. Widney sought legal counsel, but was advised that the statute of limitation was a bar to an action at law to recover damages. Later, he placed the matter in the hands of Attorney J M. Life, of Auburn, and suit was filed in the DeKalb circuit court. The case would doubtless have come to trial at the coming May term, but the railroad company made an offer of compromise some months ago; and since that time the case has been in process of adjustment. Last Wednesday, the parties had their final conference; when the railroad company paid over the sum of $2,250 to Mr. Widney for all damages—past, dresent and future—and also conveyed to him certain easements which are valuable and of great advantage to the farm.

All negotiations for Mr. Widney with the railroad company were conducted by Mr. Life, and the former is well pleased with the adjustment in every way. Messrs. Mounts and Jack represented the company.

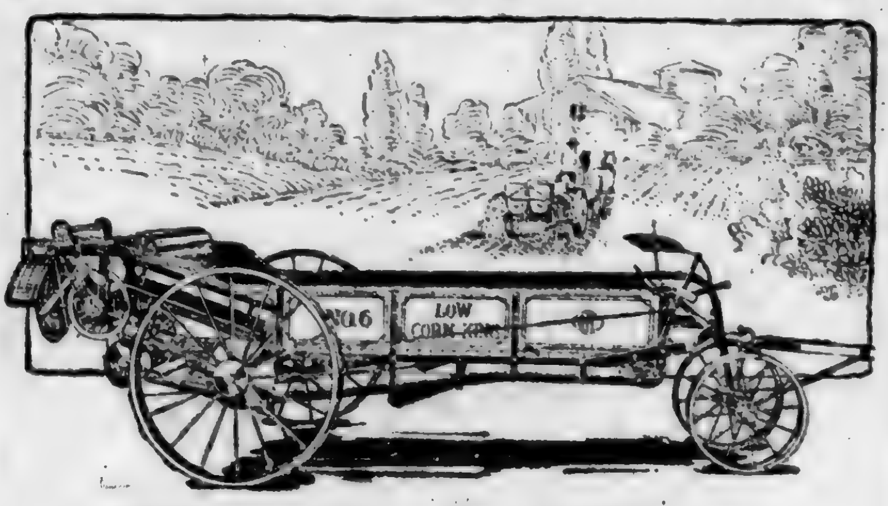
SILAS H. NUGEN

Democratic Canditate for Auditor

I am not asking for the nomination for Auditor of DeKalb County without fully understanding the responsibility that goes with it and I assure you if nominated and elected I shall endeavor to handle the affairs of the office in the best interests of the tax-payers of the County. I will be unable to see all the voters of the county but will appreciate any support you can give me. Remember my location is right—Jackson township—that hasn't filled a county office for many years. Remember the primary May 7, '18.

SILAS H. NUGEN,
Of Jackson Twp.

Vote for Maurer for Recorder, he is worthy of your confidence and will make an efficient man for the place. His No. on the ballot is 24.



The Only Way.

The one and only way to secure positive increase from every acre planted this year is to increase the fertility of the soil. The least expensive, least troublesome, and surest way to do this is to apply stable manure in a light, even top dressing with a Low Corn King manure spreader. The manure is already accumulated. The soil needs it and will respond to proper spreading. Five to eight tons to the acre does the business. No more help no more power is needed. Just buy and use a light draft.

Low Corn King Manure Spread'r

Wheels just the right distance apart; spread wide enough to top dress three rows of corn at once. Three sizes—small, medium and large. All narrow boxes. All steel frames, with working parts of spreader securely attached to the frame. Turns short. Drive from both rear wheels. Return apron driven by worm gear, which insures even spreading up hill and down. Pull comes straight on steel frame. Solid two-inch rear axel, working in roller bearings carries 75 per cent. of the load. All-steel beater can not warp, shrink or rot. Built up to International Harvester standards of quality in every respect.

Buy a Corn King spreader and use it. The increased yield from a few acres will pay for your spreader this year. Place your order now.

Are Economizing On Dressmaking

New York.—A man who likes statistics has given out a statement that more spools of thread have been sold since America went into war than ever before in its history.

This is taken to indicate that there is an important revival of home dressmaking. It is difficult to prove this condition of affairs, a prominent fashion correspondent writes, but the spools of thread are good enough evidence that the women on this continent are employing seamstresses to make new gowns for them or to alter old ones. And they are also doing their own sewing.

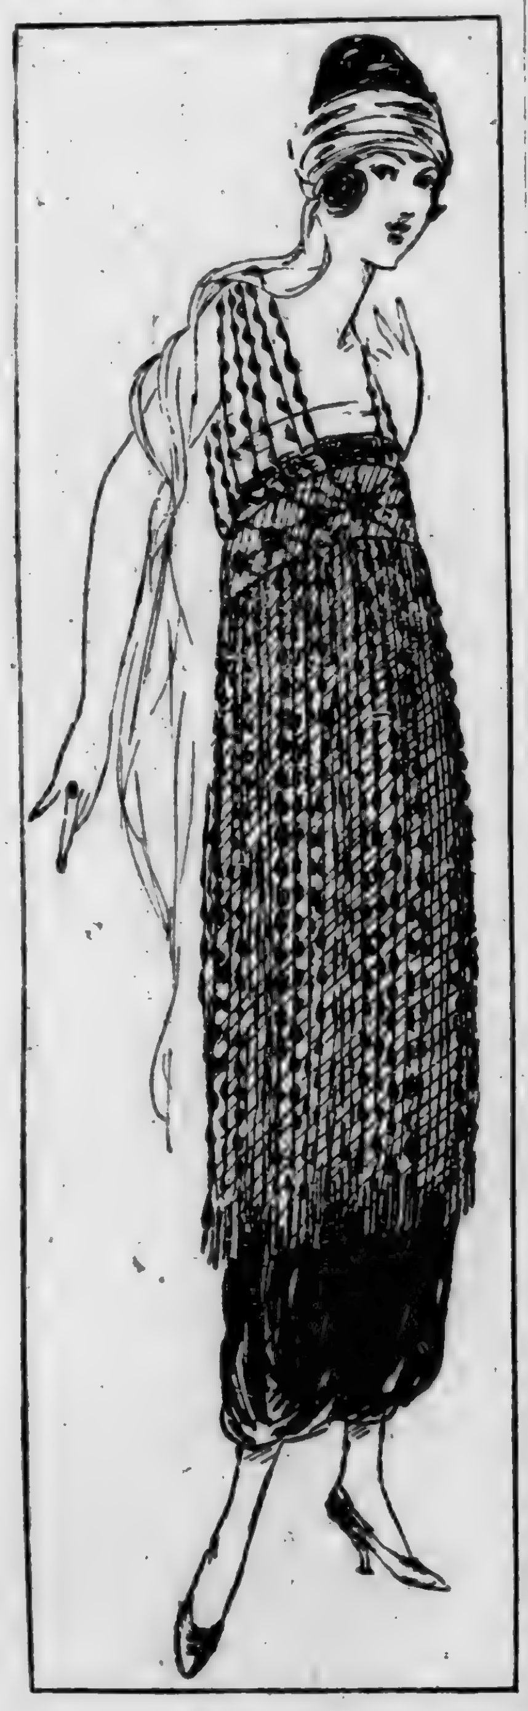
On the other hand, the shops insist that the sale of ready-to-wear garments has been immensely stimulated by the war. Women who are giving their time to war relief work are willing and anxious to get costumes with the least possible expenditure of vitality to themselves, and this can be achieved through the ready-to-wear departments.

Those who keep shops also claim that women of small means are buying better materials and paying more for their clothes than they have ever done in the history of American commerce in apparel.

Those who think out the situation say that this is due to the employment of thousands of women in new ways. Instead of these women purchasing cheap, tawdry things, they add $10 or $15 to the price of a costume and buy a gown that gives steady service.

America Has Done Her Part.

The one outstanding episode in the interesting and important movement of spring clothes, is the immense stride in designing that America has taken.



Doeuillet of Paris builds a black satin evening gown into something extraordinary by using tinkling strings of jet from shoulder to knees. The Egyptian girdle is of velvet.

All that has gone before was experimental, but this spring the clothes are good. They make no pretention of changing the silhouette as laid down by the Paris designers; the only drastic revolution in silhouette which has been attempted by this country, took place last summer, when the narrow skirt which pulled upward from the knees to the back and finished with a bustle effect at the end of the spine, was thrown into the arena of clothes. It not only won out, although it was the work of one designer, but it coincides entirely with the clothes that Paris sent over last month.

This season the two countries go hand in hand. The silhouette is the same—narrow, with floating draperies. Take that one condition as the foundation stone and then build as you please is the slogen given to every woman.

American Designs Preferred.

One is immensely proud of American clothes this spring. Our designers have had the courage to show them in connection with the French gowns, and it is easily proved that in several important houses the American woman chooses her entire spring wardrobe from American designs, rather than French ones.

One of the reasons for this is that Paris has not laid unusual stress upon the tailored costume, and the American woman had reverted to it. She wants to appear in a simple but distinguished costume when she is in the street. The American tailoring is the best in the world, and the American designer contrives to get the best effect out of tailored material, whether he is making a frock or a coat suit.

France does not care for such clothes, her women wear them only under protest, and there is always a sash, or a piece of embroidery, or an unusual addition of lingerie, or a bizarre splash of something that changes the mannish severity of the American national costume into something with coquetry that melts into the personality of the French women.

Seeing their opportunity and grasping it as they have never done before, the American tailoring establishments have worked wonders. They have kept to the government's request for the elimination of wool as far as possible, and they have achieved costumes that are eminently fitting and distinguished on the American figure, and for the personality of the American woman. More power to them!

The New French Draperies.

The severity that America lays down for us in the morning is easily changed into a floating gracefulness as laid down by France for the late afternoon and evening.

It is yet to be seen whether America will go in extensively for afternoon gowns, according to the French custom, but there is one thing of which we are quite certain; if the American woman likes an afternoon gown, she will wear it through the evening, unless some formality of entertainment demands a more ornamental frock.

France has cut her silhouette as slim as the American designer has cut it for tailored costumes, but France gives a note of the First Empire in the seductive way in which she drapes this narrow foundation with floating, transparent material.

The trick is not confined to house costumes; it plays a good role in street gowns also, in a modified and demure manner. A tunic of Georgette crepe, for example, will be dropped over a slim underslip of silk or satin, and the sleeves will float away from the arms and come back suddenly to the wrists, where they are tightly caught in. But this gown will not be accepted by the American woman for the street.

There is a strong note of economy struck in these new French clothes, which is heard by the woman who is hiring a seamstress to build up her spring wardrobe at home. It shows the way to alter old gowns into new ones. The majority of women own evening frocks that have good foundations, the skirts a trifle too full, it is true, but otherwise ready to serve as the beginning of a new frock. The alteration in the skirt is a simple one. It consists of straightening out all the seams, so that there is no flare from the hips down.

Drapery seems to be the order of the latest spring fashions.

Smart military frocks are very much in evidence for children.

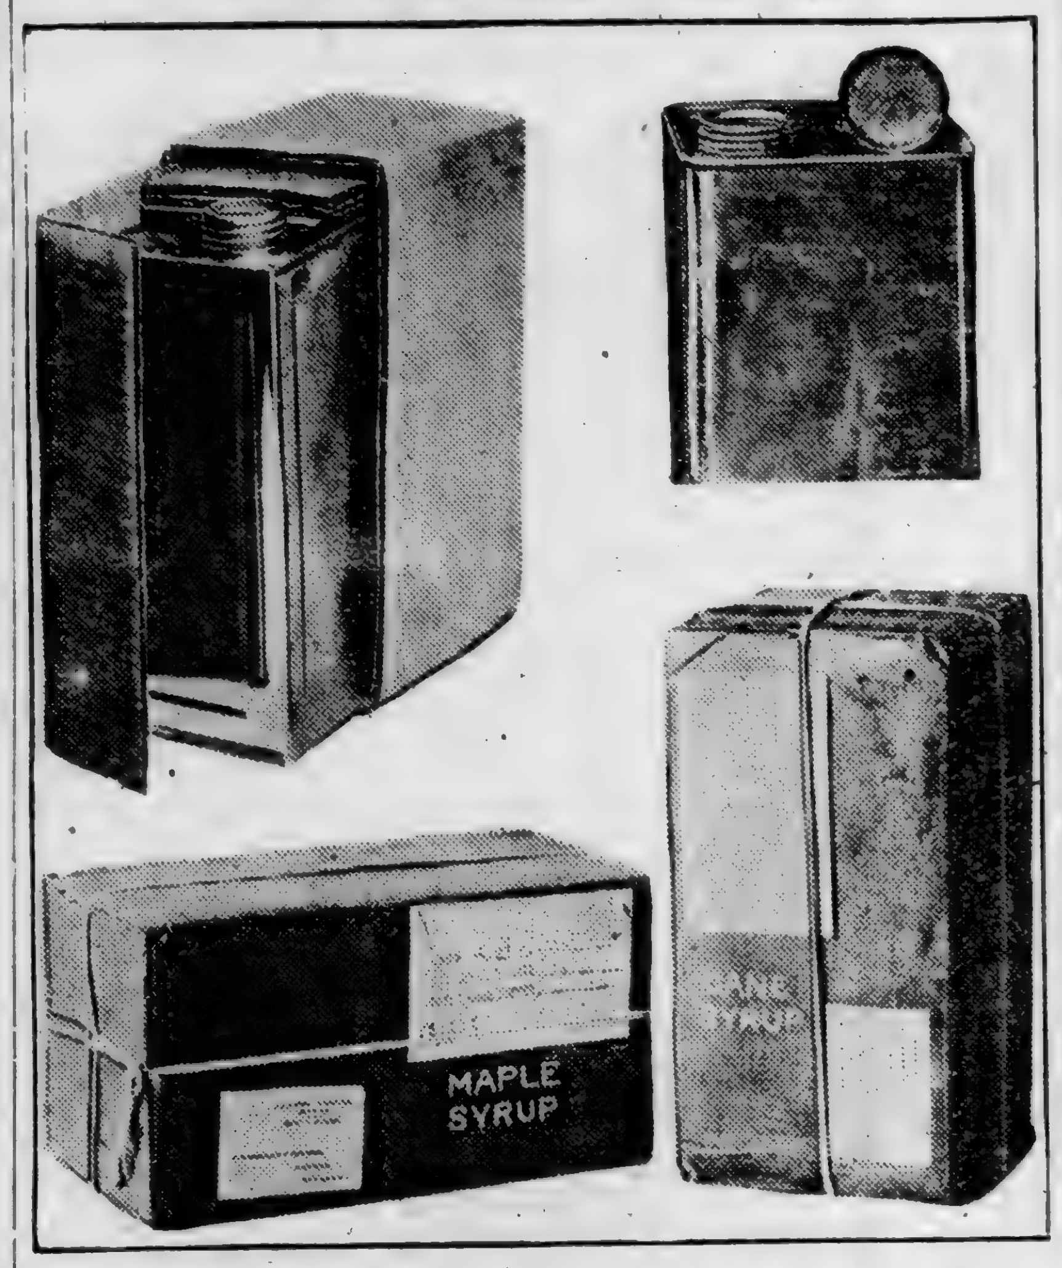
SIRUPS AND HONEY BY PARCEL POST



These Containers Can Carry Sirups and Honey in the Mails Long Distances, the Bureau of Markets Learned.

LIQUID SWEETS BY PARCEL POST

Average Distance 654 Miles in Experimental Shipments by Bureau of Markets.

LOSS IN THREE SHIPMENTS

Tin Containers With Screw Cap Found Satisfactory for Sirups and Honey —Urge Only High-Grade Products Be Shipped.

Producers and consumers may find it to their advantage to use the parcel post for marketing sirups and extracted honey, according to a statement from the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture. Experimental shipments of maple, cane, sorghum sirups, and extracted honey, made from many parts of the country over many different mail routes, have shown the possibilities of marketing these products by parcel post. A total of 394 trial shipments were made over distances averaging 654 miles, a much greater distance, it is pointed out, than sirups are likely to be sent by mail. Of these shipments only three showed any material loss of contents because of seepage or leakage and this was due to unusually rough handling.

Tin Containers Used.

Two types of tin containers were found satisfactory for parcel post shipments of sirups and honey. Both types have screw caps and are provided with outer cartons of corrugated paper board. The screw caps contain snugly fitting pieces of cork that cover the opening in the cans when the screw caps are properly closed. As a protection to the screw caps, squares of corrugated paper board are placed on top of the cans beside the screw caps. Such packages properly wrapped and securely tied, marked "fragile" as required by the postal regulations for packages containing liquids, will carry without danger of leakage in the mails.

High Cost of Containers.

While the cost of containers is high at the present time, there are doubtless many cases in which parcel post marketing would be desirable and economical, as sirups and extracted honey are good substitutes for sugar. Suggestions on obtaining customers and conducting business with them by parcel post may be found in Farmers' Bulletin 922, "Parcel Post Business Methods."

In order to retain customers, say the specialists, it is necessary that only high-grade products be shipped, as the principal incentive to buying by parcel post is to obtain products of high quality. Persons desiring further particulars in regard to shipping sirups and extracted honey by parcel post may apply to the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture.

Care Makes Bees Efficient.

Because of lack of attention fully half the bees now kept in the United States are virtually useless to their owners and consequently beekeeping is often condemned as unprofitable. Probably in an average season for the United States as a whole the surplus honey obtained by good beekeepers scarcely will exceed 50 pounds to the colony. Assuming that 400 pounds is the average needed by a hive to maintain its existence during the year, this 50-pound surplus represents then only one-ninth of the nectar gathered by the bees. In such an average season an apiary of 100 colonies may gather nectar equivalent to 22½ tons of honey where the "honey crop" or surplus honey will be only 2½ tons. That 100 colonies of bees can find nectar sufficient to make 22½ tons of honey within a range of about two miles gives some idea of the amount of sugar available in the form of nectar. This amount doubtless is much below the actual sugar at hand, for when nectar is flowing freely bees do not get it all. Furthermore, in many places more than 50 pounds of surplus are obtained and often more than 100 colonies can be kept profitably in one place.

In the face of these facts it is regrettable to find so many beekeepers who fail to get even the small percentage which belongs to the beekeeper. There are parts of the United States where 90 per cent of all colonies of bees are in hollow logs or plain square boxes in which combs of bees cannot be handled. There are few parts of the country where the box hive is not found and probably one-third of all the bees in the country are so housed. In this case both equipment and management are poor and the energy of the bees is misdirected. Even of those who keep their bees in modern hives of movable frames the vast majority do not get the full crop. By failing to control swarming by providing insufficient room for storage or by lack of proper care in winter their crop is often reduced one-half or more.

HOW MANY FARMERS ARE CO-OPERATING

Farmers' co-operative purchasing and marketing associations now number about 14,000 with about two million members and do an annual business estimated at one and one-half billion dollars. On the basis of the value of products handled the elevator associations lead, followed in order by fruit and produce organizations, and creameries and cheese factories.

Community Kitchens Canned.

Community kitchens, where surplus vegetables and fruits are canned under co-operative arrangements, were operated last year in Ohio, Pleasants, Kenawha, Jefferson, and, to some extent, in other counties of West Virginia. The kitchens were supervised by the home demonstration agents of the extension division of the state university.

In the city of Charleston, where a kitchen was opened in July, the number who brought products to be canned increased from 56 women during the second week to several times that number in a short time.

Supplementing the work of the Charleston kitchen are about 15 volunteer women who, under the supervision of the home demonstration agent of Kanawaha county, established temporary field kitchens in the rural communities, to which the women bring their surplus vegetables and fruits.

As a result of this effort, large quantities of food were conserved, much of which would otherwise have been wasted.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Exodus 20: 2-17; Leviticus 19:11-18; Matthew 12:34-40.

I. Regarding Marriage (vv. 1-12).

The question touching divorce, which the Pharisees temptingly put to Christ, brought forth teaching which exhibits marriage in its true light,

1. Should not be degraded by divorce (vv. 1-6).

Divorce was not instituted by God. The marriage relationship is indissoluble. Moses suffered divorce, limited and regulated it. Its existence, its practice, is indicative of the coarseness and perverseness of man. Sin is its real cause.

2. Marriage is God's primal law (vv. 6-9).

The ideal law of life for the subjects of the kingdom of marriage. This is proven by the fundamental fact of sex. The union of the male and female natures is physical, mental and spiritual. In marriage, the male and female natures are mutally complemented. God's intention is that man should not be without the woman, nor the woman without the man (1 Cor. 11:11).

3. Remarriage of the divorcer is adultery (vv. 10-12).

The marriage relationship can only be broken by death and sin. In view of the fact that marriage is for life, men and women should not enter this relationship without very serious consideration. Divorce for other than marital infidelity does not give the right to remarry.

II. Regarding Children (vv. 13-16).

The union of the male and female natures, according to God's purpose, lays the foundation for family life. The issue of such union is children. In connection with the divine law of marriage, it is fitting that Jesus should set forth his estimate of children and interest in them. The disciples considered it beneath the dignity of the Master to spend time with the children. Those who think it beneath their dignity to give attention to children should ponder well the words of Jesus. This will give the disciples proper consideration for work among children, and also to the nurture and discipline of their own children. Christian men and women will regard children as the property of the Lord, and will esteem it a high and holy privilege to train them for him. Due attention to Christ's teaching regarding children would transform the home life of society.

III. Regarding Riches (vv. 17-31).

1. The young ruler's question (v. 17).

This question reveals a void in his heart. He was a young man with a lovable character. The Savior's affections were enraptured by him. He was moral, honest, earnest and courageous. He had a wrong conception of eternal life. He thought that eternal life could be obtained by good works. Though he claimed to have kept the law, he was conscious of something lacking. He was willing to do something to fill up that which was lacking; therefore he came to Jesus making inquiry as to that lack.

2. Jesus' reply (vv. 18, 19).

He knew the young man's heart, and put his finger on the weak spot. When it came to parting with his possessions in order to help his neighbor he parted with the Lord, going away sorrowful. This revealed the fact that he was a covetous man, a violator of the tenth commandment.

3. Lacking one thing and yet lost (vv. 21, 22).

When the Lord pointed out to him that the defect in his life was the love of his money, he was unwilling to pay the price. When the time came in his life to choose between eternal life and riches, he chose wealth and parted company with Christ, perhaps, forever.

4. The peril of riches (vv. 23-31).

The difficulty does not lie in the fact that a man possesses riches, for a man may possess great riches and still be an heir of the kingdom. Wealth is a mighty power. In itself it is good. It will provide bread for the widow and orphan, amelioration for the suffering, and send the Gospel of Christ to the ends of the earth. The step from possessing riches to trusting in them is a very short one. The tendency of growing wealth is to destroy the nobler life of the soul. Many of the most useful men in ancient and modern times have been men of wealth; but they, like Abraham, chose to live in tents, looking to the heavenly city which hath foundations. As long as a man possesses riches he is safe, but as soon as riches possess the man he is in deadly per Suspense.

Janie's brother was, to say the least, bashful, but to propose to his lady friend on a postcard was, to Janie, the very last word in weakness.

"My dear," said her girl friend when she heard about it, "how absurd!"

"Yes; but that's not all," said Janie. "She replied by letter, and the postmistress is so angry, because she doesn't know whether he's been accepted or not."

Intermarriage of Races.

There is plenty of historic precedent for the intermarriages of warriors and the women of the lands they enter. Consider the Roman legions of Trajan and Titus, quartered in Scythia, and the native girls of the district. This resulted in the race of Roumanians, who claimed to be the purest descendants of the race of the Caesars.

Forest Skyscrapers.

The tallest of California's "big trees" is 325 feet in height, but among the great gum trees of Australia many specimens are more than 400 feet in height, and one, which was felled in southeast Australia, measured 471 feet —the tallest tree on record. Gum trees grow very rapidly.—Popular Science Monthly.

Couldn't Tell.

Two farmers met at the county seat shortly after a cyclone had visited that neighborhood.

"Well, sir," said one of them, "she shook up things out my way, to be sure. By the way, Henry," he added, "did that new barn of yours get hurt any?"

Little Pearl had spent the night at the home of her married sister. The next morning she appeared undecided whether to return home or to accept her sister's invitation and remain to luncheon. Finally she slipped out into the kitchen, held a whispered colloquy with her sister's maid, then called up her mother's cook.

"What you goin' to have for dessert, Annie?" her sister heard her ask over the 'phone. "Stewed prunes!" echoed the child in disgust. "Well, that settles it. Birdie is goin' to have ice cream. I stay here."

Satan, Hohenzollern & Co.

It is significant that the obituaries of Abdul Hamid have been much more restrained than would have been the case if the Red Sultan had departed this life a few years ago. The reason is not that the issues of the war have swamped interest in the decease of a deposed despot, but that Abdul Hamid strikes us today as a rather inferior kind of monster. At the time of his death he was, so to speak, only the "Co." in the firm of Satan, Hohenzollern & Co. And, if American advices are to be credited, the senior member of the partnership has resigned in favor of Wilhelm, whose modern methods he is unable to rival.—London Globe.

From Experience.

The meeting was in full swing, and the suffragist speaker was holding forth in a valiant manner on behalf of her cause.

"Yes," she cried, "women have been wronged for ages. They have suffered in a thousand ways."

"There is one way in which they have never suffered," said the meek-looking man standing in the rear.

"What way is that?" demanded the suffragist.

"They have never suffered in silence?" was the sad reply.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

We should be keerful how we encurridge luxuries. It is but a step forward from hoe cake to plum puddin', but it's a mile and a half by the nearest road when we have to go back again.—Josh Billings.

A FEW PRETTY SALADS.

The combination of light green found in the cucumber, and the rich red of the ripe tomato makes a salad most alluring. Small tomatoes may be peeled and cut in the form of a tulip with a bit of yellow mayonnaise for the center; placed on head lettuce, they look like a flower.

A pretty way to serve cucumber is to peel it, then pare in rounds as one does an apple, keeping the pieces as long as possible. Wind in rose shape, place a spoonful of mayonnaise in the center and if placed on lettuce or a slice of tomato will prove both pleasing to the eye and the palate.

Chopped cucumber with onion used as a filling for tomato cups, the filling mixed with a good boiled dressing or any kind of oil dressing, is another good combination well liked.

Green Pepper With Cheese.—Cut green peppers in halves, removing the seeds and white pulp, then fill with highly seasoned cream cheese which has been softened with cream; a few chopped chives may be added. The peppers are set away to chill, and when ready to serve cut them in slices. The slice will have a ring of the pretty green or red of the pepper around the cheese.

Tomato and Pineapple Salad.—Peel shapely small tomatoes and cut in eighths, keeping it together at the blossom end. Open out like a flower and fill the center with chopped pineapple and celery and dot with a spoonful of yellow mayonnaise just before serving. Slices of radish with slices of onion of the same size in overlapping slices make a pretty garnish for a plain lettuce or head lettuce salad.

Head Lettuce With Peanuts.—Take a half cupful of nice fresh peanuts, roll with the rolling pin until crushed like crumbs. Sprinkle these over head lettuce that has been dressed with a highly seasoned French dressing with a tablespoonful of onion added to it.

She dresses aye sae clean and neat,
Baith decent and genteel,
And then there's something in her gait
Makes ony dress look weel.

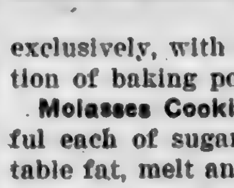
GOOD THINGS TO TRY.



Pastry may be made by using barley flour without any wheat flour. Proceed as with any pastry. The mixture will be a little more difficult to handle, but it makes very good pastry. Baking powder biscuit may also be made, using barley flour exclusively, with a little larger proportion of baking powder.

Molasses Cookies.—Take a half-cupful each of sugar, molasses and vegetable fat, melt and mix together; cool; add one cupful of sour or butter milk, one and three-fourths cupfuls of flour, one cupful of barley flour, a teaspoonful each of soda, baking powder, ginger, allspice, cloves and salt. Mix well and set in the ice box until stiff and cold. Roll out quickly and cut before the mixture becomes too soft to handle.

Camp Pudding.—Put a pint of stale bread crumbs with a pint of milk in a saucepan to soak for half an hour; add a half-cupful of honey, one egg well beaten, a few gratings of nutmeg; mix well and bake until the pudding is set in the center. Serve hot with honey or maple sirup.

Oatmeal Sweetbits.—Cream one cupful of sugar with a teaspoonful of fat; add the yolks of two eggs well beaten, two and one-half cupfuls of rolled oats mixed with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and when well blended fold in the well-beaten whites of the eggs with a teaspoonful of vanilla. Drop on a baking sheet with a teaspoon and bake in a slow oven, allowing plenty of room for the cakes to spread.

Potato Coffee Cake.—Take two cupfuls of flour, two tablespoonfuls of fat, one-third of a cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of salt, a fourth of a cupful of skim milk, a half yeast cake and cinnamon or grated lemon peel for flavoring. Melted fat and sugar with a few chopped nuts may be usd to spread over the top just before baking.

SHORT NOTICE DISHES.

The housewife who is at all efficient, trys to have something that may be drawn upon for an emergency when the unexpected guest or "three were invited here come nine," which will sometimes happen in the best regulated neighborhoods. A cream soup with crackers or crotons will make a good beginning for any meal after breakfast or if broth of any kind is at hand a variety of soups may be prepared on short notice. Canned soups are another available dish. A white sauce with fish, flesh or fowl or almost any vegetable, cold cooked eggs or macaroni will make a good main dish.

An omelet is always welcome and the housewife who keeps herself well supplied with eggs need not worry if she knows how to prepare a fluffy, tasty omelet.

A half a cupful of rice may be browned in a little butter, then water added to cook it, and when tender stir in two or three eggs with a little milk or cream with seasonings. This will taste like scrambled eggs with use of half the number.

For dessert one may always call upon the preserve closet, and with a cracker or small sponge cake or piece of fruit cake with a hot drink, the dessert is easy. If a stale cake is in one's possession, steam it and make a sauce of a cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of flour well blended, and just enough boiling water to cook the mixture until smooth, then add a nice lump of butter, a grating of nutmeg, and a tablespoonful or two of good vinegar, with a pinch of salt. Serve the sauce hot as well as the steamed cake.

Another quick dessert is called "Fifteen Minute Pudding," and is one every housewife should know how to prepare. Take a cupful of flour, sifted with a teaspoonful of baking powder, a little salt and a cup of milk. Put into greased cups with a layer of any juicy fruit like cherries in between the spoonfuls of batter. Steam 15 minutes in a dish of boiling water. Serve with cream.

Oh! that mine eyes might closed be
To what concerns me not to see;
That deafness might possess mine ear
To what concerns me not to hear;
That truth my tongue may always tie
From ever speaking foolishly.
—Thos. Elmwood.

SAVORY, SATISFYING DISHES.

The conscientious housewife who is trying to fulfill the requirements of her food pledge is often much puzzled to plan a well-balanced meal.

Spring Soup.—Peel and thinly slice one onion and cook in a tablespoonful of butter for five minutes, stirring constantly, then add four cupfuls of chicken broth, with one cupful of stale bread crumbs. Bring to the boiling point and let simmer 45 minutes, then rub through a sieve and add a cupful of milk. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add two of flour and stir until well blended, then pour on gradually while stirring constantly the boiling hot stock. Add a cupful of thin cream or a beaten egg with a cupful of milk. Season well with salt and pepper and serve piping hot.

Oatmeal Scrapple.—Boil two pounds of flank steak until tender, put it through a meat grinder. To the liquor of the beef add a pint of oatmeal, boil for half an hour, then mix with the meat, season with pepper and salt, and mold in a bread pan. Fry the slices in hot fat until deep brown.

Prune Ice Cream.—Soak a cupful of prunes in water to cover overnight. Cook in the same water until tender, remove the stones and put the pulp through a strainer. Add a cupful of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, a pinch of salt, and 1¼ cupfuls of cream. Freeze and serve garnished with nut meats. The juice of two oranges may be used in place of the lemons, making a pleasing variety.

Creamed Sardines.—Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-fourth of a cupful of soft bread crumbs, add one cupful of cream and bring to the boiling point; add one box of sardines, two cooked eggs finely chopped, one-half teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of paprika. Reheat and serve on narrow strips of buttered toast.

Doughnuts that have become dry may be dipped in cold water and reheated in the oven, making them quite palatable.

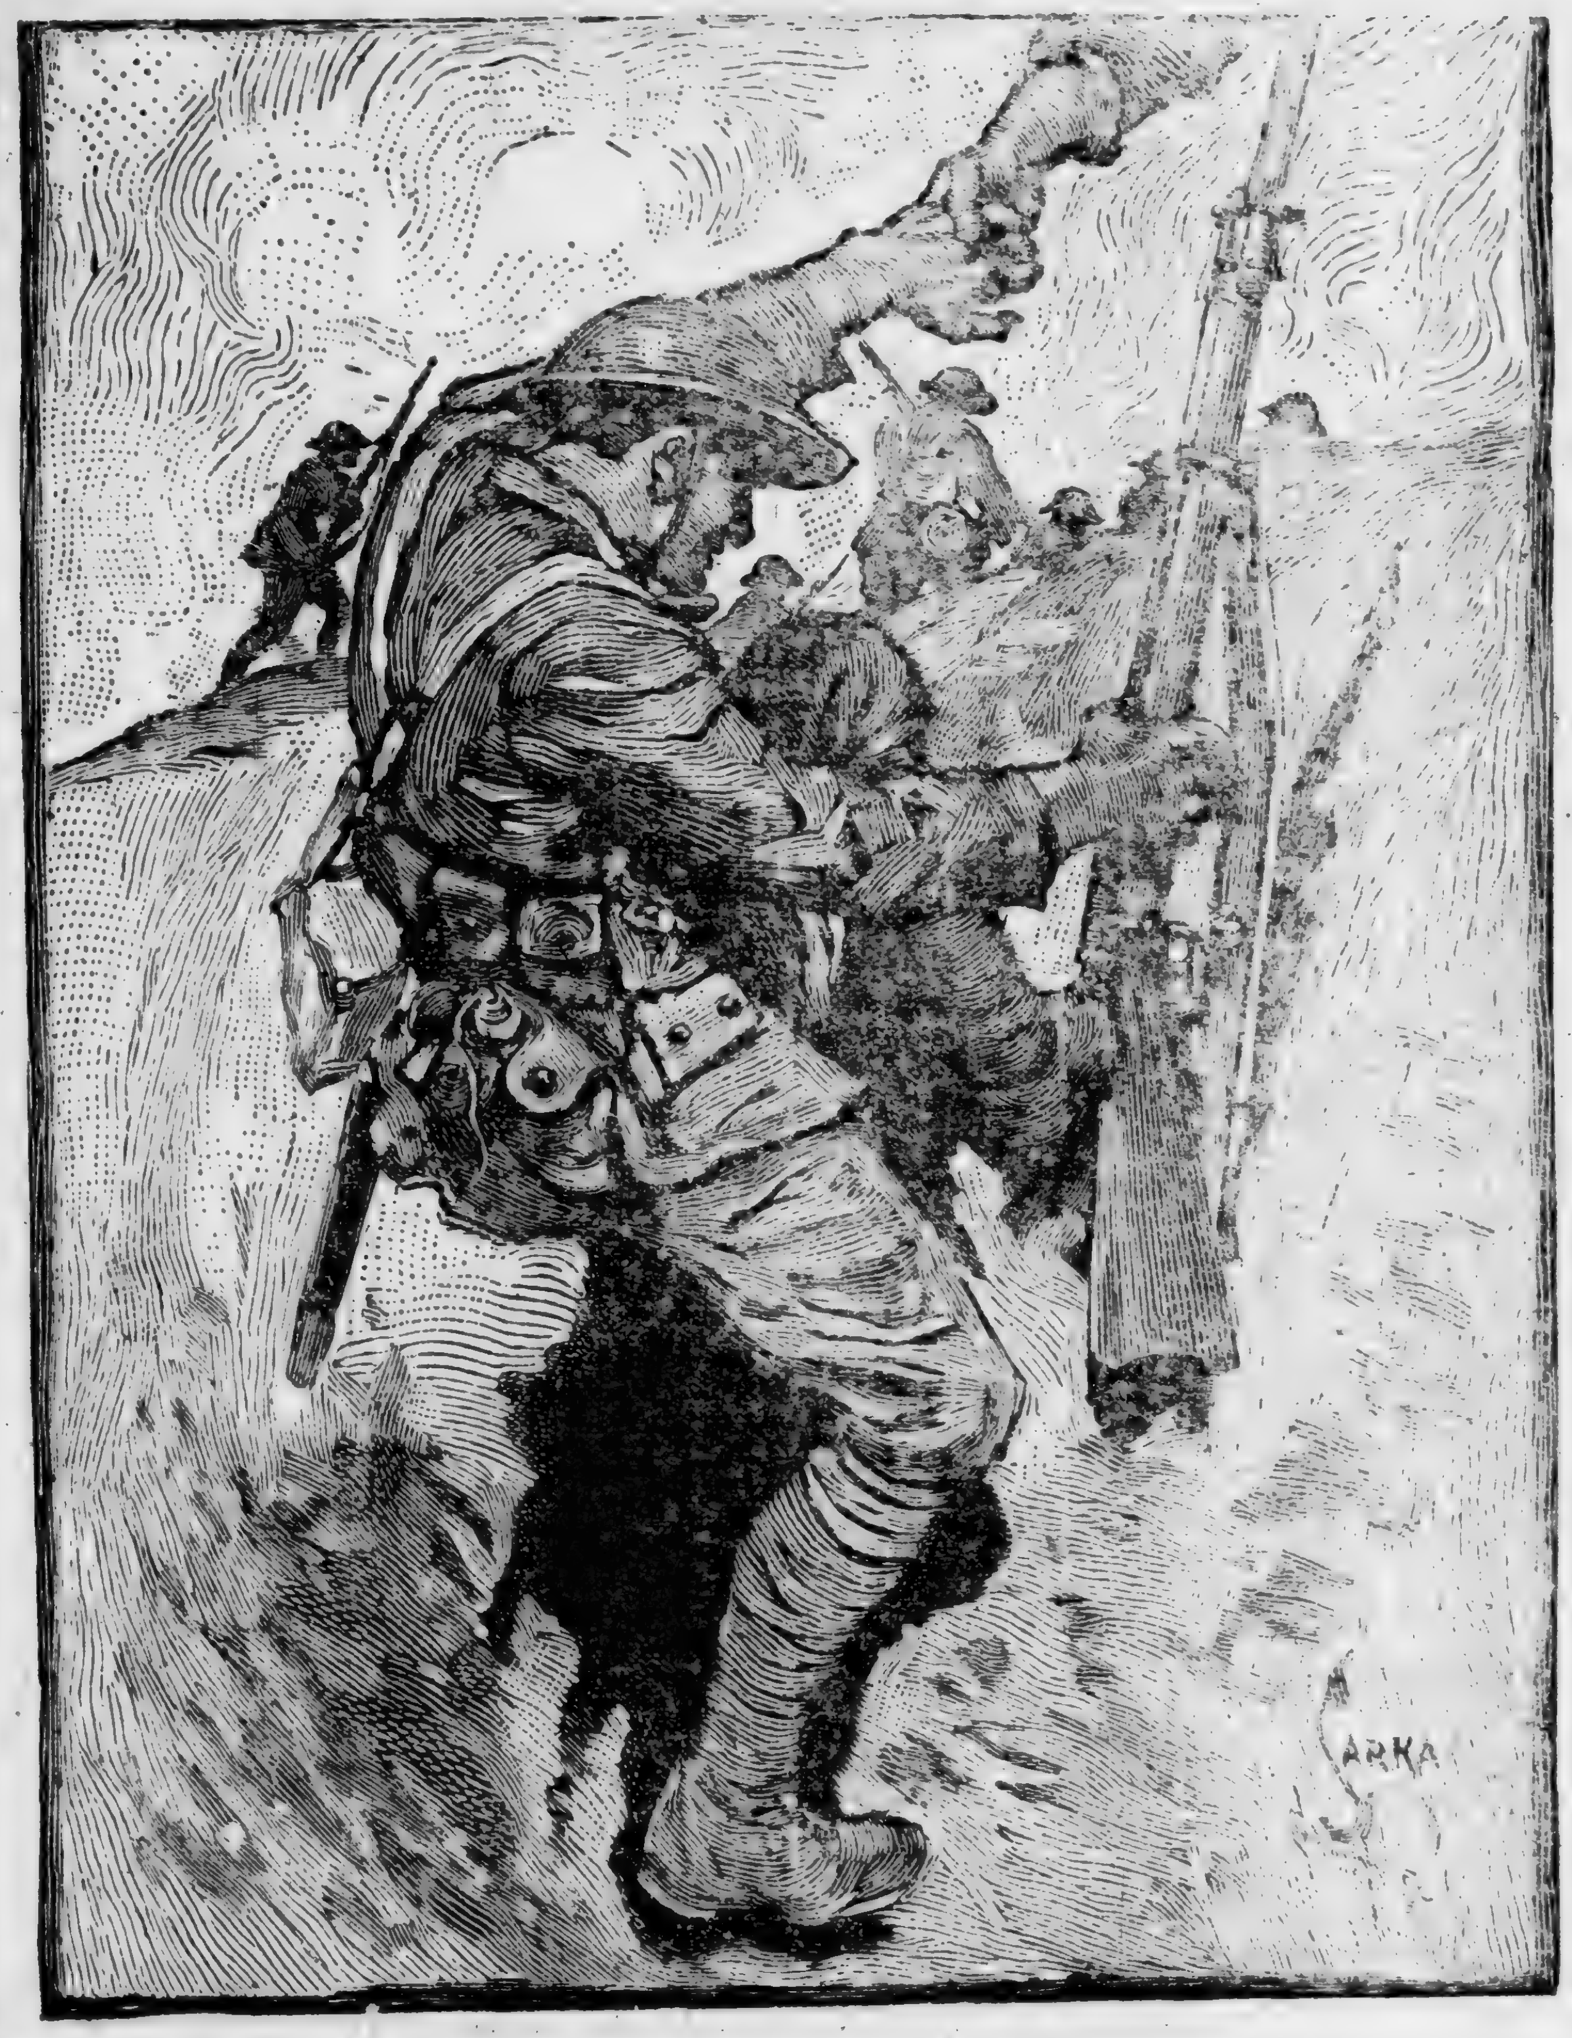
Lend Him a Hand!



Here Is YOUR Boy—going over the top, his gun in hand, his jaw set, his heart on fire. It is the most dramatic moment in the life of this soldier—and in the life of this nation.

His heart and mind are set on one thing—VICTORY—victory over an enemy who stands for acts and ideas which this soldier despises—which he is ready to give his life to destroy.

We here at home hate these things, too. We are pledged to their destruction—to our last dollar and our last man. But this soldier can actually—get-his-hands-on-them—and root them out of the world forever—if we will lend him a hand.

This Boy Is the Symbol of Fighting America

He stands for the aspiration, the conviction of a hundred million people translated into action. He is doing what the rest of us are dreaming. Only through him can we win the Victory.

But He Can't Do It With His Bare Hands! He asks you to back him up with guns, shells, tanks, airplanes. Let's lend him a hand by lending our dollars. Then no power in the world can prevent him from winning the Victory.

The long fighting ages of the world have never seen a better soldier than this boy of yours—your son—your husband—your brother—your friend. He stands for the sons of America, hundreds of thousands strong, soon to be millions. He is doing his part—we must do ours!

Indiana News Tersely Told

Lafayette.—Experiments carried on for a term of years have convinced the agricultural experiment station at Purdue university that Indiana soils in general are deficient in phosphorus. Prof. A. E. Wiancko and S. C. Jones of the experiment station, have issued a bulletin covering the result of this extensive and conclusive experiment in soil analysis. The conclusions reached as a result of the experimentation are that available phosphates are the most profitable fertilizers. Acid phosphate has given the best results. Basic slag and steamed bone meal also have given good results, standing next to acid phosphates in profitableness. Rock phosphate has given good results in certain cases, although it proved the least profitable of any of the phosphates used. As a general average for 95 crops of corn, wheat and clover on five experiment fields during the last 12 years, acid phosphate has yielded crop increases valued at $8.46 an acre a year, at an average cost of $1.38, while rock phosphate has yielded crop increases valued at $3.32 an acre a year, at an average cost of $1.44.

Indianapolis.—German enemy aliens in Indiana, who complied with the recent federal regulation for registration with the police or postmasters, total 10,849, according to a compilation by Mark Storen, United States marshal for Indiana, and forwarded to Washington, D. C., authorities. The Indianapolis registration totals 1,408. Fort Wayne may be the only place in the state where all German aliens failed to register. A shortage of more than fifty in the general registration at Fort Wayne is found by comparing the total with those Germans obtaining munition-factory zone permits from the marshal last summer. Only two of the fifty-one Indiana cities having a population of 5,000 or more are without Germans now subjects of the kaiser. These cities are Crawfordsville and Hartford City.

Indianapolis.—Ten thousand new silos on Indiana farms is the aim of the Indiana committee on food production and conservation. A largely attended meeting was held here for the purpose of boosting the campaign to put this drive over. A "silo leader" has been appointed for each county in the state, and practically all of them were present at the meeting, with county agricultural agents, emergency demonstration agents, representatives of county food committees, farmers' associations, farmers' clubs, members of the state council of defense and county councils of defense and many other organizations.

Chicago.—Down around Medaryville, Ind., there are more than 100 farmers, who are said to be riding about in automobiles stolen in Chicago. These farmers were innocent purchasers of stolen property. They bought them in good faith at low prices from Mel Guild, who is said to be a member of one of the best families of his home county. He is understood to be a director in a bank, a member of the Farmers' Alliance and a town trustee of Medaryville. Guild was convicted on an indictment here and a motion for a new trial has been made.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich made an inspection trip to the Boys' School at Plainfield and Turkey Run. Certain improvements will be recommended to the state board of forestry for Turkey Run. A dining room will be built of brick made at the state farm, a bridge will be built across the creek, and it is possible that an entrance fee of ten cents may be charged to the park to help its upkeep fund. The governor said he was informed that more than 75,000 persons visited the park last season.

Milton.—F. L. Cherry of Philadelphia was here investigating oil and gas prospects. In company with Thomas B. Lantz of this place and Omer Hurst of Cambridge City, who is one of the directors of the Farmers' bank here, he has been going over the Doddridge neighborhood. Six thousand acres of land have been leased.

Lafayette.—Plans are being made by the division of animal husbandry of the Purdue university extension department to conduct a state-wide publicity campaign to increase the amount of corn hogged off in Indiana next fall. The effort will be a part of the campaign to increase hog production 20 per cent in this state this year.

Wabash.—Following an all-day session in which members of the various brotherhoods on the Big Four railroad, committees from the Commercial club, merchants and factory owners and officials of the Michigan division of the road took part, the trainmen won out with their original demands that the division point be retained here.

Goshen.—In two weeks farmers of this county have sold 15,000 bushels of wheat, and it is estimated that 35,000 more bushels are held on farms. The county food administrator asks that all the wheat be marketed.

Petersburg.—A new gas field has been found in this county. While the Johnson Refining company was drilling at Rogers, six miles north of here, a heavy flow was encountered at a depth of 1,070 feet. The gas will be cased off and the well drilled deeper. Owing to a shortage of teams, big automobile trucks are being used to haul coal to the oil fields for use in the engines and power stations.

Petersburg.—Continued rains have caused a delay in corn planting, and it is now feared that all the early planted corn will rot in the ground. Wheat and oats are in fine condition.

Evansville.—Indiana's wheat crop for the year 1918 is expected by millers to yield approximately 60,000,000 bushels. The millers recently attended a meeting of their state association here. One of the chief questions discussed was the storage of grain on its way to the consumer. Under the rules of the United States food administration in connection with the war against the Teutonic powers, it is said the flour mills of the state can receive only about 10,000,000 bushels of the crop. The remainder will have to be taken care of by the grain elevators. Carl Sims of Indianapolis, head of the milling division of the state food administration, spoke on food regulation. J. B. McLemore of Nashville, Tenn., secretary of the Southeastern Millers' association, made an address in which he said the millers will co-operate fully with the government in food control.

Lebanon.—Charles E. Ryder, twenty-six, who held up Ernest Harvey, cashier of the Farmers' State bank here and escaped with $957, was captured by members of the Eagle Township Horsethief Detective association while he was hiding in the Eagle creek bottoms about two miles south of Zionsville, and brought to the county jail here by Frank Bland, marshal of that town. He surrendered and the money was recovered. Ryder was immediately taken into the circuit court, where he pleaded guilty to robbery, and his punishment will be from five to fourteen years in the state reformatory at Jeffersonville. Ryder's home is near Kirklin, and he stated that he robbed the bank in order to get money to pay an overdraft on a bank at Kirklin. Ryder has served one term in prison for forgery and was released last November.

Indianapolis.—Three hundred and twenty sacks of ninety-eight pounds each, or fifteen tons of flour have been added to the federal government's supply for shipment abroad, as a result of the tender to Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, by the West Baden Springs Hotel company. The company wired Mr. Barnard that the flour will be held subject to the direction of the food administrator, and Mr. Barnard will turn it into trade channels thus releasing the equivalent for transport to Europe. Other tenders of flour are coming daily to the federal food administrator, who is directed by the head of the division at Washington to accept it in the name of the government, paying a fair price, based upon local conditions.

Seymour.—The question of farm labor is a serious one in Jackson county. Farmers say the time is near when they will have difficulty in finding enough help to take care of the crops, and with a large number of men from the farms in military service the situation is more serious than ever before. The boys' working reserve promises to be of help to the farmers, but it is pointed out that many members of the reserve have had no experience in farm work and cannot be expected to do a man's labor. The announcement that furloughs will be granted men in training camps during the harvest season is encouraging to local farmers, and it is believed many requests will be filed in this county.

Indianapolis.—It is evident that Indianapolis is to be made a recruiting center for the enginering units that are to see service abroad, according to orders received by Major Thomas F. Ryan, in charge of the Indianapolis recruiting station. Several thousand of the new men will help to make up the strength of 9,000 engineers that are to be trained this summer at Fort Benjamin Harrison. If all engineering units ordered recruited here were brought to Fort Harrison, the strength would be approximately 16,000 men, but there is not barrack capacity for them. New cantonments would have to be built. It is probable that some of the engineers recruited here will go to Camp Dix and other camps.

Indianapolis.—A grave warning to avert suffering this winter by laying in a supply of coal now and an urgent appeal for the employment of men of conscription age were principal measures adopted by the state council of defense at its weekly meeting. Will J. Freeman, active chairman of the council's committee on fuel production and head of the mine operators' association in Indiana, told the body that conditions threaten a repetition of last winter's suffering. He said that Hoosier mines are now turning out only 50 per cent of their capacity, but declared, however, that this was due largely to car shortage.

Indianapolis.—Indiana, part of the Seventh reserve bank district, "went over the top" in the Liberty loan drive with a showing of 105 per cent on its quota. It is expected a showing of 150 per cent will be announced later.

Danville.—The highest price for land in this district was paid when an 88-acre tract sold at Homer for $300 an acre. The farm belonged to Albert Breedlove and was sold to H. E. Hoffman.

Bedford.—The trial of Joseph Pfaffenberger, charged with the murder, in the first degree, of Newton Plummer, was sent to Washington county on a change of venue.

Washington, D. C.—Mayor Miller of Michigan City was escorted out of the District of Columbia by federal officers and released on a train taking him home. Miller said he came to Washington to clear up his citizenship status. The department of justice did not pass on any question relating to his citizenship, but decided that he had not entered the district with wilful intent in violation of the presidential proclamation barring Germans. He expressed a deep desire to return to Michigan City and boarded a train with a guard, who accompanied him as far as the district line.

HOW YOUR MILK GETS TO TOWN

The Bottle You Take Off Your Back Porch May Have Traveled 200 Miles in Some of These Carriers.

MILK'S JOURNEY: COW TO KITCHEN

DIFFICULT STEPS IN SYSTEM

Product Must Be Carefully Cooled to Keep It and Then Hauled Over Bad Roads to Railroads—Different in Small Towns.

In the handling of foodstuffs the American people constantly demand increased service. Package goods, deliveries and special deliveries, buying in small quantities and so on, all require additional labor by some one. The milk consumer now is accustomed to find a bottle of clean, cold milk on the doorstep in the morning. If the milkman is late or does not come at all, vigorous complaint is voiced. Such a complaint is likely to be based on a lack of understanding of the many difficult steps involved in the modern system of distributing milk.

Up Before Daybreak.

Way off in the country somewhere, perhaps as far as 200 miles, some farmer must rise before daybreak to feed and milk his cows. The milk must be carefully cooled to keep it sweet, and must then be hauled for several miles over sometimes almost impassable roads to the railroad.

Long Haul to City.

Then begins the long haul to the city where the milk is carried on big trucks to the dealer's plant. There it is carefully pasteurized, bottled and placed in the refrigerator. The next morning about one or two o'clock the bottled milk is loaded on the delivery wagon and the driver starts on his way, carrying from 300 to 400 quarts, all of which must be delivered before breakfast time. Of course in small towns this system is simpler, as the farmer often delivers the milk directly to the consumer, but even then there are so many difficulties that the milkman may be excused if he is a little late now and then.

Reduce Fly Injury to Stock.

Here are some of the preventive measures advocated by the United States department of agriculture to decrease the losses of animals due to the larvae of flies: Burning or deep burying of carcasses of animals, the arranging of breeding operations so that young stock will be born in late fall, winter or early spring, the carrying on in winter and early spring months of branding, dehorning and other operations resulting in wounds, taking precautions to prevent injury to live stock from pens and fences or while on range or in pasture, the destruction of ticks and the poisoning and trapping of flies. Farmers' Bulletin 857 describes the damage these flies do and methods of controlling them. Burning or burying carcasses is very important, it is pointed out, since it is on this material that maggots, infesting wounds, are chiefly dependent for propagation. If all decaying animal matter could be destroyed, the troublesome blow flies—the insect bringing about maggot infestation—would be practically exterminated.

Help Save Game Birds.

The last day of the open season for hunting migratory game birds under the federal regulations was January 31 and it is now unlawful to capture or kill migratory game birds anywhere in the United States. The department of agriculture makes this announcement in response to numerous requests for information concerning the federal protective law. State game commissioners and sportsmen in nearly every state report that more wild fowl were killed during the open season just passed than in any season for many years. The increase in the number of birds is attributed to the abolition of spring shooting under the operation of the federal regulations. The law already has been very beneficial to sportsmen and as a food protective measure, and under the continuance of existing protection there is every reason to hope for an ever-increasing supply of wild fowl which will greatly improve shooting conditions in the years to come.

The department appeals to the patriotism and true sportsmanship of all persons to co-operate with it in the enforcement of the federal law. It is gratifying to know, says a recent statement from the department, that the majority of sportsmen have observed the regulations, and this fact has contributed largely to the successful results accomplished. The department has planned to increase its force of wardens who will be active during the spring migration in securing evidence upon which to base prosecutions against those who may violate the law.

Capital in Dairy Farming.

Very few people realize the amount of money invested in the dairy farms of the country. The department of agriculture reports that on January 1, 1918, there were 23,384,000 milch cows on farms in the United States, and these cows were valued at $1,643,639,000. Add to this figure the value of lands, buildings and machinery used in dairy farming, and the aggregate is stupendous.

The investment in individual dairy farms varies considerably, being influenced by land values, the number and kind of buildings, and the quality of the cattle kept. A modern dairy of 50 cows, capable of producing a daily average of 500 quarts of milk, would require an investment in equipment of approximately $13,300. This would be divided as follows:

50 cows at $100	$ 5,000
2 pure-bred bulls	1,000
Barn for cattle and feed	5,000
2 concrete silos, capacity 125 tons each	550
Dairy house and equipment	800
Ice house, capacity 150 tons	500
Barn equipment	450
Total	$13,300

Added to this would be the value of horses and horse barn, dwelling house, harnesses, farm machinery, etc.

The value of the land itself is the biggest single item. It has not been included in this estimate because of its variability. If land worth $50 an acre is used, the land investment would be close to $15,000. If $200 land is bought, its cost would approximate $30,000.

Exercise Prevents Pig Thumps.

When the pigs are from four or five to ten days old, be on the lookout for thumps. The best-looking fat little pig is the one to go first every time. An almost certain indication is a little roll of fat around the neck. While there is no known cure for thumps, the trouble is quite easily prevented. Plenty of exercise for the pigs is the answer. In cold, stormy weather out-of-door exercise is impossible, but if a central farrowing house with an alleyway is used, get the little fat fellows into the alley and put in about ten or fifteen minutes three or four times a day chasing them with a buggy whip, until they are pretty well tired out. If this is impossible, try putting one or two of the little pigs at a time in a large barrel or hogshead, placed by the farrowing pen. The pigs will hear the old sow making a fuss and in running around the barrel hunting for a corner to climb out, generally will take the exercise necessary to ward off thumps. A considerable part of the battle is won if the litter gets past the first ten days or so with a good start.

Quality of Butter.

Uniformity in quality is the secret of success in holding customers for the product of the private dairy.

Value of Heifers.

A heifer is valuable in proportion to the smallness of the feed required by her to make a pound of butter.

NORTH DAKOTA'S CONSERVATION POLICY.

From an article in the Union Signal by Mrs. Elizabeth Preston Anderson, president North Dakota W. C. T. U., we quote the following paragraphs:

"While North Dakota is an agricultural and not a manufacturing state, yet according to the United States census for 1910 the average number of wage-earners increased in ten years 105 per cent. The value of goods produced increased in the same time 205 per cent. The value of farm products increased during the same decade 211 per cent; the value of live stock 155 per cent; the value of crops 234 per cent. This percentage of increase was not exceeded by any other state in the Union. During the year 1913 this state led every state in railroad construction."

"The tax on $1,000 of actual value in 1913 was 90 cents. The same year in Minnesota the tax on $1,000 of actual value was $2.12; Montana, $1.20; Idaho, $1.61; Iowa, $2.45; Nebraska, $1.25; Michigan, $2.5; Indiana, $4.00."

"The agricultural wealth of North Dakota exceeds the agricultural wealth of the six New England states combined, and, with the exception of Texas, exceeds in value any of the 16 Southern states, all of which, except Delaware and Florida, have more than three times North Dakota's population. The total wealth of the state increased from $337,006,506 in 1890 to $1,973,616,540 in 1917. Under prohibition the state has multiplied its wealth nearly six times."

"North Dakota has a bank for every 767 inhabitants. In 15 years, from 1898 to 1913, the bank deposits increased more than 1,000 per cent. No state in the Union exceeded this percentage of increase. The per capita bank deposit in 1913 was $138. In 1917, according to figures compiled by the state commissioner of agriculture and labor, it was $235.95. Has any license state nearly doubled its per capita bank deposit in four years? The per capita wealth in 1917 was $2,891. Eighty per cent of the people of the state own their homes."

"North Dakota has the largest number of consolidated schools of any state in the Union. These give the children in rural districts the advantage of grade and high schools. An amount exceeding $5,000,000 is expended on the common schools of the state every year. The state has a perpetual endowment fund for schools and institutions of $64,000,000. North Dakota boasts the lowest juvenile delinquency rate of any state."

WHY HE IS FOR PROHIBITION.

Judge Henry, for 15 years judge of the district court of Polk county, Iowa, speaking concerning his attitude on prohibition, said:

"In the discharge of my duty I was compelled to send my playmates of childhood days to penitentiaries, inebriate asylums and to the jails as a consequence of saloons in Des Moines. During my 15 years on the bench, I spent four years in the criminal division. I sent more than a thousand men to penitentiaries and jails for criminal offenses committed by them, and I know that 90 per cent of these crimes were caused by drunkenness originating in saloons.

"I granted more than 1,000 divorces, and I know that 90 per cent of them were the consequence of drunkenness and the drunkenness was due to the saloon. I have taken thousands of children and placed them in state institutions for public protection and education whose homes were ruined by drunkenness. I have seen and know the moral depravity, the poverty, disgrace, the ruined hopes of mothers and children, the insane asylums and poorhouses crowded until the accumulated curses that I have seen springing from the presence of the saloon condemn that institution as the vilest influence that infests this world today."

LIQUOR DRINKING UNPATRIOTIC.

The American Lumberman well puts it thus:

"No longer is the appeal for total abstinence based upon emotional or even upon moral grounds. Drinking simply does not fit in with modern standards of efficiency, and the industrial world is the most bitter opponent that the liquor interests confront today. Since the United States entered into the war, the conviction also has grown that in view of the necessity for food conservation, as well as for the highest measure of production in all lines, indulgence in booze takes on an unpatriotic aspect."

A DIFFERENCE.

If infinite wisdom led Jesus to supply a demand for wine, reason compels the conclusion that prohibition is the product of infinite folly.—C. A. Windle, mouthpiece of the liquor interests.

If liquor dealers will confine themselves to such beverages as Jesus supplied, there will be no saloons, no drink problem, and Windle would be earning an honest living.—American Issue.

What shall it profit a nation to gain the revenue from booze and to lose the boys?

DUTY OF EVERYBODY TO HELP

Question Is Not Whether We Feel Like Subscribing, but Our People Must Spend or Be Spent.

By ALBERT BUSHNELL HART,
Of the Vigilantes.

Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof—so runs the legend on the Liberty bell, which by a favorite tradition pealed out to the world the tidings of the birth of the United States of America on that famous July 4, 1776. We thought that message had gone out once for all; that freedom in the United States was a rock of Gibraltar that could not be scaled nor penetrated nor moved. We have thought that the old days of national sacrifice and anxiety were forever passed. What so strong, so permanent, so vigorous, so dominant as government of the people in these United States?

If the American Revolution had been only bell ringing and the passage of resolutions, we should not now be the foremost republic of the world nor any other kind of a republic. The Declaration of Independence was a bold statement of liberty which had still to be made good. The heroes of the Revolution knew how to watch as well as to pray, how to march as well as to resolute. The Declaration of Independence is a mighty force in the world because when the country called soldiers sprang into the ranks. Liberty had to be spelled out by such big capital letters as Lexington, Illinois, Bennington, Eutaw, Rocky Mount, Trenton and Yorktown.

We Are Better Fortified.

The hard fighting in the field won only half the battle. Our forefathers were able to "proclaim liberty throughout the land" because they found the sinews of war. It was one thing to raise the flag, another to raise troops and still another to "raise the wind." There was not a bank in the United States till the Revolution was nearly over and few were the people who had money enough to lend to anybody, yet that 3,000,000, of whom a fourth were slaves who could have no property, somehow induced the people of the country to turn in their small surplus of provisions, clothing and military supplies and take for it the obligations of the government, which toward the end of the dark period of the Revolution seemed little likely ever to be paid. They furnished about $65,000,000 in taxes, contributions and supplies and at the end of the war the national debts incurred in behalf of the Revolution were, including arrears of interest, $70,000,000, which was then about $20 a head on the population, man, woman and child, whites, Indians and negroes, seamen, farmers, plantation slaves as they ran.

Must Spend or Be Spent.

Make no mistake; this is not a question of whether we feel like subscribing to a loan any more than a question of whether we feel like receiving news of a break on the war front and the capture or retreat of the American troops. The nation is compelled to choose either to spend or to be spent. There is only one possible way to end the war to the honor and safety of the United States and that is to fight for it. Our sons fight in the army, our daughters fight in the Red Cross, we elders must fight with safe deposit boxes and mortgage deeds and sheets of securities.

In the days when the French were in the habit of recruiting troops in Switzerland, there was a saying, "No money, no Swiss!" Nowadays it is, "No money, no Yank!" for unless you subscribe to the loan your son cannot be trained or equipped or fed or transported over seas or carried to the front or protected by a barrage of artillery fire or put where he can attack the enemy.

Remember the Liberty Bell.

The battle is going on from day to day in the national banks and the savings banks and the trust companies and the treasuries of the fraternities and the clubs and the churches and the restaurants just as much as in northern France or Belgium. No one soldier can win at the front nor a hundred thousand together. It would take a million, but if every one of that million hangs back, there is no army, no war, nothing but shame and misery for the nation. Just so, you cannot save your country all alone by your subscription to the third Liberty loan; but you can unite with a million others. Do your duty and expect and urge others to do theirs. That makes a victorious army of people pouring in their rattling dollars as the boys at the front hurl hand grenades.

"All the inhabitants thereof," that is what the Liberty bell aroused. Not the soldier only, not merely the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and the other noble co-workers and co-fighters with the troops. You plain farmer, you banker, investor, manufacturer; you doctor, lawyer, teacher, scientific man, engineer, business man, railroad man, mechanic, working man; you schoolboy and schoolgirl, listen to the Liberty bell, subscribe to the Liberty loan.

"OVER THE TOP"

BY AN AMERICAN SOLDIER WHO WENT

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

MACHINE GUNNER, SERVING IN FRANCE

©1917 BY ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

EMPEY LEARNS, AS COMRADE FALLS, THAT DEATH LURKS ALWAYS IN THE TRENCHES

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Little Wooden Cross.

After remaining in rest billets for eight days, we received the unwelcome tidings that the next morning we would "go in" to "take over." At six in the morning our march started and, after a long march down the dusty road, we again arrived at reserve billets.

I was No. 1 in the leading set of fours. The man on my left was named "Pete Walling," a cheery sort of fellow. He laughed and joked all the way on the march, buoying up my drooping spirits. I could not figure out anything attractive in again occupying the front line, but Pete did not seem to mind, said it was all in a lifetime. My left heel was blistered from the rubbing of my heavy marching boot. Pete noticed that I was limping and offered to carry my rifle, but by this time I had learned the ethics of the march in the British army and courteously refused his offer.

We had gotten half-way through the communication trench, Pete in my immediate rear. He had his hand on my shoulder, as men in a communication trench have to do to keep in touch with each other. We had just climbed over a bashed-in part of the trench when in our rear a man tripped over a loose signal wire, and let out an oath. As usual, Pete rushed to his help. To reach the fallen man he had to cross this bashed-in part. A bullet cracked in the air and I ducked. Then a moan from the rear. My heart stood still. I went back and Pete was lying on the ground. By the aid of my flashlight I saw that he had his hand pressed to his right breast. The fingers were covered with blood. I flashed the light on his face and in its glow a grayish-blue color was stealing over his countenance. Pete looked up at me and said: "Well, Yank, they've done me in. I can feel myself going West." His voice was getting fainter and I had to kneel down to get his words. Then he gave me a message to write home to his mother and his sweetheart, and I, like a great big boob, cried like a baby. I was losing my first friend of the trenches.

Word was passed to the rear for a stretcher. He died before it arrived. Two of us put the body on the stretcher and carried it to the nearest first-aid post, where the doctor took an official record of Pete's name, number, rank and regiment from his identity disk, this to be used in the casualty lists and notification to his family.

We left Pete there, but it broke our hearts to do so. The doctor informed us that we could bury him the next morning. That afternoon five of the boys of our section, myself included, went to the little ruined village in the rear and from the deserted gardens of the French chateaux gathered grass and flowers. From these we made a wreath.

While the boys were making this wreath, I sat under a shot-scarred apple tree and carved out the following verses on a little wooden shield which we nailed on Pete's cross.

True to his God; true to Britain,
  Doing his duty to the last,
Just one more name to be written
  On the Roll of Honor of heroes passed—

Passed to their God, enshrined in glory,
  Entering life of eternal rest,
One more chapter in England's story
  Of her sons doing their best.

Rest, you soldier, mate so true,
  Never forgotten by us below;
Know that we are thinking of you,
  Ere to our rest we are bidden to go.

Next morning the whole section went over to say good-by to Pete, and laid him away to rest.

After each one had a look at the face of the dead, a corporal of the R. A. M. C. sewed up the remains in a blanket. Then placing two heavy ropes across the stretcher (to be used in lowering the body into the grave), we lifted Pete onto the stretcher, and reverently covered him with a large union jack, the flag he had died for.

The chaplain led the way, then came the officers of the section, followed by two of the men carrying a wreath. Immediately after came poor Pete on the flag-draped stretcher, carried by four soldiers. I was one of the four. Behind the stretcher, in column of fours, came the remainder of the section.

To get to the cemetery, we had to pass through the little shell-destroyed village, where troops were hurrying to and fro.

As the funeral procession passed these troops came to the "attention" and smartly saluted the dead.

Now and again a shell from the German lines would go whistling over the village to burst in our artillery lines in the rear.

When we reached the cemetery we halted in front of an open grave, and laid the stretcher beside it. Forming a hollow square around the opening of the grave, the chaplain read the burial service.

German machine-gun bullets were "cracking" in the air above us, but Pete didn't mind, and neither did we.

When the body was lowered into the grave the flag having been removed, we clicked our heels together and came to the salute.

I left before the grave was filled in. I could not bear to see the dirt thrown on the blanket-covered face of my comrade. On the western front there are no coffins, and you are lucky to get a blanket to protect you from the wet and the worms. Several of the section stayed and decorated the grave with white stones.

That night, in the light of a lonely candle in the machine gunner's dugout of the front-line trench I wrote two letters. One to Pete's mother, the other to his sweetheart. While doing this I cursed the Prussian war god with all my heart; and I think that St. Peter noted same.

The machine gunners in the dugout were laughing and joking. To them Pete was unknown. Pretty soon, in the warmth of their merriment, my blues disappeared. One soon forgets on the western front.

CHAPTER IX.

Suicide Annex.

I was in my first dugout and looked around curiously. Over the door of same was a little sign reading "Suicide Annex." One of the boys told me that this particular front trench was called "Suicide Ditch." Later on I learned that machine gunners and bombers are known as the "Suicide Club."

That dugout was muddy. The men slept in mud, washed in mud, ate mud, and dreamed mud. I had never before realized that so much discomfort and misery could be contained in those three little letters, M U D. The floor of the dugout was an inch deep in water. Outside it was raining cats and dogs, and thin rivulets were trickling down the steps. From the air shaft immediately above me came a drip, drip, drip. Suicide Annex was a hole eight feet wide, ten feet long and six feet high. It was about twenty feet below the fire trench; at least there were twenty steps leading down to it. These steps were cut into the earth, but at that time were muddy and slippery. A man had to be very careful or else he would "shoot the chutes." The air was foul, and you could cut the smoke from Tommy's fags with a knife. It was cold. The walls and roof were supported with heavy square-cut timbers, while the entrance was strengthened with sandbags. Nails had been driven into these timbers. On each nail hung a miscellaneous assortment of equipment. The lighting arrangements were superb—one candle in a reflector made from an ammunition tin. My teeth were chattering from the cold, and the drip from the airshaft did not help matters much. While I was sitting bemoaning my fate and wishing for the fireside at home, the fellow next to me, who was writing a letter, looked up and innocently asked, "Say, Yank, how do you spell 'conflagration'?"

I looked at him in contempt and answered that I did not know.

"Pack up your Troubles in your Old Kit Bag, and Smile, Smile, Smile."

Every now and then the singer would stop to cough, cough, cough, but it was a good illustration of Tommy's cheerfulness under such conditions.

A machine-gun officer entered the dugout and gave me a hard look. I sneaked past him, sliding and slipping, and reached my section of the front-line trench, where I was greeted by the sergeant, who asked me, "Where in —— 'ave you been?"

I made no answer, but sat on the muddy fire step, shivering with the cold and with the rain beating in my face. About half an hour later I teamed up with another fellow and went on guard with my head sticking over the top. At ten o'clock I was relieved and resumed my sitting position on the fire step. The rain suddenly stopped and we all breathed a sigh of relief. We prayed for the morning and the rum issue.

CHAPTER X.

"The Day's Work."

I was fast learning that there is a regular routine about the work of the trenches, although it is badly upset at times by the Germans.

The real work in the fire trench commences at sundown. Tommy is like a burglar, he works at night.

Just as it begins to get dark the word "stand to" is passed from traverse to traverse, and the men get busy. The first relief, consisting of two men to a traverse, mount the fire step, one man looking over the top, while the other sits at his feet, ready to carry messages or to inform the platoon officer of any report made by the sentry as to his observations in No Man's Land. The sentry is not allowed to relax his watch for a second. If he is questioned from the trench or asked his orders, he replies without turning around or taking his eyes from the expanse of dirt in front of him. The remainder of the occupants of his traverse either sit on the fire step, with bayonets fixed, ready for any emergency, or if lucky, and a dugout happens to be in the near vicinity of the traverse, and if the night is quiet, they are permitted to go to same and try and snatch a few winks of sleep. Little sleeping is done; generally the men sit around, smoking fags and seeing who can tell the biggest lie. Some of them, perhaps with their feet in water, would write home sympathizing with the "governor" because he was laid up with a cold, contracted by getting his feet wet on his way to work in Woolwich arsenal. If a man should manage to doze off, likely as not he would wake with a start as the clammy, cold feet of a rat passed over his face, or the next relief stepped on his stomach while stumbling on their way to relieve the sentries in the trench.

Lewis Gun in Action.

Just try to sleep with a belt full of ammunition around you, your rifle bolt biting into your ribs, intrenching tool handle sticking into the small of your back, with a tin hat for a pillow and feeling very damp and cold, with "cooties" boring for oil in your armpits, the air foul from the stench of grimy human bodies and smoke from a juicy pipe being whiffed into your nostrils, then you will not wonder why Tommy occasionally takes a turn in the trench for a rest.

While in a front-line trench orders forbid Tommy from removing his boots, puttees, clothing or equipment. The "cooties" take advantage of this order and mobilize their forces, and Tommy swears vengeance on them and mutters to himself, "Just wait until I hit rest billets and am able to get my own back."

Just before daylight the men "turn to" and tumble out of the dugouts, man the fire step until it gets light, or the welcome order "stand down" is given. Sometimes before "stand down" is ordered, the command "five rounds rapid" is passed along the trench. This means that each man must rest his rifle on the top and fire as rapidly as possible five shots aimed toward the German trenches, and then duck (with the emphasis on the "duck"). There is a great rivalry between the opposing forces to get their rapid fire all off first, because the early bird, in this instance, catches the worm—sort of gets the jump on the other fellow, catching him unawares.

Empey goes "over the top" for the first time, and has a hand-to-hand fight with a giant Prussian. In the next installment he tells the story of this thrilling charge.

"HELP FEED YOURSELF"
U.S. DEPT. OF AGRICULTURE

FREQUENT CULTIVATION SHOULD BE GIVEN GARDEN VEGETABLES

These Boys Furnish Their Own Power for Their Home-Made Cultivator.

The first step in the cultivation and care of the garden lies in proper plowing, spading and preparation of the soil. The entire seedbed should be thoroughly pulverized as deep as the soil is plowed. The next step is to make sure that the rows are laid out perfectly straight and far enough apart so that when horse cultivation is employed there will be sufficient room for the horse to walk, and so that when hand cultivation is to be employed there will be room for the wheel hoe. Straight rows enable the gardener to give the crops better cultivation than would be otherwise possible.

Frequent shallow cultivation should be given garden crops. By keeping the surface of the soil stirred a dust mulch is formed, which prevents the loss of moisture. In this way weeds are prevented from getting a start.

Cultivate After Rains.

The soil should be cultivated as soon as dry enough after a rain, to break the crust and prevent baking. Sandy soils may be cultivated when quite wet, but clay soils should not be stirred when wet enough to cling together in a mass when lightly squeezed in the hand. Too much emphasis cannot be placed on the matter of thorough cultivation. If the work is properly done at the right time, there will be little difficulty in controlling weeds.

If the work is to be done with horse-drawn tools, the five-shovel cultivator is an excellent tool, as it breaks the surface thoroughly, destroying weeds very effectively, and leaves the ground fairly level.

The hand cultivator is a good implement, as it can be used for small growing vegetables and those planted too close for horse cultivation.

Hand Work Essential.

Some hand work is always essential, no matter how thoroughly the horse cultivation is done. It is a good plan to go over the garden after finishing with the cultivator and, by means of the hoe or rake, pull clods and stones from around the plants, remove any weeds not destroyed by the cultivation, and uncover any plants accidentally covered by clods or earth during the cultivation.

It is an excellent plan to train tomatoes, peas, etc., on stakes or other supports, as this makes it possible to keep the garden in good condition with a minimum of labor.

TO ERADICATE GARDEN PEST

Most Effective Method of Combating Nematode Gallworms Is to Starve It to Death.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The very serious losses caused by the gallworm nematode in gardens, especially in the South, have resulted in the trial of numerous methods of control. One of the most effective methods yet tested is to starve the pest. This may be accomplished by dividing the garden into two parts, one of which is available for cultivation, fowls being kept on the other half and changed from one to the other about every two to four years. The gallworm is absolutely dependent on the roots of the higher plants for its nourishment. If no such plants are allowed to grow, the pest is starved, and in the course of a year or two it can be brought to a stage where its ravages will not be serious.

Alternate Garden and Fowl Run.

The suggested alternation of fowl run with garden may be brought about simply by fencing in the fowls. If possible, it would be well to arrange the division of the land in the direction of its slope, so that the drainage will not be from the garden to the fowl run or vice versa. The idea is to keep the fowl run free from vegetation for a year or two. This means that about the maximum number of fowls for the area must be kept and that the soil must be occasionally spaded or otherwise stirred. This stirring of the soil is a good thing for the fowls and helps also to reduce the nematode pest, for every time the earth is spaded fresh soil is brought to the action of the sun and air and becomes more or less disinfected through their action on the eggs and larvae of the pest.

There are thousands of gardens where this procedure is practicable. Definite information with regard to the existence of the gallworm nematode may be obtained by submitting abnormal roots to the department of agriculture for examination.

HUMUS OF MUCH IMPORTANCE

Adds Plant Food and Makes It Available—It Supplies Media in Which Bacteria Live.

Humus adds plant food and makes plant food available. It supplies media in which the soil bacteria live and multiply, causing chemical changes in the soil which make the plant food elements soluble and available to plant roots. It enlivens the soil, giving good tilth and a texture favorable to soil aeration and to the absorption and holding of soil moisture.

Garden Peas Favorite Crop.

Garden peas are a favorite crop in the home garden, and as they are not injured easily by light frosts, they may be planted as soon as the soil can be put in order in the spring. By selecting a number of varieties it is possible to have a continuous supply of peas throughout a large portion of the growing season.

HORTIKULTUR

The weather never meets the specifications of the lazy gardener.

Little backs don't have to bend so far to get the weeds.

A drop of solder on the watering can? Efficiency plus.

PRUNE FRUIT-BEARING TREE

Attention Must Be Given to Removal of Wood as Well as to Height and Formation.

(From the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In pruning a fruit-bearing plant like the apple attention must be given not only to the height and formation of the head, but to the removal of wood as well. The apple bears its fruit on spurs which are themselves developed from wood one year or more of age. For that reason, therefore, the removal of wood which carries fruit spurs reduces the crop the tree is capable of bearing. This then, is a practicable way of thinning the fruit. Besides accomplishing this result pruning can be used to lessen the annual growth and force the energy of the plant which would naturally be used in making wood into the fruit, thus increasing its size or enabling the tree to carry a larger quantity than would be possible were a normal wood growth permitted.

MUCH PLANT FOOD IS LOST

Anywhere From Twenty to Sixty Per Cent of Fertilizer Is Wasted by Elements of Weather.

The results of experiments carried on by experiment stations in this country and Canada show that anywhere from twenty to sixty per cent of the real plant food contained in manure is lost where the manure is exposed to the leaching and wasting of the weather, for from two to eight months, as the manure on so many farms is allowed to be before being returned to the soil.

Planting Carrots.

Carrots planted in the early spring are used commonly in the fall as well as during the summer, but a much more tender product is obtained for fall and winter use if a second planting is made about June 15 to July 1.

Favorite Garden Plants.

Radishes and lettuce are favorite plants in small gardens because, while these are attractive additions to the table, they are in a way luxuries on which many housewives hesitate to spend money.

Phosphate Is Needed.

Such vegetables as beans, peas, radishes, cantaloupes, peppers, eggplant, etc., require considerable phosphate for satisfactory results. If possible it will pay on most soils to supplement the manure with acid phosphate.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE COYOTE BROTHERS.

"Of course," said the coyote, or prairie wolf, "there are creatures who don't like me."

"They aren't any fonder of me," said his brother, Jimmie Coyote.

Now the first speaker's name was Jackie Coyote and Jackie had quite a lot to say.

"Will you listen to me?" he asked of his brother.

"Certainly," said Jimmie. "I was listening to you before. If I had not been listening how could I have said that there were creatures who weren't any fonder of me than of you? That was because I had been paying attention to what you were saying."

"That's so," said Jackie. "Well, I'll be glad if you listen to me some more. I've lots to say to you."

"I will be delighted to," said Jimmie, barking quite happily.

"In the first place," said Jackie "there are some creatures, such as the prairie dogs for instance, who don't like us."

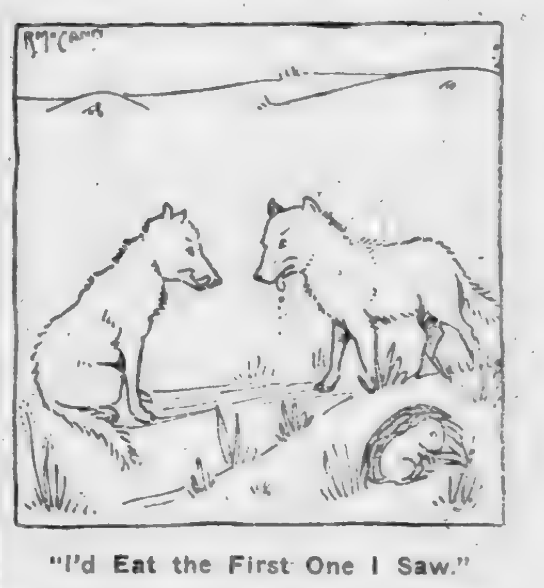
"Well, really," said Jimmie, "I can understand why the prairie dogs don't like us, can't you?"

"I suppose so," said Jackie, "but still it shows we appreciate them when we eat them up. We enjoy their tender little bodies."

"True," said Jimmie. "Yes, to hear you talk of them makes my mouth water. But still, the prairie dogs don't like to be eaten up. They're very fond of living. They don't care for our sort of appreciation."

"I suppose I can't blame them for that," said Jackie, "but still to hear you talk about how much they like to live, one would think you had turned over a new leaf and had decided never to eat one again. Is that so?"

"No!" barked Jimmie. "It's not true. I'd eat the first one I saw. But what do you mean about my turning over a new leaf? I haven't turned over any new leaf. I've not seen one—old or new—and if I did I wouldn't stop to turn it over. Leaves don't interest me."



"I'd Eat the First One I Saw."

"Turning over a new leaf," said Jackie, "means to begin over again the trying to be good."

"Oh, now, I understand," said Jimmie. "Well, I've done nothing like that, nor will I do anything like that if a prairie dog happens my way."

"I have left my story way behind," said Jackie. "I must continue where I left off."

"Pray do," said Jimmie.

"We had gone as far as the point where we both agreed that there were creatures who didn't like us, the coyote family, otherwise known as the prairie wolves. But again there are some who think quite well of us.

"We're smaller than the gray wolves, and the only time we're very good looking is in the autumn. The Mrs. Prairie Wolves are never very handsome.

"We aren't brave, for it's foolish to our minds to be brave. We don't want to get hurt. But we're wise, very wise.

"We always know whether the men have their guns or not. They say it is surprising how we always know it. And if they haven't their guns we're quite friendly.

"Of course we like to do our own little bit of hunting, but when it comes to being hunted, and with guns which always aim so straight—well, that's an entirely different question."

"It is, indeed," said Jimmie. "You have given a true story of the habits and ways of the coyote or prairie wolf. And I like to hear about myself and yourself and all of our relations."

"It's a fact," said Jackie, "that all creatures like to hear about themselves. And it's true of the coyote, too."

"Hark! Hark! Do I hear some prairie dogs in the distance?" asked Jimmie.

"You certainly have good ears," said Jackie, "and most certainly you have not turned over a new leaf."

"Let's go and see," said Jimmie.

So the Coyote brothers went off a hunting but on this trip they were not what they called "fortunate," which meant that the prairie dogs were fortunate and escaped a most untimely end.

And Jackie and Jimmie had to have another kind of a supper.

Which Was Lazy?

A surly looking dog sat in a wood watching a squirrel frolic in the trees above. At last the squirrel playfully threw a nut at him and the dog thereupon said:

"I've sat here for two hours watching you, and you have not done a single stroke of work."

"Why, what a lazy dog you must be," replied the squirrel, "if you've spent two hours watching me."

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

CAMP SHERIDAN,
MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 16.

DEAR PARENTS:—

I received your letter the other day, and will write a few lines to let you know that I am well.

We go on a 15-mile hike, starting tomorrow. We go to the aviation field and will be gone five days. We went to the artillery range and pitched pup tents and stayed all night. We went into the trenches from 7 till 9 p. m., and then from 11:30 till morning. My! but it was a cold night. In the morning at 7:15, we made a charge over the top. We had blank cartridges and were shooting all night. I have five clips left.

We were issued new Remington Enfield rifles yesterday. They are not so good as our old Springfields.

Dewey was over here a week ago Sunday to see me. An Italian got drunk and was going to kill Louis Ayres, brother of Donald, Sunday. Well, the fellow is in the guard house now.

I have not got my transfer yet, but will try hard to get it, so that I can be over there with Dewey and Karl.

Well, I must close for this time. With love from your son,

U. S ARMY HOSPITAL,
April 10, 1918.

DEAR MOTHER AND ALL —

Today is a very gloomy one; or, I should say, stormy one, and the wind is blowing fierce. However, everything is on the move here, as is everybody. We received 104 more overseas wounded last evening, and a horrid mess they were. I am glad that I have nothing to do with the care of them. And the stories they have to relate are some hair raisers.

The hospitals are about all finished, except our gymnasium; and soon we will be able to receive about 1,500 patients at a time. You see, this is a receiving station, where every wounded man from France will be put before sending him to some permanent hospital. Thirty-two of those coming in last evening will be sent to the government hospital at Baltimore, and I may have a chance to go along with the guards who take them. I told the captain that I have relatives there, and he said I would surely get to go, either this time or the next, and he would give me seventy-two hours there. That will be fine.

Last evening, our medical non-com. school started, and I am a member. There are 34 of us, who were chosen out of 212; and I intend working hard for results. It lasts three weeks, and is solely for the purpose of teaching us the duties of a non-com. officer. There is not a man on this island but I know where he is detailed and what hours he works, which is a great help to the officers here when they want to know where this or that man is; and I have been complimented on it.

I saw Mary Pickford yesterday afternoon in the Liberty Loan parade. I was over on a detail to the public board of health, and had the afternoon off; and therefore viewed the parade. It was a monstrous affair, believe me.

Altogether, I think this is a wonderful place and I like it fine, because I know all the fellows and like my assignment; and, in time, if nothing happens, I will have charge of a detail, which will mean a permanent corporalship; and this is true, because the captain said that I should take the course of detailing in the non-com. school and he wants me to make good.

Write whenever you have time, and believe me perfectly happy and contented. Your son,

PAUL CURIE.

Pension Granted

Mrs. Della Minnick, LaGrange, will receive a pension dating from May 21, 1917. Some time ago, she wrote to Congressman Fairfield, asking his assistance in her case, and she has just been notified that her claim has been granted. During the past year, Mr. Fairfield has been of assistance to more than fifty pensioners in securing favorable action on their claims through the office of the commissioner of pensions. He has been of service to a number of his constituents and has proven himself a very able and capable representative. During his term in congress, Mr. Fairfield has been among the most loyal, supporting every necessary measure for the prosecution of the war and for the safety and welfare of the country.

SATAN AND THE KAISER

There's a story now current, though strange it may seem,
Of old Kaiser Bill and his wonderful dream.
Being tired of the Allies, he lay down in bed
And, amonst other things, dreamt he was dead
And in a fine coffin was lying in state,
With a guard of dead Germans, who shared his sad fate.

On leaving the earth, he to Paradise went
And knocked at the gate, on entering bent;
But St. Peter looked out and in voice loud and clear
Said: "Begone, Kaiser Bill, we won't have you here!"
"Dear me," said the Kaiser, "that's very uncivil:
I suppose after that I must go to the devil."

So he turned on his heel and off he did go
At the top of his speed to the regions below;
But when he got there, he was filled with dismay,
For, while waiting outside, he heard Old Nick say:
"Now, look here, boys, I give you good warning,
I'm expecting the Kaiser down here in the morning.

"But don't let him in, for to me it's quite clear
He's a very bad man, and we don't want him here.
If once he gets in, there'll be no end of quarrels.
In fact, I'm afraid he will corrupt our morals."

"O Satan, dear friend," the Kaiser then cried,
"Excuse me for listening whilst waiting outside.
If you can't admit me, why where can I go?"
"Indeed," said the devil, "I really don't know."
"Let me sit in a corner, no matter how hot"
"No, no," said the devil, "most certainly not.
We don't admit people for riches or pelf—
Here are sulphur and matches—make a hell for yourself!"

Then he kicked William out and vanished in smoke,
But just at that moment the Kaiser awoke.
He jumped out of bed in a shivering sweat
And exclaimed: "Well, that dream I shall never forget.
That I can't go to heaven, I know very well;
But it's really too bad to be kicked out of hell!"

BRAINSTORM

THE sanctimonious sinner who points hellward on week days and heavenward on Sunday is the best emissary the devil has on earth.

THE devil can quote scripture as glibly as any divine, when it suits his purpose. This is to be expected from one whose sole purpose is to deceive. Now comes the wholesale liquor dealers and outdo the devil himself. In a booklet, just out, they misinterpret the words and acts of Christ to show, by inference, at least, that He was opposed to prohibition. This is a hopeful sign: it shows that the liquor forces, having exhausted every other means of combatting reform, have adopted the weapon of their commander-in-chief, the devil; that, in desperation, they are making a "last ditch" fight.

NEXT week, in this column, will appear the veracious tale of the sad life and tragic fate of Sorrowful Jones and Docile Jones, his wife; and how the love dreams of Dolores Jones, their grand-daughter, were painted in any but fast colors and faded. The whole is the story of a man who, in the rapturous imbecility of a Newlywed, starts out to impart to his friends the joyous intelligence of his marriage over a St. Joe helephone; and, weighed down by sorrows, dies at the age of 87 still on the job. There also will be narrated the woes of the non-directing director, who serves for nothing and isn't required to pay any more phone rent than other subscribers.

A CERTAIN editor residing about seven miles east of St. Joe advertised cigarettes, and then salved his conscience and squared himself with his patrons (perhaps) by confessing his sin and promising to do so no more—after his contract had expired and sinning had become unprofitable. Now—oh! how the "root of all evil" flourishes in avaricious hearts—this same editor is advertising "That's It," a near beer and a favorite beverage with the thirsty ones that no longer can secure the wet goods "that made Milwaukee famous." Another confession and another contrite promise of amendment are due; and then he will feel free to sin again. He has the nerve to try anything ONCE —IF there a few plunks in sight. When the next Sunday school picnic is held, Brother Snufflberger should take along a case of the "rare, sparkling, carbonated temperance food-drink" that is "gloriously welcome the moment you drink a bottle" for his class; and if he find a boy out in the bushes or behind a tree smoking a Smudge & Punk cigarette, he need not be surprised: the lad will be reaping what his Sunday school taught him to sow.

Identification Medals

The Knights of Pythias of Indiana are providing identification medals for soldier boys belonging to the order. Each member in the army will carry one. In case of accident, it will establish the bearer's identity as a member of the order when he is unable to make the fact known to brother members. Each has on one side K. of P. emblems and on the other the name of the person carrying it and the number of the lodge to which he belongs. St. Joe lodge, No. 400, has sent medals to the following members: Roy E. Maxwell, Argyl Sechler, Vern R. Monroe, Harry Shuff, Paul E. Curie, Clark T. Scholes and Zay J. Sailer.

Two Names Are Omitted

In the list of Concord township boys serving in the army, published last week, two names were omitted—Paul Maxwell and Argyl Sechler. This was the result of an oversight. "Meese" was given instead of "Meek" in the name of Leslie Meek, another oversight.

RAISE THE LIMIT.

EVERY farmer who has access to a pile of stable manure or who keeps live stock on his farm should have a good manure spreader, a Corn King, this year. Do not let power and help conditions keep you from raising as much as you can on every acre. Use a Low Corn King spreader and either fertilize your fields before planting or top drhss your growing crops this year. There is no easier surer, or better way to secure a paying increase in crops from every acre you plant. How would a 30 bushel to the acre increase in corn or 10 bushel in wheat, look to you this year? All right, then buy and use a

Low Corn King Manure Spread'r

Wheels just the right distance apart; spread wide enough to top dress three rows of corn at once. Three sizes—small, medium and large. All narrow boxes. All steel frames, with working parts of spreader securely attached to the frame. Turns short. Drive from both rear wheels. Return apron driven by worm gear, which insures even spreading up hill and down. Pull comes straight on steel frame. Solid two-inch rear axel, working in roller bearings carries 75 per cent. of the load. All-steel beater can not warp, shrink or rot. Built up to International Harvester standards of quality in every respect.

Bay a Corn King spreader and use it. The increased yield from a few acres will pay for your spreader this year. Place your order now.

HUN SLAUGHTER WAS GREAT

First Lieutenant Pettit of Ottawa, in Letter to His Father Gives Details of Battle in Which British Fought at Great Odds.

The thrilling story of the Haig retreat in the terrific battle in Picardy is most interestingly detailed by First Lieutenant Roswell T. Pettit, M. O. R. C., of Ottawa, Ill., in a letter to his father, Dr. J. W. Pettit of the Ottawa tuberculosis colony, and published in the Chicago Tribune. For nine days the American officer was in the thickest of the fighting, and during the retreat of the British Fifth army from before St. Quentin. His account of the battle thrills with the stress of the herculean conflict, as it was detailed immediately after he had passed through the terrible experience and before his impressions had been dulled by time. His letter:

Lieutenant Pettit's Letter.

March 30.

Dear Father: Now that the show is over for me for the time being, and I have time to breathe and sleep and eat and write, I'll try and tell you about the battle. Before you receive this you will have had the whole story from the papers, but I know you will be interested in knowing what I did in the affair.

Of course, the things I saw were but an infinitesimal part of a gigantic whole and it would be impossible for me to give a correct description of the battle. And as I write this, I do it with no knowledge whatever of what has been going on even a few miles from me.

I have not seen a paper in eight days; I have received no mail, and the only information we have received has been by word of mouth, and most of what we hear must be wild rumors. For example: The French have advanced 20 miles at Verdun, the Americans have taken Ostend, and are on their way to Zeebrugge, and a great naval battle has been fought in the North sea.

All I know is that on this part of the front the Germans attacked us in overwhelming numbers, in places ten divisions to our one; that they suffered terrible losses, but finally broke through our lines of defense, one after another, and fighting for the most part, a rear guard action, we have retired about 15 miles in a straight line.

For a week before the battle started we had been expecting it; we were ready to move on 30 minutes' notice. I had been out with combatant as well as medical officers on tours of reconnaissance, definite methods of evacuation of the wounded had been worked out, and our plans of counter-attack been made. After four or five days of waiting, the storm finally broke.

The Boche opened up on us at 5 a. m., March 21, with the heaviest barrage I have ever heard. "Stand to," was sounded, we turned out dressed, and had all our equipment packed in 30 minutes. Then we sat down and waited for orders to move. The barrage kept up continuously, sometimes heavier and then of less intensity, sometimes it seemed to be to the north of us and then suddenly it switched to the south.

Our balloons were up as soon as it was light and the airplanes were buzzing over our heads. The ground mist gradually cleared and the Germans put a hail of shrapnel on our camp and we all took cover, but three men were hit. Why it is a fellow always feels safer with a roof over his head, even if he knows bullets and shrapnel and pieces of shell will go through boards and corrugated iron just like paper.

Ordered to Move.

Our orders to move finally came and we marched off to the brigade assembly point several miles away. This assembly point was in a little bunch of trees about the size of Allen park and behind and separated from a larger wood in front. In the larger wood there was a battery of heavy artillery and shells were dropping in there two or three to a minute, and it was heavy stuff, too.

Sometimes they overshot the big wood and shells were landing in the open around the little wood where my brigade had its assembly point. As we approached our little copse we could make all this out from some distance away and it wasn't a pleasant sensation to feel that we were marching straight into it.

All the battalions arrived and in that little copse there must have been at least two thousand men. What a chance if the Germans only knew! But the shells continued to drop in front of us and on either side, but none landed among us, and after waiting there for three hours, expecting to be blown to bits any second, we finally moved forward. Just as we left the copse, from behind us, up over a ridge, came a stream of galloping horses.

"It's the cavalry," someone shouted, but soon I made out limbers and field guns.

They galloped past us, going like mad, took up a position to our right, swung into position, unlimbered, and in two minutes were blazing away. It was a thrilling sight.

Torn by Shells.

In going forward we went around the end of the larger wood in front of us, over ground that was torn to bits by the heavy shell fire that had just preceded, over another edge, across a valley, and under the crest of a hill. And here we found the tanks going over the top of the hill to take up their position. At this point we were still about a mile from the front line.

At this place I opened up an aid post under the crest of the hill to take care of what wounded came in while we were getting into position. I looked back across the valley we had just traversed.

Shrapnel was bursting in the air, shells were whizzing overhead, and our guns behind me were belching forth the fire. The noise was deafening.

A railroad ran through the valley and an engine pulling a couple of flat cars was going by. A couple of soldiers were sitting on the rear truck swinging their feet. A shell burst on the track and only missed the last car about fifteen yards. Neither man was hit and the train went blithely on.

By this time it was getting along toward evening, the sun was sinking in the west, and finally went down a great ball of fire. At the time, I remember, I noticed its color. It was blood red and had a sinister look. Was it my imagination, or might it have been a premonition? At any rate, I shall never forget the color of the sun as it set that night at the end of the first day of probably one of the greatest battles in history. It certainly didn't look good to me.

The drumming of the guns continued, twilight gradually deepened into night, the signalers stopped their wig-wagging and took up their flash signals, a fog dropped down on us and put the lights out of business, and when we left to go forward under the cover of darkness they were busy putting out their telephone lines—signalers and runners don't have an easy time.

Shell Dump Goes Up.

Behind us a shell landed in an ammunition dump and it went up with a roar; then the rifle ammunition started going off like a great bunch of firecrackers, and great tongues of flame lit up the sky.

It is reported that the Germans had broken through our line and we were to counter-attack in the morning. We got into positions without a single casualty. I opened an aid post in an old dugout and settled down to sleep until morning. You may think it funny that one could sleep under such conditions, but I had been up since 5:30, had tramped about six or seven miles, had had a rather trying day and was dog tired.

So I settled down on the rough plank floor and was soon asleep. I must have been asleep a couple of hours when a runner came from headquarters and told us we were to move off immediately. I looked at my watch and it was 1:30 a. m. on the second day.

We went back to the railroad, followed it around to a position some six miles to the north of us, landing there about 4 in the morning and flopped down on the floor of some abandoned huts to wait further orders. Our orders came along about 9 o'clock. We marched up across the open prairie, the sun shining, and it was really hot.

Just like some of the warm days we get the last of March at home. In going forward it was necessary for us to march seventy-five yards in front of three batteries of field guns. There are six guns to a battery. They shoot an eighteen-pound shell and while we were there each gun was shooting twice to the minute. You can imagine the racket when I tell you that the discharge of one gun can be heard about four miles. In addition the Boche was trying to knock out this battery and he was dropping his six inch shells a little too close for comfort.

Nearly in a Trap.

Then I made a lovely mistake. I was to establish an aid post near battalion headquarters and went blithely on when I met a company commander and asked him where to go.

"Back there about a quarter of a mile," he replied. "This is the front center company. If you keep on in the direction you are going you are going up over that ridge and Fritz will be waiting for you with a machine gun."

So my sergeant and orderly and myself didn't waste any time in clearing. On the way back I found a gallon can full of water, got into a corrugated iron shelter and had a wash and a shave. It certainly felt good. I don't believe I had washed for thirty-six hours. It was warm and bright. I could look out of my shelter and see our support lines digging themselves in several hundred yards away. The cannon fire ceased, the machine guns settled down to an occasional fitful burst and it was midday of a beautiful spring day.

A couple of partridge flew over me. What did they know or care about all this noise and racket and men getting up in line and killing each other?

Along about three o'clock things began to liven up again. In the meantime headquarters had been established in a sunken road with banks about fifteen feet high on either side (later this cut was half filled with dead). My aid post was in a dugout near by and gradually things got hotter and hotter.

Our men had dug themselves in and were popping away with their rifles. The field batteries behind us were putting up a barrage, airplanes were circling overhead, both ours and the Germans'. The Germans put up a counter-barrage, the machine guns were going like mad. I was standing with the colonel on a little rise of ground above the sunken road when the Germans broke through about a mile to the north of us. They could be plainly seen pouring over the ridge in close formation.

Tanks Get Into Action.

Then the tanks came up, and you should have seen them run! Just like rabbits! The tanks retired; the Boches reformed and came at it again. They tell me that at certain places our men withstood fifteen successive attacks and that the Germans went down in thousands. One Welshman told me that his gun accounted for 75 in three minutes during one wave.

Machine-gun bullets were nipping around me, the shell fire was getting hotter, and even though it was a wonderful sight to watch I decided "discretion was the better part of valor," or something like that, and got down in my dugout.

I was sitting there smoking a cigarette when my orderly came down and said I was being relieved and was to go back and work with the ambulance. Fifteen hours later the man that relieved me was captured. But I am getting ahead of my story.

I went back to the advanced dressing station through the hottest shell fire I ever experienced. More than once I went down on my face when a shell burst and the pieces went whizzing over my head. I spent the night in a mined village where the advanced dressing station was located, and all night they shelled it to blazes. It was remarkable how few casualties we had.

About eleven o'clock the morning of the third day a shell blew in the side of our post, but luckily no one was hurt. We stuck to it until about four in the afternoon, when we saw our men retiring over a ridge in front of us, keeping up a continuous machine gun and rifle fire, and we beat it back to another village and opened another post.

The Begrimed Lord.

About ten o'clock on the morning of the fourth day Lord Thyme, my colonel when I was with the battalion, stumbled into the shack where I was sitting. He looked like a ghost. He had lost his hat, his face was covered with a four days' beard, the sweat had traced tracks in the dust from his forehead to his chin. His sleeve was torn and bloody and he had a gash in his arm where he had been struck by a piece of flying shell case.

"My God, doc, are you here?" he said. "You got out just in time. The battalion is all gone. The sunken road is filled with dead—mostly Huns, damn 'em. The line broke on the right; we were surrounded, and at the last we were fighting back and back. Only thirty of us got away."

So we knew the Boche had broken through to our right and our left, and it was a question of how long it would be before we, too, were surrounded, but we wanted to stick it out as long as we could.

But not more than an hour later a medical officer rushed in from one of the battalions and between gasps for breath told us the Germans were on the edge of the village, had shot him through the sleeve with a machine gun bullet (luckily that was all), and for us to beat it.

The ninth day, sitting around the fire in our mess after the best dinner we had had in days, the commanding officer handed me some papers and said, "Here is something that will interest you, Pettit. I want to say we shall be sorry to lose you."

And this is what it was: "Lieut. Roswell T. Pettit, M. R. C., is relieved from duty with the British army and will proceed to the A. E. F., where he will report for duty."

I leave for Paris in the morning. This has been a long tale, but the half of it hasn't been told. I hope I haven't strung it out too much.

I have just been informed that all my kit had to be burned to prevent it falling into the hands of the enemy. I shall probably want you to send me some things from home, but will see what I can get here first. Your son,

ROSWELL.

Money Is Life.

Money is no more the "root of evil" than are the good things that it represents, whether these take the form of personal service, labor, or the material products of labor. Money means work, it means production, it means the things that have been made by men's brains and hands. It not only stands for the things we eat, the clothes we wear, and the houses we live in, but it stands for works of art and for the services of the artists. It means the services of the entertaining writer in the form of books. It means the pleasure-giving efforts of the musician in the opera or concert. It means musical instruments for the home, educational opportunities in the schools, publicity in the press, inspiration in the church, fun and emotional relaxation in the theater, police protection on our streets and justice in our courts. Money means cleanliness, good appearance, self-respect. Money is the source of good just as it may be the source of evil, but in either case only because of what it stands for. And so, as somebody's great-grandfather used to say, "If money is the root of al evil, give us plenty of the root!"—Physical Culture.

How the Cats Went.

Little Frank had an amusing way of imitating the mewing of cats, so one night, when there was company at dinner, his father asked him how the cats went.

"On their feet," was the unexpected reply.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Indianapolis.—A number of Indiana counties already have reported a 100 per cent registration of women for war work in the campaign which started in Indiana April 19 under the direction of the woman's section of the state council of defense. Other county chairmen have reported that townships in their counties have completed registration and that the counties will soon follow. Arrangements have been made in some counties for the registration to continue until every woman has had an opportunity to register. More than 750,000 registration cards have gone to county chairmen and about 100,000 more are on their way. Members of the woman's section are gratified at the results of the registration and predict a 100 per cent registration in the state. No difficulty has been experienced in persuading women to register, as most of them consider registration a patriotic duty.

Indianapolis.—All of the milk dealers in the city have signed the agreement prepared by Stanley Wyckoff, food administrator for Marion county, fixing a schedule of prices for milk for May and June. The prices are now in effect. A new schedule will be prepared to take effect the 1st of July, based on conditions at that time, Wyckoff said. The schedule now in effect is as follows: Retail milk, delivered to consumers: Quarts, 11 cents; pints 6 cents; half-pints cream, 11 cents; pints cream, 20 cents; buttermilk, 7 cents a quart. Wholesale bottled milk: Quarts, 10 cents; pints, 5 cents; half-pints cream, 10 cents; pints cream, 18 cents; buttermilk, 6 cents a quart. Wholesale, in cans: Milk, 30 cents a gallon; cream, $1.15 a gallon.

Crawfordsville.—Two Indiana men are officers in the One Hundred and Fourth United States infantry, which has received the French cross of war as a unit for gallantry in action and which is the first American regiment fighting in the war against Germany and Austria to be so honored. Dispatches from the American army headquarters in France told of the conferring of the decoration, a few miles behind the trenches. Heretofore, only individuals in different units have succeeded in winning the coveted honor. Paul L. Deverter and Paul R. McCampbell, both of Crawfordsville and both holding the rank of first lieutenant in the officers' reserves corps, are the Hoosiers attached to the unit.

Indianapolis.—Granulated sugar sales in Indianapolis recently were placed under the ban for one week. There will be no shortage, however, as there is plenty of soft white sugar to supply the trade. Stanley Wyckoff, Marion county food administrator, issued the new sugar ruling, following a conference with a number of jobbers and wholesale grocers. There is no national shortage of granulated sugar, it was announced, but the local scarcity brought about by the fact that consumers have not been buying soft sugar to any great extent and also by the fact that large consignments of granulated sugar have been diverted to government bases for army and navy use.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana Golf association will hold its championship tournament here this year during the week of July 22. No official announcement of the plans for the event has been made by the officers in charge, but it is known that the affair will be out of the ordinary this season and that the Red Cross will benefit. Play will be over the course of the Indianapolis Country club, which organization had its invitation accepted by the association.

Anderson.—The forty-first annual convention of the Indiana Music Teachers' association closed here with the reelection of R. G. McCutchan of Greencastle, dean of music at DePauw university, president of the association; Glenn M. Tindall, director of the School of Music at Kokomo, was re-elected secretary, and Mrs. J. G. Daly, president of the Music Study club of Anderson, was chosen treasurer.

Ft. Wayne.—Preparations are being made by Mayor Cutshall and Chief of Police Abbott to carry out an order from Washington requiring the registration of all women aliens in this city. It is not thought there were more than 600 alien women in Ft. Wayne. It is alleged that many of the men aliens ignored the registration order and it is thought there may be similar instances among the women.

Seymour.—Corn planting was stopped temporarily in Jackson county on account of continued rains and cool weather. Farmers say that seed would not sprout until the weather is warmer. In the high sand districts plowing has been resumed. Practically all the farmers have obtained seed for this year's planting. Agricultural leaders say that the scarcity of seed this spring will result in a large percentage of farmers selecting seed ears in the fall instead of the spring hereafter.

Oakland City.—The Ayrshire Coal company, owners of the system of big mines east of this city, has placed armed guards at the openings of No. 4 mine. Enemy activities, believed to be due to German sympathy, prompted the action. Recently several attempts were made to wreck the electric motors of the mine.

South Bend.—Dairy cattle are being killed in St. Joseph county at an alarming rate, according to County Agent John S. Bordner. An investigation reveals that there has been a decline of 20 per cent in the number of dairy cattle over last year.

Lafayette.—Do not set out tomato plants until you are sure the cold weather is gone; is a bit of advice offered by F. C. Gaylord of the Purdue university extension department, state garden leader. If they have to endure a long cold spell their growth is stunted, or if hit by a frost they will be killed, and just the number of plants lost this way reduces food production that much. Last year millions of plants were set out prematurely and were killed by frost. Plant the cabbage, kohlrabi and cauliflower now, but keep the tomato, eggplant and sweet potatoes until you are doubly sure that the time for cool weather and frost has passed. Then the ground will be warm, the soil in good condition and the plants will start a vigorous growth immediately. Such plants will produce earlier and much larger crops than runts set previously under more unfavorable conditions, says Mr. Gaylord. In buying plants from the grower or groceryman be sure to get stalky, vigorous, good-sized plants, which have been properly hardened off.

Indianapolis.—Records kept by the Indiana state fire marshal show that 17 persons were burned to death in Indiana during the month of March. Kerosene and gasoline caused the death of nine, making a total of 18 persons, whose lives have been lost through the use or careless handling of these liquids since January 1 in the state. Eight of the 17 deaths in March were caused by other fires. Of a total of 29 badly injured by fire during March, gasoline and kerosene were responsible for the injuries suffered by seven persons, and other fires account for injuries to 22 people. A very large percentage of the deaths and injuries that occurred from causes other than kerosene and gasoline was the result of clothing becoming ignited from bonfires and trash fires.

Washington, D. C.—The federal food administration announced that a number of Indiana dealers in green coffee failed to file their applications for licenses before February 4, the date specified in the President's proclamation, and are being penalized for their failure to do so. All licenses of the food administration are warned that they are prohibited from dealing with dealers or importers of green coffee who have failed to obtain licenses as required by the President's proclamation. Those who failed to file their applications in time and are being penalized are: P. H. Carl Grocery company, New Albany; John B. Bright & Son, Indianapolis; J. F. Bruning & Son, Evansville; Andrew Firmhold, Indianapolis; George J. Hammel, Indianapolis; Klattstokes Coffee company, Terre Haute; Hoosier Coffee company, Inc., Indianapolis.

Valparaiso.—John A. Jewel, who is awaiting trial in the Porter county jail here on a charge of murdering his wife, has confessed to Sheriff William Forney, that he is the "Scarred Face Riley," who was one of the central figures in the kidnapping and murder of Floyd Keet, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Holland Keet of Springfield, Mo. In his confession to the sheriff Jewel claims he went to Springfield to assist in breaking a strike there. He said that he met Dick Carter and the kidnapping of the Keet child was planned. Jewel offers to give his daughter, two years old, to the Keets to adopt and promises to reveal the name of the woman who is alleged to have fed the baby laudanum while it was a captive. His trial here is entered on the docket for June 12.

Jeffersonville.—The farm labor and seed corn problems in Clark county remain serious, but will both be met, says H. A. Stevens, county agricultural agent. Some farmers, he says, undoubtedly will be caught without good seed corn, but he believes for the most part it will be their own fault through neglect. The hue and cry for good seed has, on the other rand, made many farmers who heretofore took seed as it came give close attention to the matter. As to labor, Stevens says he has found a number of farmers who were used to employing labor this time of the year, but who say they will get along without because the exceptionally favorable season has permitted them to get an unusually early start.

Lafayette.—Camp Purdue here, where 509 Indiana young men are preparing themselves to help the United States crush the German autocracy in war, is now down to routine work. The object of the school is to train the military regristrants to serve as expert motortruck drivers and repair men, and they are getting intensive training in shops and laboratories of Purdue university, as well as having an abundance of military training. About seventy-five automobiles and army trucks are being used.

Gary.—Lake county is the first of the larger units in Indiana to double its minimum quota in the third Liberty Loan campaign to finance the government of the United States in the world war. An announcement was made that the sale of bonds amounted to $6,661,300. The county's quota was $3,000,000.

Indianapolis.—Revised coal prices at Indiana mines were announced through the office of the state fuel administration upon receipt of an order from Federad Fuel Administrator Garfield. The new prices range from $1.70 a on for screenings to $2.20 a ton for prepared sizes, outside of the Brazil block field. The price fixed for screenings in this field are the same, but $2.95 is fixed for mine run coal and $3.25 for prepared sizes. Mine run from other fields in the state will sell at $2 a ton. The order provides an addition of 45 cents a ton under the terms of President Wilson's order, issued last October.

SENTIMENT ALL RIGHT, BUT—

Youngster's Reason for Buying Carnations Knocked All Pathos Out of the Incident.

He was a poorly dressed youngster of perhaps fourteen years.

His trousers were shabby, and there was only one button on his thin coat. He wasn't tall enough to push through the crowd of women around the bargain counter where fresh carnations were on sale at two cents each.

Finally a saleswoman saw the grimy hand reaching out, with six moist pennies and a shiny dime in it, and in answer to his "I want eight, please, all colors," he received an assortment of pink, red and white flowers, all showing more or less the effect of rough handling.

A woman who stood near by built up a pretty little story about him. She was certain he was a little newsboy, and that the flowers were for his mother, who probably was ill in a free hospital.

Tenderly the child adjusted the tissue paper around the carnations, and a queer little smile curved his lips. "Are your pretty flowers for your mother, little boy?" asked the sentimental bystander.

"Naw," answered the youth with an impish grin, "they're for my girl."

Sounds Menial.

"Here is a nice assignment I have." "What is it?" "I'm to cover the backyard garbage can."

"OVER THE TOP"

By An American Soldier Who Went

Arthur Guy Empey

Machine Gunner, Serving in France

Copyright 1917, by Arthur Guy Empey

EMPEY GOES "OVER THE TOP" FOR THE FIRST TIME AND HAS DESPERATE HAND-TO-HAND FIGHT

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches.

We had a sergeant in our battalion named Warren. He was on duty with his platoon in the fire trench one afternoon when orders came up from the rear that he had been granted seven days' leave for Blighty, and would be relieved at five o'clock to proceed to England.

He was tickled to death at these welcome tidings and regaled his more or less envious mates beside him on the fire step with the good times in store for him. He figured it out that in two days' time he would arrive at Waterloo station, London, and then—seven days' bliss!

At about five minutes to five he started to fidget with his rifle, and then suddenly springing up on the fire step with a muttered, "I'll send over a couple of souvenirs to Fritz so that he'll miss me when I leave," he stuck his rifle over the top and fired two shots when "crack" went a bullet and he tumbled off the step, fell into the mud at the bottom of the trench, and lay still in a huddled heap with a bullet hole in his forehead.

At about the time he expected to arrive at Waterloo station he was laid to rest in a little cemetery behind the lines. He had gone to Blighty.

In the trenches one can never tell—it is not safe to plan very far ahead.

After "stand down" the men sit on the fire step or repair to their respective dugouts and wait for the "rum issue" to materialize. Immediately following the rum comes breakfast, brought up from the rear. Sleeping is then in order unless some special work turns up.

Around 12:30 dinner shows up. When this is eaten the men try to amuse themselves until "tea" appears at about four o'clock, then "stand to" and they carry on as before.

While in rest billets Tommy gets up about six in the morning, washes up, answers roll call, is inspected by his platoon officer, and has breakfast. At 8:45 he parades (drills) with his company or goes on fatigue according to the orders which have been read out by the orderly sergeant the night previous.

Between 11:30 and noon he is dismissed, has his dinner and is "on his own" for the remainder of the day, unless he has clicked for a digging or working party, and so it goes on from day to day, always "looping the loop" and looking forward to peace and Blighty.

Sometimes, while engaged in a "cootie" hunt, you think. Strange to say, but it is a fact, while Tommy is searching his shirt serious thoughts come to him. Many a time, when performing this operation, I have tried to figure out the outcome of the war and what will happen to me.

My thoughts generally ran in this channel:

Will I emerge safely from the next attack? If I do will I skin through the following one, and so on? While your mind is wandering into the future it is likely to be rudely brought to earth by a Tommy interrupting with, "What's good for rheumatism?"

Then you have something else to think of. Will you come out of this war crippled and tied into knots with rheumatism, caused by the wet and mud of trenches and dugouts? You give it up as a bad job and generally saunter over to the nearest estaminet to drown your moody forebodings in a glass of sickening French beer or to try your luck at the always present game of "house." You can hear the sing-song voice of a Tommy droning out the numbers as he extracts the little squares of cardboard from the bag between his feet.

CHAPTER XI.

Over the Top.

On my second trip to the trenches our officer was making his rounds of inspection, and we received the cheerful news that at four in the morning we were to go over the top and take the German front-line trench. My heart turned to lead. Then the officer carried on with his instructions. To the best of my memory I recall them as follows: "At eleven a wiring party will go out in front and cut lanes through our barbed wire for the passage of troops in the morning. At two o'clock our artillery will open up with an intense bombardment, which will last until four. Upon the lifting of the barrage the first of the three waves will go over." Then he left. Some of the Tommies, first getting permission from the sergeant, went into the machine gunners' dugout and wrote letters home, saying that in the morning they were going over the top, and also that if the letters reached their destination it would mean that the writer had been killed.

These letters were turned over to the captain with instructions to mail same in the event of the writer's being killed. Some of the men made out their wills in their pay books, under the caption, "Will and Last Testament."

Then the nerve-racking wait commenced. Every now and then I would glance at the dial of my wrist watch and was surprised to see how fast the minutes passed by. About five minutes to two I got nervous waiting for our guns to open up. I could not take my eyes from my watch. I crouched against the parapet and strained my muscles in a deathlike grip upon my rifle. As the hands on my watch showed two o'clock a blinding red flare lighted up the sky in our rear, then thunder, intermixed with a sharp, whistling sound in the air over our heads. The shells from our guns were speeding on their way toward the German lines. With one accord the men sprang up on the fire step and looked over the top in the direction of the German trenches. A line of bursting shells lighted up No Man's Land. The din was terrific and the ground trembled. Then, high above our heads we could hear a sighing moan. Our big boys behind the line had opened up and 9.2's and 15-inch shells commenced dropping into the German lines. The flash of the guns behind the lines, the scream of the shells through the air, and the flare of them, bursting, was a spectacle that put Pain's greatest display into the shade. The constant pup, pup, of German machine guns and an occasional rattle of rifle firing gave me the impression of a huge audience applauding the work of the batteries.

Our 18-pounders were destroying the German barbed wire, while the heavier stuff was demolishing their trenches and bashing in dugouts or funk holes.

Then Fritz got busy.

Their shells went screaming overhead, aimed in the direction of the flares from our batteries. Trench mortars started dropping "Minnies" in our front line. We clicked several casualties. Then they suddenly ceased. Our artillery had taped or silenced them.

During the bombardment you could almost read a newspaper in our trench. Sometimes in the flare of a shell-burst a man's body would be silhouetted against the parados of the trench and it appeared like a huge monster. You could hardly hear yourself think. When an order was to be passed down the trench you had to yell it, using your hands as a funnel into the ear of the man sitting next to you on the fire step. In about twenty minutes a generous rum issue was doled out. After drinking the rum, which tasted like varnish and sent a shudder through your frame, you wondered why they made you wait until the lifting of the barrage before going over. At ten minutes to four word was passed down, "Ten minutes to go!" Ten minutes to live! We were shivering all over. My legs felt as if they were asleep. Then word was passed down: "First wave get on and near the scaling ladders."

Before a charge Tommy is the politest of men. There is never any pushing or crowding to be first up these ladders. We crouched around the base of the ladders waiting for the word to go over. I was sick and faint, and was puffing away at an unlighted fag. Then came the word, "Three minutes to go; upon the lifting of the barrage and on the blast of the whistles, 'Over the top with the best o' luck and give them hell.'" The famous phrase of the western front. The Jonah phrase of the western front. To Tommy it means if you are lucky enough to come back you will be minus an arm or a leg.

I glanced again at my wrist watch. We all wore them and you could hardly call us "sissies" for doing so. It was a minute to four. I could see the hand move to the twelve, then a dead silence. It hurt. Everyone looked up to see what had happened, but not for long. Sharp whistle blasts rang out along the trench, and with a cheer the men scrambled up the ladders. The bullets were cracking overhead, and occasionally a machine gun would rip and tear the top of the sandbag parapet. How I got up that ladder I will never know. The first ten feet out in front was agony. Then we passed through lanes in our barbed wire. I knew I was running, but could feel no motion below the waist. Patches on the ground seemed to float to the rear as if I were on a treadmill and scenery was rushing past me. The Germans had put a barrage of shrapnel across No Man's Land, and you could hear the pieces slap the ground about you.

After I had passed our barbed wire and gotten into No Man's Land a Tommy about fifteen feet to my right front turned around and looking in my direction, put his hand to his mouth and yelled something which I could not make out on account of the noise from the bursting shells. Then he coughed, stumbled, pitched forward and lay still. His body seemed to float to the rear of me. I could hear sharp cracks in the air about me. These were caused by passing rifle bullets. Frequently, to my right and left, little spurts of dirt would rise into the air and a ricochet bullet would whine on its way. If a Tommy should see one of these little spurts in front of him, he would tell the nurse about it later. The crossing of No Man's Land remains a blank to me.

Men on my right and left would stumble and fall. Some would try to get up, while others remained huddled and motionless. Then smashed-up barbed wire came into view and seemed carried on a tide to the rear. Suddenly, in front of me loomed a bashed-in trench about four feet wide. Queer-looking forms like mud turtles were scrambling up its wall. One of these forms seemed to slip and then rolled to the bottom of the trench. I leaped across this intervening space. The man to my left seemed to pause in midair, then pitched head down into the German trench. I laughed out loud in my delirium. Upon alighting on the other side of the trench I came to with a sudden jolt. Right in front of me loomed a giant form with a rifle which looked about ten feet long, on the end of which seemed seven bayonets. These flashed in the air in front of me. Then through my mind flashed the admonition of our bayonet instructor back in Blighty. He had said, "whenever you get in a charge and run your bayonet up to the hilt into a German the Fritz will fall. Perhaps your rifle will be wrenched from your grasp. Do not waste time, if the bayonet is fouled in his equipment, by putting your foot on his stomach and tugging at the rifle to extricate the bayonet. Simply press the trigger and the bullet will free it." In my present situation this was the logic, but for the life of me I could not remember how he had told me to get my bayonet into the German. To me this was the paramount issue. I closed my eyes and lunged forward. My rifle was torn from my hands. I must have gotten the German because he had disappeared. About twenty feet to my left front was a huge Prussian nearly six feet four inches in height, a fine specimen of physical manhood. The bayonet from his rifle was missing, but he clutched the barrel in both hands and was swinging the butt around his head. I could almost hear the swish of the butt passing through the air. Three little Tommies were engaged with him. They looked like pigmies alongside of the Prussian. The Tommy on the left was gradually circling to the rear of his opponent. It was a funny sight to see them duck the swinging butt and try to jab him at the same time. The Tommy nearest me received the butt of the German's rifle in a smashing blow below the right temple. It smashed his head like an eggshell. He pitched forward on his side and a convulsive shudder ran through his body. Meanwhile the other Tommy had gained the rear of the Prussian. Suddenly about four inches of bayonet protruded from the throat of the Prussian soldier, who staggered forward and fell. I will never forget the look of blank astonishment that came over his face.

Then something hit me in the left shoulder and my left side went numb. It felt as if a hot poker was being driven through me. I felt no pain—just a sort of nervous shock. A bayonet had pierced me from the rear. I fell backward on the ground, but was not unconscious, because I could see dim objects moving around me. Then a flash of light in front of my eyes and unconsciousness. Something had hit me on the head. I have never found out what it was.

I dreamed I was being tossed about in an open boat on a heaving sea and opened my eyes. The moon was shining. I was on a stretcher being carried down one of our communication trenches. At the advanced first-aid post my wounds were dressed, and then I was put into an ambulance and sent to one of the base hospitals. The wounds in my shoulder and head were not serious and in six weeks I had rejoined my company for service in the front line.

Empey joins the "Suicide club." The thrilling details are told in the next installment.

HOW TO TELL WHEN VEGETABLES ARE READY FOR USE ON TABLE

Such vegetables as leaf lettuce, kale, spinach, parsley, chard, turnip, mustard, and any other used as a green or salad may be gathered as soon as large enough to pay for the gathering. It is an excellent plan to make a practice of thinning these crops and using the plants removed as greens or for other purposes. Chard must be used while young as it soon passes its best stage. Kale should be used while relatively young, as when young it is of much better quality than when allowed to become large. It is a far better plan to make frequent successive plantings of the foliage crops so as to have a supply of tender, succulent greens or salad material continually available.

Globe artichokes are ready for use as soon as the bur is formed and must be gathered before the blossoms appear. The bur is the bud of the flower and is used in the same way as turnips or kohl-rabi.

Jerusalem artichokes are used in the same way as potatoes. They are ready for use in the autumn and may remain in the ground until needed.

Asparagus is ready for use as soon as the young shoots are three or four inches long. If allowed to grow too long the shoots will become tough and woody.

Beans (snap) are ready for use as soon as the bean is about half formed. In the stringless varieties the pods may be allowed to remain on the plant a little longer than the other sorts, but in every case they should be gathered while young and tender. Lima beans should be gathered as soon as the pods are well filled out, but before the pods begin to turn yellow. They should be gathered while the beans themselves still have a fresh, green appearance. After the beans become white they are past their prime.

Beets should be used while young and tender. The beets may be thinned as soon as they are two or three inches tall and the ones that are removed can be used in greens. The entire crop should be used before they are more than two inches in diameter. Successive plantings at intervals of two weeks are advisable so that a supply of tender beets will always be available.

Brussels sprouts are ready for use as soon as the heads are well formed and begin to crowd each other.

Cabbage is ready for use as soon as the heads are well formed and well blanched in the interior.

Chinese cabbage is ready for use as soon as well blanched.

Carrots may be used as soon as they reach a size to justify pulling them. Many gardeners follow the practice of thinning the carrots and using those removed as vegetables or in soups. They may be grown as an all-season crop or as a late crop following something else. Size is not important, but very large ones are inclined to be tough and pithy.

Cauliflower is ready for use as soon as the bleached heads are well filled out with the masses of globular material which if allowed to develop would form seed. It is important that it be cut before the heads become old.

Celery is ready for use as soon as it reaches a good size and is blanched. It may be used green for stews, soups, etc.

Collards may be used as soon as the rosette of leaves which forms the head is developed and blanched.

Sweet corn should not be pulled until the ears are well filled out. This is about the time the silk begins to die. When the milk becomes doughy the corn is too old for table use.

Cucumbers are ready for use whenever large enough, and before they have begun to turn yellow.

Eggplants may be used at any time after the fruit is large enough to justify picking. It should not be allowed to remain on the bushes too long or decay will set in.

Endive should be used as soon as blanched. Blanching may be accomplished by tying the leaves together as soon as the plants are well grown.

Kohl-rabi must be used while tender. This may easily be determined by cutting the thickened stem which constitutes the edible portion. If tough and stringy, it is too old.

Muskmelons.—Color, size and general appearance serve as guides in telling when they are ready to pick. They should not be allowed to remain on the vines until dead ripe, as they are past their prime when fully ripened.

Watermelons.—Ripeness is determined by sound, and by the general appearance. A ripe melon when struck with the hand gives a dull sound, which is readily recognized after a few trials.

Okra should be gathered while the pods are very young and tender and while the seeds are still soft.

Onions may be pulled and used as bunch onions when the bulbs are from a quarter to a half inch in diameter. If for boiled onions the bulbs may be any size.

Parsnips are not used until late in the autumn when the ground is frozen. Freezing improves their flavor; in fact, it is not considered advisable to use them as a summer vegetable. Size is of small importance, but those from 1½ to 2 inches in diameter are considered best.

Peas are ready for picking as soon as the pods are well filled and while the peas are still green, yet before either the peas become hard or the pods whitish or yellowish. Peas should not be gathered when too young, and if too old will be of poor quality.

Peppers may be gathered at any time until they begin to turn red. For some purposes they are allowed to ripen, but usually are picked green.

Early potatoes may be used at any time during their growth. An old-time rule is to begin digging them when they have reached the size of a hen's egg. It is advisable to begin using them when they have reached this size, digging the supply from day to day as needed, allowing the bulk of the crop to grow until needed or until they mature. Late potatoes should be allowed to grow until the vines die or are killed by frost.

Sweet potatoes are of poor quality unless allowed to reach maturity. The simplest test is to break one of the potatoes. If drops of water collect on the broken surface the crop is not mature. This crop grows until frost kills the vines, but it is permissible to use them quite a while before the end of the growing season.

Radishes may be used as soon as large enough. A common practice is to begin thinning them as soon as large enough. They should all be used while young and tender.

Salsify is grown and handled in the same way as parsnips and the same rules may be followed in its use.

Summer squashes are ready for use as soon as large enough. They, however, should not be picked when very small, as when young they are watery and of poor quality. As soon as the shell hardens they are too old for table use.

Winter squashes should be allowed to grow until the vines die or until frost kills them, but the squashes should be stored before being frosted.

Tomatoes should be picked when fully ripe, but should not be allowed to remain on the vines until soft. It is not a good practice to pick them while partly ripe, as the flavor is injured by this practice.

Turnips for greens may be used as soon as the foliage is large enough to justify picking; if for the roots, when the roots are from 1½ to 2 inches in diameter. When planted as a late summer crop for roots for storage, they should be allowed to grow until hard freezing occurs. Those from 2 to 3 inches in diameter are best. Larger ones may be used for stock feed.

To drive a tank, handle the guns, and sweep over the enemy trenches, takes strong nerves, good rich blood, a good stomach, liver and kidneys. When the time comes, the man with red blood in his veins "is up and at it." He has iron nerves for hardships—an interest in his work grips him. That's the way you feel when you have taken a blood and nerve tonic, made up of Blood root, Golden Seal root, Stone root, Cherry bark, and rolled into a sugar-coated tablet and sold in sixty-cent vials by almost all druggists for past fifty years as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This tonic, in liquid or tablet form, is just what you need this spring to give you vim, vigor and vitality. At the fag end of a hard winter, no wonder you feel "run-down," blue, out of sorts. Try this "Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's. Don't wait! To-day is the day to begin! A little "pep," and you laugh and live.

The best means to oil the machinery of the body, put tone into the liver, kidneys and circulatory system, is to first practice a good house-cleaning. I know of nothing better as a laxative than a vegetable pill, made up of May-apple, leaves of aloe and jalap. This is commonly sold by all druggists as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and should be taken at least once a week to clear the twenty-five feet of intestines. You will thus clean the system—expel the poisons and keep well. Now is the time to clean house. Give yourself a spring house cleaning.—Adv.

A Sluggish Liver Needs Attention

Too much stress can not be placed on the necessity of keeping the liver in good condition; upon it the health of the body largely depends. When the liver becomes sluggish, the kidneys are overworked, the digestive fluids are not properly secreted and a languid, bilious, nervous or sick headachy condition results. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body. Constipation, bloating, dizziness, belching, pain or soreness in the right side, impaired vision and, in fact, most diseases have their origin in an inactive liver. An inactive liver is easily corrected if taken in time, but the only way to doctor is to get at the cause. Glando Tonic is a liver remedy that has a splendid record for renewing activity, removing the poisons and building up the system. For bilious attacks, it can not be beaten. Mothers who are nursing a baby should take Glando Tonic to keep the bowels well regulated. This will keep baby's bowels in a good condition. Glando Tonic is a three-in-one treatment that brings results. A trial will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials will be furnished upon request. Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be obtained by sending 50c direct to the Grand-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Take the poultry house, for instance. The question whether or not you are going to have eggs next winter depends upon the condition of the chicken coop. If you don't get eggs, don't blame the hens. They will lay if you give them half a chance. But they can't lay in a cold, drafty shed. It takes all your feed to keep them warm. The time to build is right now before prices go any higher. Commencement

Days are Over for the 1918 Class of Concord Township High School and they are now Planning Future Activities.

Andress, Pauline	Monroe, Vernie R.
Gamble, Norma	Morr, Arden
Hathaway, Clayton	Quance, Willie
Milliman, Merritt	Ridgway, Olive

The foregoing young ladies and young gentlemen constituted the Senior class of the Concord high school for the year just ended. For the past week, St. Joe life centered about their graduation exercises, which began with the Senior class play at Widney opera house on Thursday evening and concluded with a reception at the school house on Saturday evening. But seven members of the class participated in these events. A service flag bearing a single star told the story: the inexorable hand of war had reached out and snatched one young man from his studies. Commencement evening, Vernie Monroe's cap and gown lay at the foot of the service flag and beside them were placed his diploma—a fitting tribute to him who is called at such an early age to face the sternest of all of life's stern realities, "grim visaged war"

Just a roll of parchment—that's all—of little intrinsic value in itself; but it attests to four years' school work creditably done and proves the class motto, "Diligence Brings Success." But effort to do something and to be of worth to humanity should not end with the receiving of a diploma. The life of each member of the class of 1918 is a closed book; and as the pages open, one by one, he will write thereon his autobiography; and THE NEWS hopes that when the word "Finis" is written, there may be no soiled pages nor none that does not record some good.

THE CLASS PLAY

It is always a pleasure to write up something that is good; and we can say, knowing that everyone who was there will agree with us, that the Senior class play, Thursday evening, deserves favorable mention. "A Poor Married Man," a rollicking comedy, was presented. "Prof John Wise," represented by Arden Morr, a young college professor, married in haste and repented—at leisure? Oh, no! He married in haste and repented even more hastily. He did not have a family monopoly on repenting, however: for within a half-day after marriage, "Zoia," his young wife, accompanied by her mamma, was on the way to the Reno, Nev., divorce courts.

The professor's troubles began on the way home. He had toothache, and a stranger gave him a cure—out of a bottle. The after effects of the liquor and too much mother-in-law (with a pet poodle, "Socrates") got his nerve. Everyone thought he had married the mother, not the daughter, and began to tell him the old lady's past, speaking of her as his wife. He was led to believe that "Zoia," a lovable young lady of about 20, had been married four times, had a daughter and, worst of all, her last husband had disappeared after eating a lobster salad she had prepared and there were hints of poison. No wonder then that when his wife made lobster salad for dinner, he rebelled.

In the end, the professor married "June Graham," a nice little freshman, and lived "happy ever after." "Zoia" returned and met "Billie Blake," a former admirer; and there was every evidence when the curtain went down, that a job of knot tying awaited a preacher. The old lady also returned and inveigled "June's" father, "Dr. Graham," into marrying her; but news that her former husband was alive, saved the doctor from a shrewish wife.

The cast follows:

Prof. John Wise, the poor married man .... Arden Morr
Dr. Graham, a country physician, father of June .... Merritt Milliman
Billie Blake, a popular college boy, Zoia's lover..... Clayton Hathaway
Jupiter, a darkey servant of Prof. Wise, on the job every minute .... Willie Quance
Mrs. Iona Ford, mother of Wise's first wife. .... Norma Gamble
Zoia, her daughter ..... Olive Ridgway
June Graham, daughter of Dr. Graham............. Pauline Andress

Between the first and second acts, Katharine Kinsey gave a recitation, in which the boastful spirit of the irrepressible Yankee was shown; and between the second and third, the class sang two songs.

COMMENCEMENT

Commencement, on Friday evening, was the principal event of the week. Interest entered about the class address, which was delivered by Rev. Robert Burns, of Butler. He is a forceful and entertaining speaker, and his remarks were well worth listing to. His subject was "The Man of the Hour."

After the address, Supt. F. L Smith presented the graduates with their diplomas.

Music for the occasion was furnished by the high school chorus, under the direction of C. A. Woodcox, and by Mrs. Fred B. Leighty. The latter, just before the invocation by Rev. Spayd, played a medley of national airs. The chorus sang three selections, all of which were well received. Rev. Coons pronounced the benediction.

The total receipts for the two evenings, $89.05; expenditures, including rent of caps and gowns, $87.26; balance, $1.79.

ALUMNI BANQUET

There is no law in Indiana against calling a public gathering at which no refreshments are served a banquet. The alumni of the St. Joe high school held such a one. They called it a banquet to be in keeping with a time honored custom; and, in obedience to the food conservation rules, there were no "eats." there were other good things, however, chiefly of a patriotic nature, including the singing of patriotic airs, a recitation by Miss DeVeta Bayman and the unveiling of a service flag in honor of ten alumni of the school. They are Elgin Curie, Paul Curie, Roy Haifley, Calvin Kain, Paul Maxwell, Roy Maxwell, Vernie Monroe, Clark Scholes, Ralph Sechler and Gray Woodcox. The unveiling address was made by Lee O. Tustison, of Defiance, who spoke feelingly of the ten young men who had answered their country's call and of the issues of the war. Supt. F. L. Smith made an interesting talk, a "talk" by him being, he laugeingly said, no new thing to those who had attended high school the last two years.

The evening's program was opened by the welcome into the association of the class of 1918. This was made by the president, M. M. Maxwell. Willie Quance responded on behalf of the class.

The radius rod broke and the car, which was going quite fast, turned turtle, throwing all the men out. Butler, who was driving, was unhurt; but the other two both suffered broken collar bones. Dr. Emme was called and took them to their homes; and, after an examination, the injured men were hurried to the Lutheran hospital, Fort Wayne, where they are resting easy. Both are married, James being the father of several children.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

When you compare the low prices of Ford cars with the prices of farm produce, farm stock and everything else on the market, the great value of the Ford car can be fairly estimated. The price for the Ford Touring Car is only $450 f. o. b. Detroit—the same as last year. It is the greatest value, not only among motor cars, but in the whole run of articles grown and manufactured. Think of a five-passenger motor car with the reputation for service, durability and economy that's behind the Ford car, selling for $450! We urge prospective purchasers to give their orders without delay.

ARMY AND NAVY NEED TRAINED MEN

THOUSANDS OF EXPERT WORKERS WANTED IN CIVILIAN BRANCHES OF SERVICE.

MEAT CAREFULLY INSPECTED

Every Part of the Supply for Army Use Is Scrutinized, From Stock Yards to Mess—Desertions From Camps Due to Discouraging Letters.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—The civilian branches of the army and navy are in need of thousands of highly trained workers, and before the end of 1918 these branches must be increased by at least 20,000, according to the civil service commission.

The ordnance department of the army needs large numbers of mechanical engineers, draftsmen, chemists, and metallurgists. Thousands of inspectors are wanted to pass on the quality of ordnance, ammunition, and other supplies. For office work statisticians, accountants, assistants in business administration, and specially trained clerks are needed.

The quartermaster corps wants several thousand examiners and inspectors, and passenger and freight clerks are needed. The signal corps is short of draftsmen.

The navy has an unlimited number of places for draftsmen, and a long list of positions for technical workers. Practically all branches of the service need stenographers, typists, bookkeepers, and clerks.

The army consumes about 2,000,000 pounds per day of fresh beef. This necessitates the slaughter daily of 4,000 cattle. Official inspectors scrutinize every part of this supply from the time it comes on the hoof to the abattoir until it vanishes from the mess tin of the soldier.

Inspection begins at the stock yards, where the living animals undergo the examination of an official for any evidences of physical defect which might be difficult of detection later. Where there is doubt the questionable animals are separated for closer examination. Where there is certainty of defect, the animal is rejected as unfit for food supply.

Next comes a rigid examination of the carcass. Only when found "sound, healthful, and wholesome" is the meat passed as acceptable for food and duly branded with a nonpoisonous vegetable ink, "United States Inspected and Passed." The unfit carcasses are destroyed.

Fresh meats thus indorsed go forward in regular shipments, but those which are to undergo curing, canning, or manufacture into sausages, lard, oleomargarine, etc., are subjected to reinspections at each step. For these there is a final inspection just previous to their dispatch for army use. Samples are regularly collected for chemical analysis in the government laboratories.

When the meats arrive at the army stations they are again inspected either by inspectors of the bureau of animal industry or by veterinarian officers of the army. They must also obtain the approval of the officer of the quartermaster corps receiving them. And they undergo their final test when the soldier's immediate organization commander looks them over before he permits them to be served to his men.

Included in war department regulations regarding the employment of prisoners of war and interned enemy aliens are the following statements:

All classes of prisoners, excepting commissioned officers and such others as are physically not fit to labor, will be required to perform work necessary for their comfort or for the upkeep of their prison barracks. Interned enemy aliens will not be held for compulsory labor except as provided in this paragraph.

Prisoners of war, excepting officers, warrant, petty, and noncommissioned officers, may be required to work for the public service—they may be authorized to work on their own account. Under exceptional circumstances, when specially authorized by the secretary of war, they may, upon their written request, be authorized to work for private persons or for corporations. Petty and noncommissioned officers may be authorized to work on their own account, and, upon their written request, may be authorized to work in the same manner as other prisoners of war, except that they will be employed in a supervisory capacity only.

An order for labor will be regarded as a military command, and prisoners failing to obey such order will be punished accordingly.

When employed on work that is necessary for their comfort, or for the upkeep of the prison barracks in which they are interned, prisoners will receive no compensation. When the work is done for the government prisoners will be paid at a rate according to the work executed; when the work is done for other branches of the public service or for private persons the conditions of and the compensation for such work will be settled in agreement between representatives of said branches or persons and the adjutant general of the army.

In a recent statement the war department strongly advises against discouraging letters to soldiers:

"Recent reports from commanding generals of certain army divisions indicate that one of the fruitful causes of soldiers absenting themselves without leave is the discouraging letter from home. Such letters frequently give alarming and exaggerated reports of conditions surrounding the soldier's family, that some member is desperately ill, that all are starving, or that they are being in some way harassed. In instances such letters have so preyed upon the minds of soldiers that they have absented themselves without leave to go home, only to find that conditions had been grossly exaggerated.

"Meanwhile the soldier had been absent without leave—a serious military offense. His problem then became one of facing the penalty or getting deeper into trouble by deserting. Sometimes a man's pride or fear has led him to desert.

"Every soldier wants to receive letters from home. They should be frequent, cheerful, hopeful, and appreciative of the sacrifice that he is making for his country. They should be full of family incidents and cheerful home gossip. They should protect him from the trifling alarms and the small annoyances of everyday life. They should encourage him by giving full confidence that his family and his friends stand behind him in the great enterprise he has undertaken.

"The value of such letters to soldiers is beyond estimate. The harm that discouraging letters from home do to him is clearly indicated by reports at the adjustant general's office. Here are some extracts from recent reports of division commanders:

"'I find, also, that many of the families of the men write to them of unsatisfactory conditions at home, sickness of relatives, and how much various members of the family wish to see the soldier. These letters, so far as sickness, etc., are concerned, are often overdrawn, but, combined with the homesick feeling, often result in the man going absent without leave and finally being dropped as a deserter.'

"'I am now, through the newspapers of Indiana and through lecturers in Kentucky, whom we are able to reach through the office of the adjutant general of that state, endeavoring to advise the home people of these men of the seriousness of these offenses and that their efforts should be to assist every man in performing ths duty that has devolved on him, to lighten his worries, and, above all, to regard desertion in its proper light. I shall also attempt to get the West Virginia papers to institute a campaign of education along similar lines.'

"'While stationed at Columbus barracks, Ohio, last year I was a member of a general court-martial that tried approximately 100 enlisted men for desertion from National Guard regiments stationed on the border. I believe I am safe in saying that at least 90 per cent of them gave as their reason for desertion the fact that they had received letters from home to the effect that a wife, sister, or mother was either dying, very ill, or in destitue circumstances, and begged the man to come home at once. Many of the men admitted that when they arrived home they found that the writer of the letter had exaggerated conditions.'

"Many young soldiers, fresh from home, suffer from homesickness, no matter how army officers may try to make their surroundings pleasant and comfortable and provide proper amusements. Extraordinary measures have been taken by the war department during the past year to keep the young soldier actively engaged while in camp with sports, amusements, and comforts that a wholesome psychology might be sustained. Still, a type of soldier will yearn for home and fall into a brooding mood. It is obvious how harmful to him and to the service a discontented letter from home might be."

The enrollment of more than 102,000 boys between sixteen and twenty-one years of age for farm work this season in the boys' working reserve of the United States employment service has been made by six states, according to an announcement by the department of labor. The states first reporting were: California, 22,000; Indiana, 18,845; Illinois, 25,000; Ohio, 18,000; Tennessee, 4,200; Wisconsin, 14,000.

In Rhode Island high school boys are being enrolled in the reserve, trained in handling farm machinery, and sent in groups by automobile to farmers to demonstrate their ability.

Men's colleges and universities are making prompt response to the request of Secretary of Labor Wilson that their students be enrolled in the public service reserve and placed on farms this summer to assist in food production. They will be placed with farmers through the United States employment service, with the aid of the county agents of the department of agriculture.

Swimming is to be taught soldiers in some training camps this summer as a military requirement, according to the commission on training camp activities. A statement by the commission shows that 118,000 soldiers in camps participated in organized basket ball last season.

HELPING OUR UNCLE HENRYS

Bureau of Markets Shows Daily Picture of Conditions Throughout Country—Guesswork in Shipping Is Eliminated.

The station agent at Highland wired his division superintendent "four cars strawberries to Chicago." The superintendent added these four cars to figures received from other station agents, and wired the total to the department of agriculture at Washington.

The agent at Highland wondered why anyone should want to know about cars of strawberries moving to Chicago. A few years ago his Uncle Henry had "gone broke" raising strawberries because he couldn't sell them for enough to pay his expenses. While he was wondering about this, messages were coming to Washington from all railroads and soon word was flashed back to points in producing sections showing that a total of 40 cars of strawberries were on the way to Chicago, and that comparatively few shipments were going to other important markets.

Shipment Diverted.

"Forty cars will swamp the Chicago market tomorrow," said a strawberry man, who received the wire from Washington, and he reached for the telephone. Messages went to railroad officials to divert certain cars headed for Chicago to other cities where strawberries were not abundant.

Next day Chicago received only 20 cars of strawberries instead of the 40 that would have gone there except for the market news service of the bureau of markets. Chicago could use 20 cars but not 40, and because the other 20 cars went to different markets many growers received checks that gave them a profit on their shipments.

Helping the Uncle Henrys.

Guesswork in marketing of fruits and vegetables has gone. The market news service is working for many "Uncle Henrys" and also for dealers and consumers. No one profits when a city receives more of any fruit or vegetable than it can consume, and as a means of correcting such a condition it is necessary to know how much produce is en route to that city.

The market news service for fruits and vegetables, with its many agents and with assistance from railroad officials, gives daily a picture of market conditions throughout the country for both shipper and dealer and places this picture in the form of a typed report in the hands of all persons interested. The bureau of markets uses leased wires to gather this information and furnishes market news, including prices and supplies, to more than 50,000 individuals in 32 states. The reports, which are issued simultaneously in many cities and in producing sections, covered in 1917, 21 commodities, including strawberries, tomatoes, peaches, cataloupes, onions, potatoes, apples, grapes, watermelons, and asparagus. Each report carries market information from most of the large cities as well as giving shipping point information.

Farmers or others wishing to receive any of these reports from field agents should apply to the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

BETTER TO DRILL THAN CHECK WEAK SEED CORN

Where necessary to plant weak seed corn, checking is not as satisfactory as drilling, according to specialists of the United States department of agriculture. Plant right at first—plant the extra amount of seed at first, for replanting means additional work, late planting, and uneven and late maturity. Drilled corn is easily thinned. Harrows or cultivators can be used in thinning by driving across the corn rows. Without the loss of time, the thinning can proceed for several weeks while the corn is being cultivated and is growing, but replanting is altogether unsatisfactory and usually unprofitable.

Make Sweet Potato Flour.

Sweet potatoes, dried and ground into a flour in an ordinary kitchen coffee grinder, can be used in a variety of ways in cooking. Specialists of the United States department of agriculture believe that in many localities where sweet potatoes are abundant the making of sweet potato flour in the home may furnish a practical way to save the sweet potatoes from spoiling. The flour will keep well in dry containers.

To make the flour the potatoes should first be cut into small lengthwise pieces and thoroughly dried. A small drier that fits on top of the oven or warming closet of a range or gas stove can be used. If an electric fan is available it will serve admirably. The nut knife of a meat grinder also can be used for this purpose Flour made by such process can be kept for some time if put into a dry container, or the flour may be made from the dry potatoes as it is needed. A quart of the dry potatoes makes a cup of flour.

The use of sweet potato flour in cake or bread making will materially reduce the amount of other flour used. The proportions may be half and half. When used in cakes the sugar could also be reduced a little. Sweet potato flour is useful as a thickening agent, having the same value in this respect as cornstarch. Recipes for the use of sweet potato flour have been tested and found to be excellent by food specialists of the United States department of agriculture.

When Canning for Market.

Housewives and canning club members who wish to sell their canned products are urged by the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, to study their markets at the beginning of the season and pack according to local demands for different products. Secure orders for canned goods before putting them up, is the advice of the specialists. Small lots of nonstandardized products are difficult to sell except among local buyers and are not purchased by the army, navy, commercial dealers, or any department of the government.

Home-canned food can be kept over from one season to the next, and those who have not sold their goods have reserves to draw from for their home table. It is good policy, say the specialists, for the housewife to provide a reasonable surplus beyond the probable home consumption for the next crop year. While the bureau of markets is giving aid to producers on marketing problems, it says that it is difficult to place producers of small quantities of different kinds of products in touch with buyers.

Temperance Notes

A GOOD ARGUMENT FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Mr. Nathan W. Littlefied, head of the Rhode Island Anti-Saloon League, presents a forceful reason for nationwide prohibition. "If all the inhabitants of all the states never went abroad, but remained within their respective boundaries," he says, "there might be a little force in the argument that the people of any state who desire free rum should be left to stew in their own folly and degradation.

"But the American people travel for business and pleasure from one end of the country to the other. Why should a citizen of Denver, who sends his family to Palm Beach or Narragansett Pier lose the protection of the just laws of his own state which shield his sons and daughters from the perils of the saloon, the wine table and the gilded gambling hall?

"The most powerful and effective argument advanced in the congressional debates which preceded the adoption of the District of Columbia bill and the rejection of the amendment to submit the question to the people of the district, was that the district belongs to the people of the whole country; that it is inhabited by persons from all parts of the country; and therefore the question of prohibition for the district is not a local, but a national question.

"The argument is quite as applicable to New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston and the two or three other great cities of the country as it is to Washington. Nine-tenths of all the saloons of the country are located in these cities. All the wet territory of the country could be put into the state of Texas with plenty of room to spare. But the influence and power of those cities for good or evil pervades the whole country."

MODERATE DRINKING IMPAIRS ABILITY TO DISTINGUISH COLORS.

"New experiments on the effect of alcohol upon vision by Dr. Hugo Schultz of the pharmacological institute in the University of Griefswald, were recently reported in L'Abstinence," says Emma L. Frausvean in the American Issue. "The ability of men to distinguish between red and green after taking alcohol and caffeine, was tested upon seven persons. Control experiments were of course made upon other subjects who had taken neither alcohol nor caffeine.

"The alcohol experiments were made with light beer, with Rhine wine containing little alcohol, and with brandy and champagne. The quantities used were: 250 cc. of beer, 100 of wine, 100 of champagne, 20 of brandy. The quantity of alcohol taken in each experiment was therefore a little less than 10 cc. In most cases the absorption of the alcoholic liquor caused a clearly appreciable diminution of the ability to distinguish red and green. This diminution was stronger for red than for green.

"Beer produces the most noticeable effects. The bitterness of the hops contained in the beer was thought to contribute to this.

"The influence of caffeine is totally different. After taking coffee the ability to distinguish light red and deep red, light green and deep green was clearly strengthened.

"The experiments show clearly how even the moderate use of alcoholic liquors may be dangerous for occupations in which it is very important to clearly distinguish colors."

ATTENTION, WORKERS!

The land is not supporting too many, but the people who work are doing so. For, be it understood, the men who manufacture and distribute liquor do not "work," they merely waste labor. The criminal who, having drowned his higher aspirations in whisky, preys upon society, does not work; he lives upon the work of others. The insane, the impoverished, the delinquent and degenerate of many classes—these, the victims of a demoniacal traffic, do not work. Since this is true, their neglect to toil at that which produces what they consume must be supplied by redoubled toil upon your part.—From Cyclopedia of Temperance.

A GOOD RETORT.

A saloonkeeper said to a barber, after being shaved: "Yours is a very easy way of making money." The barber replied: "A man can come into my shop and for a very small sum make a considerable improvement in his appearance; but if a man goes into your house he may spend a large sum and be worse in appearance when he comes out than when he went in; in fact, the more he spends the less fit he is to be seen."

Dr. Arthur Hunter, president of the American Society of Actuaries, speaking for life insurance men says: "Taking the mortality risk of the entire group of insured persons as represented by 100, the probability of death in the case of total abstainers is 75, of moderate drinkers 115 and of excessive drinkers, 185."

Educating the Farmer.

The use of motion pictures in connection with lectures and demonstrations on agriculture is proving a great success in the province of Ontario, Canada. The average attendance at these meetings has increased greatly since their introduction in demonstrating the right and wrong way to get things done on a farm. More than 5,000 farmers have seen the "wood grading" film since November 1, while the average attendance per film from November 1 last varies from 50 to 5,000, according to the subject.

A Business Should be as Big as Its Job

If bigness is of benefit to the public it should be commended.

The size of a business depends upon the needs which that business is called upon to serve. A business should be as big as its job. You do not drive tacks with a pile-driver—or piles with a tack-hammer.

Swift & Company's growth has been the natural and inevitable result of national and international needs.

Large-scale production and distribution are necessary to convert the live stock of the West into meat and by-products, and to distribute them over long distances to the consuming centers of the East and abroad.

Only an organization like that of Swift & Company, with its many packing plants, hundreds of distributing houses, and thousands of refrigerator cars, would have been able to handle the varying seasonal supplies of live stock and meet the present war emergency by supplying, without interruption:

First*—The U. S. soldiers and the Allies in Europe by shipping as much as 800 carloads of meat products in a single week!

Second*—The cantonments in the United States.

Third*—The retailers upon whom the American public depends for its daily supply of meat.

But many people ask—Do producers and consumers pay too much for the complex service rendered?

Everyone, we believe, concedes the efficiency of the Swift & Company organization—in performing a big job in a big way at a minimum of expense.

Swift & Company's total profit in 1917 was less than 4 cents on each dollar of sales of meat and by-products. Elimination of this profit would have had practically no effect on live stock and meat prices.

Do you believe that this service can be rendered for less by any other conceivable method of organization or operation?

These questions and others are answered fully and frankly in the Swift & Company 1918 Year Book sent free on request.

LESSON FOR MAY 12

JESUS FACES THE CROSS.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 10:32-52.

GOLDEN TEXT—He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross.—Philippians 2:8.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Isaiah 43:1-9.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matthew 20:20-28; Luke 22:25-27.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus and the blind beggar.

LESSON MATERIAL—Mark 10:46-52.

PRIMARY AND JUNIOR MEMORY VERSE—Be of good cheer, rise; He calleth thee.—Mark 10:49.

JUNIOR AND INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Jesus teaches how to be great.

I. Jesus Foretells His Passion and Resurrection (vv. 32-34).

This is the third time he makes this prediction. The circumstances are most tragic.

1. Jesus going to Jerusalem (v. 32).

He was going with the full consciousness of the awful tragedy of the cross before him—the treachery of Judas, the fiery persecutions of the priests and scribes—the unjust judgment.

2. The disciples following after (v. 32).

They were in dread bewilderment. His utterances and demeanor filled their minds with perplexity, and their hearts with awe. In this state of confusion, Jesus called them to him and patiently instructed them.

3. "What needs should happen unto him" (vv. 33, 34).

(1) "Delivered unto chief priests and scribes."

(2) They shall condemn him to death, and deliver him to the Gentiles."

(3) "They shall mock, scourge, spit upon, and kill him."

(4) "The third day he shall rise again."

II. The Ambitious Request of James and John (vv. 35-45).

1. The request (vv. 35-37).

It was for a place of prominence in the kingdom. According to Matthew, their mother was the intercessor. Many mothers have been used by children to carry out that which they were themselves ashamed to do. It is very desirable for mothers to get places for their children near to Jesus, but unfortunately many are seeking the pinnacles of the world and forgetting the nearness to Christ.

2. Jesus' reply (vv. 38-45).

(1) To Peter and John (vv. 38-40). He speaks directly to the men, declaring that they know not what they ask. The Lord many times has to reprove and rebuke us for our blind requests. He showed them that the way to this position of glory was through suffering. The cup which they were to drink was all that was embraced in the agony on the cross. He concedes that the positions which they craved were obtainable, but in a very different way from what they apprehended. The way to places in glory in the Kingdom of Christ is through the path of lowly, self-forgetful service.

(2) To the ten (vv. 41-45).

The ten were displeased with Peter and John, but doubtless they were not free from the same selfish ambitions. Christ showed them that to give is greater than to receive; that to serve is greater than to be served. The standard of his kingdom is to forget self and serve others, even to give one's life. Christ is the supreme example to be imitated by all who would follow him.

III. Jesus Cures Bartimaeus of Blindness (vv. 46-52).

Though the weight of the cross was upon him, he had time for gracious deeds. Blind Bartimaeus receives his sight.

1. Bartimaeus' request (vv. 46, 47).

He cried to Jesus for mercy. The fact that he addressed him as the Son of David, shows that he recognized his Messiahship. Though he was blind, his faith enabled him to take hold of Jesus. As soon as he heard that Jesus was passing by he cried to him for help. Jesus not only can hear our cries, but he can even tell when a soul yearns after him, and will respond to that yearning.

2. Rebuked by the multitude (v. 48).

This rebuke provoked a more earnest cry from Bartimaeus. He believed that Jesus could and would help him, and knew that it was now or never with him. The fact that God has brought salvation within our reach should convince us that it is time for us to cry for help. Therefore, we should not allow the opposition of men to keep us from Christ.

3. The blessing granted (vv. 49-52).

Though Jesus knew his desire, he wished him to definitely commit himself. God is pleased when we come to him with our definite needs.

When his eyes were opened, he saw many interesting things, but the supreme object was Christ, for he followed him. Note experience of Bartimaeus:

(1) A blind beggar (v. 46).

(2) His cry for mercy (v. 47).

(3) Persistence in his cry (v. 48).

(4) Responded to the call of Jesus (vv. 49, 50).

(5) Made specific request (v. 51).

(6) Received his sight immediately (v. 52).

(7) He followed Jesus (v. 52).

How quickly one can pass from sore need to jubilant discipleship.

Just Now There Is Danger in Using Abbreviation of Somewhat Common Pet Names.

A sergeant of police exhibited a slight scratch on his face a few days ago which he said was caused by his wife's patriotism. By way of explanation the sergeant said: "I generally walk into my house and greet my wife with some pet name, one of my favorites being: 'Hello, honey.'

"Yesterday, when I reached home I went in in my customary manner, met my wife in the kitchen and said: 'Hello, hun.'

"I had no more than spoken," said the sergeant, "when my wife landed on me and said that she would give me to understand that she was not a Hun, so from now on I will be careful to use some other name or else call her honey, and I will be very careful to use the entire word and not try to abbreviate it."—Indianapolis News.

To do your duty during these trying times your health should be your first consideration. These two women tell how they found health.

Hellam, Pa.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles and a displacement. I felt all run down and was very weak. I had been treated by a physician without results, so decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial, and felt better right away. I am keeping house since last April and doing all my housework, where before I was unable to do any work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly the best medicine a woman can take when in this condition. I give you permission to publish this letter."—Mrs. E. R. Crumling, R. No. 1, Hellam, Pa.

Lowell, Mich.—"I suffered from cramps and dragging down pains, was irregular and had female weakness and displacement. I began to take Lydia E. Earl Kissler Visits Town

Earl Kissler, of Huntertown, visited town early last Thursday morning. He came nnheralded and went out in a cloud of dust. Earl will never become stoop shouldered from carrying around his brains. About 3:30 a. m., he got it into his head that it was bed time. First, he went to the S. S. Widney home and banged around for a while, but received no answer; and then he besieged the Bayman home. Mr. Bayman was away, and the family became so frightened that they telephoned to the Barney home for help. Mr. Barney and his son responded to the call; but they were too late—Kissler had gone. He went to the B. & O. station, where he tried to flag a westbound fast train; and here H. C. Hathaway, who was patrolling the town, picked the young man up. When Mr. Hathaway turned the flashlight on him, Kissler cried: "Don't shoot! Don't shoot!" Earl was taken to the bank, where, with the assistance of Night Watchman Leighty, a scare was thrown into him. Then he was told to "git." He got. He established a world's speed record going west on Main street; and when he turned south, his one and only ambition seemed to be to keep his feet moving. Earl's folks had better keep him at home. He may go prowling around a house wherein there is a gun, a dangerous procedure these days; and when the owner of said gun gets through shooting, Earl will be just as dead as if he had possessed a tubful of brains.

Unveil a Flag

A patriotic service was held at Concord Sunday morning in lieu of the regular church services. The leading features of the occasion were the unveiling of a service flag and an address by J. M. Life, of Auburn. The first was a pretty service. As the name of each young soldier was called, a relative stepped up to the flag and uncovered a star. One father—James George—had the sad, yet pleasing, privilege of uncovering three. He has four sons in the service, but one of them did not go from Concord. There were eight stars, each one representing a member of the M. P. Sunday school. They are Pena Burlaff, Walter Bleeks, Fred Draggoo, Ralph George, Roscoe George, Walter George, Ralph E. Hall and Carl Watt. The music was in keeping with the meeting.

Mr. Life's address was a masterly effort. He held the undivided attention of his hearers, and elicited several outbursts of hearty applause, particularly at the conclusion of his speech. He discussed two phases of the war, the false education of the German people and the duty of Americans, civilians as well as soldiers.

He likened the Germans unto the Indian princess in the fable. She was transcendentally beautiful, yet her presence bred pestilence, her kiss was poisonous and her embrace was death. An investigation revealed that she had been fed on poison from babyhood. The pulpit, the press and the schools of Germany had so poisoned the minds of the people that they justified any means of extending German influence; that might is right when employed by Germany.

Life, Mr. Life, argued, is not measured by years, but by duty done. It is hard to part with our sons; but, after all, there is a consolation in the knowledge that those who never return did their duty.

The foregoing is a brief—very brief—outline of Mr. Life's address. THE NEWS wishes it had room to print it in full, as it would repay reading.

The Other Wise Man

Interest in Concord township Sunday school convention centered on the lecture of J. M. Life, of Auburn, on VanDyke's story, "The Other Wise Man." The speaker confined himself principally to an outline of the tale, illustrated by stereopticon views. It was one of the most entertaining and instructive entertainments ever given in St. Joe, due, to a great degree, to the masterful way in which the subject was handled.

The story, in brief, is as follows: Artaban, a rich scholar of Ectabana, and four other wise men learn of the coming birth of the Great Ruler (Christ); that a new star weuld herald His coming; that when it appeared, the four were to meet at the temple of Seven Pillars and go and do homage to the King.

The star appeared; and Artaban, who had converted all his wealth into three precious stones, set out for the meeting plact at the temple, ten days' journey. When his journey was nearly ended, he found a dying Jew—a member of the despised race—lying beside the road. Artaban, after a brief struggle with himself, dismounted from his horse and ministered unto the unfortunate man This stop caused Artaban to arrive at the rendezvous too late: his friends had gone, leaving him word to follow them. He did so, but he had to dispose of a jewel to secure camels and a retinue for the journey.

Artaban followed the star until he found it suspended over Bethlehem. But he was too late: Joseph and Mary, with the infant Jesus, had fled into Egypt. He arrived on the day that Roman soldiers, by Herod's orders, were putting to death all male children under 3 years of age. He here parted with a second jewel to bribe an officer to spare a child.

From Bethlehem, Artaban set out again to find the King. He journied for thirty-three years without meeting Him. All the time, he did good: he fed the famine stricken, cared for the plague stricken and visited the prisoners in jail. At last, an old man, he arrived at Jerusalem on the day of the crucifixion. He resolved to use his last jewel to redeem Christ from death. On the way to the scene of the execution, he met a young lady about to be sold into slavery, and ransomed her with his last jewel.

While the young lady is thanking Artaban for her deliverance, the earthquake that accompanied the crucifixion took place and a pice of tiling fell, striking him and inflicting a fatal wound. He sank to the ground and the maiden knelt beside him and supported his head. A voice came out of the heaven, unintelligible to her but understood by him. The dying man answered:

"Not so, Lord, not so. When did I see Thee a-hungered and gave Thee meat? When did I see Thee thirsty and gave Thee drink? When wert Thou naked and I clothed Thee? When visitedest I Thee in prison?"

The glory of the Lord shone about the dying Artaban and the heavenly voice spake a second time, saying:

"Inasmuch as you did it unto one of the least of these, you did it unto Me."

Artaban saw the King!

The lecture was given at the Christian church on Sunday evening. In the afternoon, the Concord township Sunday school convention was held at the same place. The program, as advertised, was carried out. Three subjects were discussed: "Graded Lessons," by Rev. J. C. Coons; "Our Duty," by John George; "The Importance of the Application of the Lesson to the Scholar," by Mrs. Will Curie.

President.—J. P. Buckingham.
Vice President.—John George.
Secretary-Treasurer.—Mrs. Ada Bassett.

Close Call From Fire

St. Joe narrowly escaped another disastrous fire early last Thursday morning, and she owes that escape to the fact that firemen nightly patrol the town. About 12:30, H. C. Hathaway, who was on duty, detected smoke issuing from under the steps leading up to the opera house. He found fire smouldering in a pile of rubbish. An alarm was given, and the fire was quickly extinguished. The fire was probably due to carelessness: First, in letting rubbish accumulate there; second, to a pin-headed cigarette smoker's letting a cigarette roll through the steps. The rink had been open the evening before.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

John Ruger of Lafayette has joined the staff of the Indiana food administrator to have charge of all baking problems. A bakery inspector will be added to the staff, whose business will be an examination of shops, accounts, formulaes, etc.

Every Indiana food administrator, demonstrator, merchants' representative or any one else interested in the important problems connected with this patriotic work is invited to attend the conference at the Claypool, April 8th. J. W. Hallowell, in charge of the State's administration section of the food administration, who is very close to Herbert Hoover, and himself a recognized authority, will address the workers. At the time a policy will be outlined in reference to a wheatless diet for Indiana until next harvest, as recently requested by Dr. Barnard.

County food administrators are authorized to give ten days' notice to farmers hoarding wheat to place their surplus over seeding requirements in trade channels. Failure so to do means the requisition of this wheat by the food administration. It is believed notice will be sufficient and that there will be no occasion to requisition Indiana wheat.

Thirty-eight milling firms in Indiana have been given until April 6th to apply for license under liability of prosecution for continuing business without so doing.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MAY 16 1918 NO. 20

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

FRANCE, March 31, 1918.

DEAR SIS.—

This is Easter, and the first Easter that I have ever spent in France; but that is not very strange, either, for I never did travel very much. But I did manage to get some eggs, at least. Was out on a pass, and Clark and I went to a town about 7 miles away and got some eggs for dinner. Quite a distance to go for an egg dinner, I say.

We stopped in a Y. M. C. A. about 2½ miles from here and found two American girls in charge of it. Believe me, it seemed good to talk to someone—I mean some women—from America again. They were the first I had seen since the day we landed. Then some Red Cross girls gave us some apples on the train.

We are both as fine as ever and at the same work, working Spanish laborers. I like the work fine now. We have had a couple of rainy days; but we can stand that, I guess, as there have been very few of them since we arrived. Our detail makes it necessary to work ten hours daily; and when I do that and keep everything in shape, I do not have much time to spare.

I suppose that by the time this reaches you, things will begin to look like spring. Well, they do here now. Fruit trees have been in blossom here for three weeks and wild flowers are pretty thick most everywhere. I saw several johnny-jump-ups today.

April 7, 1918.

Sunday evening at the Y. M. C. A., and nothing to do for fifteen minutes. So I will write you a short letter just to say that I am the best ever. We are going to have song services in fifteen minutes. Hence the haste. We have a new Y. M. C. A. nearer home now, only about half as far as the old one and much nicer. We have a floor in this one and electric lights.

Well, we had a good song service. It is not quite over yet, but I have to finish this letter. We have some fine singers here. Have a couple companies of U. S. civilian workers here, over the draft age, and some mighty fine fellows, too. One is sure some leader.

From Your Brother,
C. C. KAIN.

Reduced and Promoted

THE NEWS will let Gray Woodcox tell the story of his reduction to the rank of private and his subsequent promotion, which he does in a letter to his parents:

"You will wonder why my heading is "Headquarters 3d F. A." now instead of "Battery D 3d F. A.," as heretofore. Well, it is easily explained; but not so readily understood, even by me, just how such a thing should come to pass. I have been transferred to regimental headquarters and am no longer a corporal. I was reduced to a private yesterday, but don't let that worry you. It had to be done; for I couldn't be transferred as a corporal, but only as a private. But, listen: by the same order that reduced me to a private, I was appointed regimental sergeant major, personnel section, 3d field artillery. There is only one non-commissioned officer, so far as I know, with any higher rank, and that is brigade sergeant major. I will get about $15 increase per month in my pay. My chief work is making out the rolls each month for the entire regiment and keeping all the data up to date during the month. I will have two expert stenographers, with the grade of sergeants, as my assistants. I am surely glad of the promotion; but, at the same time, I realize that I have a man's size job ahead of me; but I game to tackle anything, and am determined to make good, too. The captain of Battery D shook hands with me and congratulated me, saying that is what I got for being such a d—m good man in his office; and that he was glad of my promotion, although he did not like to see me leave. I tell you that made me feel proud."

The letter is dated May 5, at Camp Doniphan, Fort Sill, Okl.

BRAINSTORM

SAD FATE OF SORROWFUL JONES

He phoned and phoned till his phoner was sore.
Then died and went where he'll phone no more.

The snail, it shows no bursts of speed,
The caterpillar's slow;
But slower yet the telephone
Right here in old St. Joe.

HIS given name wasn't "Sorrowful." No fond mamma and doting papa would attach such a handicap as "Sorrowful" to a son, particularly to their first born; for the naming of that infant prodigious prodigy, the first son, is a pleasant, painstaking duty, in which the book is overhauled from Genesis to Revelations for something new, pretty and appropriate. Call the little darling "Sorrowful?" Never and thrice never! To have suggested such a name in the Jones household would have been family treason; and all with one accord—grandparents four, sisters, cousins and aunts—would have arisen and smitten the offender until he looked like a pro-German just escaped from a convincing argument with a bunch of patriots. His neighbors nicknamed him "Sorrowful" after he had sailed in life's ark for many years upon a sea of sorrows amidst a deluge of sorrows.

Upon the day we first see him, he should have been called "Joyful" Jones. He and Docile Jones—her name had been Docile Something Else a few minutes before—had just concluded a stunt with the preacher; and now, arm-in-arm, they were floating (walking is too mild a term) down Rhapsodie street toward Home. The grass never was so green, the flowers were never so delicately tinted nor fragrant, the heavens so etherially blue, the birds so song throated. Oh! they were blissfully blissful. There wasn't a single fly in the syrup of their bliss—not even a gnat.

"Now, dear," cooed Docile, "you must telephone our friends about our marriage. O-h-h-h !"—rapturously—"WON'T they be sur-per-ised." And then she tempted her husband with two kissable lips, and he did just what any sensible man would have done under the circumstances. Thus refreshed, Sorrowful (for such he soon became) rang the bell and started down the long toboggan slide toward the waters of woe.

"Numbeh ?"

"Give me Uncle John Philpott." Sorrowful smiled at Docile and Docile smiled at Sorrowful, and both drew a mind picture of Uncle John when the sur-per-ise came. A wait, long and tedious, followed by another wait, longer and more tedious. Sorrowful's thoughts would have been unfit for Docile's ears. All she heard was a few expressive snorts. What he would have done a year later is irrelevant and immaterial. Weeks later, Sorrowful learned in a roundabout way that when the "crick" overflowed, six months before, a rheumatic pole sank beneath its weight of wires and found rest in a bed of mud; that the old gentleman was busy at odd moments repairing the line and expected to have telephonic communication with the world re-established in about three months.

Next he tried Aunt Mehitable Sprague. There ensued a noise over the wire not unlike two vigorous alarm clocks running an endurance race. Sorrowful yelled until he was black in the face; and a faint voice, seemingly from Shanghai or Timbuctoo, was proof that Aunt Mehitable was busy, too. In the end, Aunt Mehitable called Sorrowful a fool, and he didn't understand what she said; and Sorrowful called Aunt Mehitable a fool, and she didn't understand what he said. So neither one had any forgiveness to ask. (Moral.—Never lose your temper over any but a bum phone.)

Sorrowful thought he might have better success with Grandpa Jabez Buzzby, and rang up accordingly. Did he hear Jabez ? If he did, Jabez's voice was so mixed up with others' voices that he could not distinguish it. He heard about Susan Sharp's baby crossing the Delaware, about Hez. Deter's catching a six-pound erysipelas on an outline down in Deacon Fletcher's cow pasture, about Nancy Hogan's sneezing her false teeth into a soup kettle and serving them for dinner, about—well, it isn't safe to print everything one hears.

Years rolled on, and Sorrowful phoned on; and then, one day, there came a ring on the NEWS telephone. Dick answered.

"I am," replied Dick modestly. He isn't proud.

"Mr. Widney, I am long-suffering and slow to anger," continued the mild voice. "I'm the man Tenny Alfredson wrote about.

Day in, day out, I ring and shout
In every kind of weather;
For phones may come and phones may go,
But I yell on forever.

I've been tryin' for forty-three years to tell my folks I just got married. A grandchild is playin' about my house and none of my relations know I am married, except cousin Dave Boggs. He lives just across the road, an' I hollered to him from the front porch. I've got enough phone receipts to paper the house; and I demand," the voice became an incoherent growl, "better service. If I don't, I'll swear out a writ of mandamus."

"Don't!" pleaded Dick, who caught the last word only and that none too clearly.

"I WILL!" roared Sorrowful, "I've sat at one of your pesticating phones till I've growed whiskers a yard long and a grouch worse than a hornet. I'm savager'n a man-eatin' lion and a school of sharks put together. Know me, do yeh ? I'm Sorrowful Jones, an' I'm goin' to make yeh as sorrowful as I be: I'll give yeh sunthin' to do besides draw yer salary."

"Salary!" gasped Dick. "Mr. Jones, if I depended upon my salary as director of the telephone company, I'd have to depend on the garage and the town pump for a living: one furnishes free air and the other free water. I'm a sort of a non-directing director: I've got about as much voice in the management of the company as a deaf and dumb man in an anarchist convention—as a muzzled pup in a dog fight."

"No, no!" quickly answered Dick, "I have troubles enough now without hiring someone to hunt up more. I'm the kickee of the company: I hear all the kicks irate patrons have to make, and they swarm

IF you have, get it on your fields where it will do some good. No, not with a wagon. You waste a full third of it if you do it that way, and you have a hard, dirty, disagreeable job besides. The easy way is the paying way. Get a Low Corn King spreader that will tear the manure into small pieces, discharge its load in 4 to 7 minutes, and spread it in an even coat over the entire surface of the ground. That's the way to use stable manure. Then you can depend upon an increase of crop yields without having to plant more acreage than you can care for. Look at present prices of farm produce. Raise all you can. Buy and use a

BOATSWAIN IS CITED FOR GREAT HEROISM

HOW JOHN MACKENZIE SAVED THE REMLIK WHEN A DEPTH CHARGE BROKE LOOSE.

HE CAPTURED THE BIG BOMB

Delivery of Locomotives Ordered by Government Starts in July—Germany Limits Spending Money of American Prisoners and Interned Civilians.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—Many members of the United States army and navy are being commended for bravery in action or in emergencies. A typical case is that of John Mackenzie, chief boatswain's mate, of the naval reserve force, described in a navy department statement.

The case is unique in that it has to do with one of the latest engines of war. As is well known, United States destroyers and other submarine fighters carry depth charges containing a large amount of high explosives which are dropped in the path of enemy submarines and explode under water. These have proved effective weapons in the destruction of U-boats, and they are safe enough when the safety pins are affixed; but when they get beyond control and the safety pin comes out they are a source of serious danger to the vessels carrying them. It will be recalled that the men on the U. S. S. Manley who lost their lives in the collision of that destroyer with a British vessel were killed by the explosion of one of these bombs.

In a heavy gale on the morning of December 17, 1917, a depth charge on the Remlik broke loose from its position on the stern. The box went overboard, but the charge was hurled in the opposite direction and went bouncing about the deck. As it weighs hundreds of pounds it was impossible for anyone to lift the bomb and carry it to safety. It was even dangerous for anyone to go to that part of the ship, as the seas were washing over the stern. As the officers and crew watched the bomb some one shouted: "The pin's come out!" Realizing the danger, Mackenzie, exclaiming, "Watch me; I'll get it," dashed down the deck and flung himself upon the charging cylinder. Three times he almost had his arms about the bomb, but each time it tore from him, once almost crushing him. The fourth time he got a firm grip on it and heaved it upright on one flat end. Then he sat on it and held it down. The charge might have broken loose again and exploded at any moment, blowing Mackenzie to bits, but he held on firmly until lines could be run to him and man and depth bomb safely lashed. Soon afterward the ship was headed up into the sea and the charge carried to a place of safety.

The commanding officer of the Remlik, in his report recommending that the medal of honor be conferred on Mackenzie, says:

"Mackenzie, in acting as he did, exposed his life and prevented a serious accident to the ship and probable loss of the ship and entire crew. Had this depth charge exploded on the quarterdeck with the sea and wind that existed at the time there is no doubt that the ship would have been lost."

Money intended for interned civilians and prisoners of war in Germany should be remitted through the bureau of prisoners' relief, American Red Cross, Washington, D. C. Remittances so made will probably not be delivered to addressees by the German government in cash, but in the form of credit on prison exchanges.

According to the Spanish ambassador at Berlin, the war department states that there are no restrictions in regard to the remittance of money for civilian and military prisoners. Such money is placed to prisoners' credit, and may be spent under the following regulations:

"Military prisoners. Sixty marks weekly may be spent by officers and others of similar rank; 50 marks weekly by non-commissioned officers and men.

"Civilian prisoners. Sixty marks weekly for men of better social position; 50 marks weekly for others."

A study is being made of the formulae and manufacturing processes of medicines requiring glycerin, and plans for the curtailment of the quantity now used in case it becomes necessary will be submitted to the general medical board of the Council of National Defense.

It is announced in the Bohemian press that experiments made with "paper cloth" have proved so successful that Hungarian state railways are to furnish their employees with summer clothing of this fabric.

In its regulations governing the price of wool the war industries board allows dealers to make a charge of three per cent of the selling price if the wool is not graded, and 3½ per cent if graded. This commission is to cover all storage, cartage and insurance.

An additional credit of $3,250,000 has been extended to Belgium by the United States, making a total of $107,-850,000 loaned to that country, and credits to all the allies $5,288,850,000.

Delivery of the first of the 1,025 locomotives ordered by the railroad administration will start in July, and deliveries will continue monthly during the rest of the year. The locomotives are of six standard types, with one heavy and one light style in each type. They vary in weight from 290,000 pounds to 540,000 pounds, and the entire order will cost about $60,000,000.

The six standard types are expected to eventually supersede the many kinds now in service, which embrace engines built according to 500 or more specifications. According to the railroad administration, this is the first real step ever taken toward the wide standardization of locomotives.

An order has also been placed for 100,000 freight cars of standard type to cost between $250,000,000 and $300,-000,000. Negotiations for the construction of many thousand additonal steel freight cars are still pending. The five types of cars ordered represent the standard forms of freight cars adopted by the railroad administration.

The adoption of these standard types, it is believed, will eventually substitute a few scientifically worked-out designs for the numerous miscellaneous varieties of cars, representing probably more than a thousand different old styles and specifications now in use, the accumulations of the past.

Before an airplane can be put into military service it must be equipped with at least nine delicate aeronautic instruments, some of which are absolutely essential to exact flying, and all contribute to the successful operation of a plane. One gives the pilot his location as to height and direction; others tell his speed through the air, the speed of his propeller, the amount of gasoline carried, water temperature, operation of the oiling system, and guide his "banking" on turns. Another necessary article is the oxygen-supplying apparatus, without which an aviator could not climb to any great height.

For operation of actual combat planes, such as observing, photographing, bombing, and fighting planes, other complicated and expensive instruments and sets of apparatus are necessary. Among them are machine guns, gun mounts, bomb racks, bomb-dropping devices, bomb sights, radio and photographic apparatus, electrically heated clothing, lights and flares. These bring the total cost of equipment for an airplane to several thousand dollars each, depending upon the type of plane.

Nearly 2,000 types and sizes of farm implements which have been gradually developed by manufacturers during peace-time competition have been recommended for elimination during the war by committees of the National Implement and Vehicle association. The object, according to a statement by the Council of National Defense, is to conserve materials, labor, capital, and manufacturing facilities for war use.

In the report of the committee meetings to the commercial economy board of the Council of National Defense it was stated that no machinery recommended for discard was believed to be necessary to modern economical agriculture. The lines considered by the committees consisted of steel and chilled plows, grain drills, seeders, and other tillage implements and farm cultivators.

Such of the recommendations as the board deems suitable, with others from different sources, are being brought to the attention of all implement manufacturers and jobbers, and as many retail dealers as may be reached, through questionnaires.

A number of high-grade news photographers are urgently needed by the signal corps. These men must have expert experience in the handling of speed cameras, such as Graflex, Graphic, and also understand speeds of lenses and various makes of cameras and operation of same. Only those men who can furnish references as to their actual experience as news photographers will receive consideration.

The men selected for this branch of the service will be sent to a school for military training. Upon completion of the training they will be promoted to grades of sergeant, first class, and will be ordered overseas in a short time. Applicants must be citizens of the United States between the ages of 21 and 31. All communications should be addressed to Air Division, Training Section, Photographic Branch, Washington, D. C.

Advice from Shanghai states that the subscriptions to the third Liberty Loan there amount to over $600,000, and a report from the American embassy in Mexico City states the subscriptions there are more than $350,000.

Regulations for bread-making in Sweden permit only nine kinds, the weight and price being prescribed by law. Only rye, wheat, barley, or oat flour may be used, and for ordinary bread the use of butter, lard or other fat, milk or cream is prohibited.

Recent contracts by the war department authorize the manufacture of 3,500,000 pairs of metallic-fastened field shoes for overseas use. The average price was about $7.75 a pair.

Contracts have also been awarded for the manufacture of 2,000,000 pairs of field welt shoes for United States and overseas service, the average price being $6.50.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Washington, D. C.—Patents have been granted the following Indianians: Jason L. Alderson, South Bend, rotary valve; Ora S. Downing, Indianapolis, assignor to W. P. Wayne, for sausage; Harlan Products company, of Indianapolis, for poultry and stock regulations, and Schnull & company, of Indianapolis, for certain named foods.

Hartford City.—One of the practices indulged by road builders in Blackford county is to relieve the county of the expense of superintendents in this construction. It has been the custom in this county for years for the county commissioners to appoint the superintendent of construction and the contractor pays him out of the money received on the job instead of the county paying the bill. It is not necessary to make any comments on this practice. Hence in the reports of work done in this county filed by A. L. Donaldson, civil engineer, and Horace W. C. Fostdick and Thad L. Major, field examiners of the state board of acounts there is no record of the pay the superintendents of construction received. That is a matter between the superintendent and the contractor.

Martinsville.—Walter Jordan, forty years old, was killed instantly by lightning during a very severe electrical storm. He was returning from the field to his home in Madison Township in company with three others, when struck. The other men were knocked down, but were not injured, aside from a severe shock. A heavy rain and hailstorm swept over this county at the same time. Several farmers report the loss of horses or stock from the lightning. A barn on the farm of Jesse Hammonds, one mile from where Jordan was killed, was struck by lightning and burned, five horses perishing.

Lawrenceburg.—Ullie T. Griffith, city school enumerator, has completed the enumeration of children between the ages of six and twenty-one, which shows 455 white boys, 481 white girls, three negro boys and eight negro girls, a total of 947, showing a decrease of 87 since the 1917 enumeration. There are 151 children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen, 306 boys and 355 girls attending schol and 130 boys and 84 girls who are reported as being regularly employed.

Indianapolis.—Indiana lost $6,179,-436 from 5,764 fires in 1917, according to statistics compiled by H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal. Of the total $3,294,067 was in buildings and $2,-885,369 in contents. There were 116 incendiary fires with a loss of $219,-640. In the year 3,748 dwellings burned, the loss being $1,307,511 in buildings and $462,144 in contents. Defective flues and sparks caused most of the dwelling fires. Lightning caused 251 fires and a loss of $313,347. The per capita fire loss in Indianapolis in 1917 was $2.89.

Petersburg.—The blackberry crop in southern Indiana is practically a failure and not enough berries will mature to supply the pickers alone. The berries have frozen out, only the hardiest varieties surviving. Black raspberry briers also suffered severely from the cold winter, but red raspberries escaped. The strawberry crop will be large. Four hundred acres are being planted in tomatoes and 100 acres in cantaloupes.

Hammond.—The Lake county council of defense, apparently lacking confidence in the sincerity of the city and county authorities to drive vice from the suburbs of Chicago, west of the state line, has appealed to Secretary of War Baker and the Illinois council of defense to oust the vicious saloons and resorts in West Hammond and Burnham. It was pointed out to the federal agencies that nearly 100,000 munition workers from Gary, Whiting, Hammond and East Chicago are menaced by evil conditions.

Shelbyville.—Several road contracts, which were to have been awarded by the Shelby county board of commissioners, were continued until the close of the war. The action was taken on request of the state council of defense. The commissioners also continued until the June session applications for renewal of liquor licenses.

Bluffton.—The program for the eleventh annual meeting of the Eight District Indiana Federation of Women's clubs here May 17 contains the names of a number of prominent Indiana women. Mrs. James P. Goodrich, of Indianapolis, trustee of the Indianapolis federation and Mrs. John E. Moore, president of the state organization, are among the principal speakers. Others on the program are Mrs. E. W. Barret, Muncie; Mrs. Ella Bagot Kehner, Anderson; Mrs. H. C. Durbin, Anderson; Mrs. Emogene Taft Lesh, Muncie; Mrs. Elma Wood, Winchester; Mrs. Paul Juqua, Portland.

Noblesville.—Indiana's state highway commission law, passed at the last session of the legislature, and which was regarded as one of the most important measures enacted, was held unconstitutional here by Judge Cloe, of the Hamilton county circuit court. The action was taken in overruling a demurrer filed by the state against a suit questioning the validity of the act, which was filed by Robert House, a wealthy farmer living in this county. The defendants in the proceeding were L. H. Wright, chairman of the state highway commission, and its other members, together with Otto L. Klauss, state auditor. While the case can now go to trial on its merits, it is understood that this course will not be followed by the state, since the ruling of Judge Clore on the demurrer indicates what this final decision would be. Instead, it is expected that the defendants will appeal at once to the state supreme court.

Bloomington.—Women outranked the men in standing in their classes at Indiana university in the first semester of 1917-18, according to the official figures of averages. The report shows that the highest average of percentages was held by undergraduate women members of the Indiana club, the standing being 90.60 per cent. The men of the Indiana club had an average of 88.57, leading all other men organizations of undergraduates. Of the sororities, Kappa Alpha Theta, with a percentage of 88.10 led, with Kapa Kappa Gamma next, standing 85.70. The second of the men's organizations was Phi Kappa Psi, average grade 85.63, leading all the fraternities. The sororities stood higher than the fraternities. All women, 85.45; sororities, 85.61; non-organized women, 84.39. All men and women, 82.17. Nonorganized men, 82.29; all men, 78.99, and fraternities, 77.44.

Lafayette.—In Indiana 22 county agents and five city women demonstration agents have launched their campaigns as part of the wartime food conservation drive for the wider use of potatoes in every home during the next two months to save a surplus crop of 30,000,000 bushels. In addition to demonstrating new and appetizing ways of preparing potato dishes, these women, who are working under the direction of the home economics department of Purdue university, will endeavor to have the grocers handle the "spuds" at a low margin of profits. The demonstration agents will work in connection with the schools, boys and girls' clubs, merchants and others in urging the wider consumption of potatoes.

South Bend.—Indiana is asked to raise $7,500,000 instead of $3,000,000 in its special drive during Thrift stamp week, May 27 to June 5, according to an announcement made at the state headquarters of the War Savings and Thrift stamp committees here. This is about $2.50 per capita for the population of the state and with the sales already made and what is expected to be sold between now and the beginning of the intensive state-wide campaign, this $7,500,000 will bring Indiana up to its quota by the first of June. During the year, Indiana is expected to raise $58,000,-000 through the sale of War Savings and Thrift stamps.

Indianapolis.—Cars for the transportation of perishable foodstuffs in the coming season will have the particular care of the director-general of railroads, the Indiana state council of defense has been informed by Robert E. Wright, assistant director. Recently the state council advised the office of the director-general that many producers of perishables were hesitating about putting in their usual crops, or increased acreage, for fear there would be no cars in which to ship their harvest. Canners, especially, were concerned, it was said.

Evansville.—Local attorneys began proceedings to confiscate $2,700 of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale held here of property formerly owned by the Steinbach family, pioneers of Evansville, on the grounds that the estate is alien enemy property. The sale, which was conducted by William Habbe, sheriff of Vanderburg county, was brought about by a delinquent $200 assessment against the property for street improvements. Ed Kraft bought the property for $3,100. The estate is owned by relatives of the Steinbach family in Prussia.

Washington, D. C.—Indiana is to have the honor of firing the first gun in the Republican national campaign for 1920. The gun will be fired at Indianapolis May 28, the date set for the Indiana Republican state convention, and the ammunition will be in the form of a state party platform. Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee, in Washington consulting Republican congressional leaders regarding the platform.

Richmond.—Thirty-six physicians of Wayne county have signified their intention to enter army medical corps, after a meeting here, which was addressed by Capt. H. J. Ware of Camp Zachary Taylor. Seventeen physicians are ready to enter the service at once and others are willing to go as soon as they can arrange their affairs.

Columbus.—Cyrus R. Clevenger, city civil engineer here, resigned to enlist in the navy; Ralph Yeley of the night police force resigned to go into the the soft drink business; Edward Stadler, assistant engineer, and Frank Laurie, fireman at the water works, resigned to take other employment at higher wages. The men stated that the city's salaries are too low.

Gary.—The first gun of the heavy artillery type for Pershing's forces was forged at the Gary Ordinance company. Production of 55 mm. guns and 17-inch howitzers will be made on a large scale.

"I shall want some money today, dear," said George Pipwhistle to his wife before the latter set out for business one morning in 1927. And Mrs. Pipwhistle, grumbling the while, handed out the chips and waved her hand from the garden gate as she made a dash for the eight-nineteen.

Three hours after Mrs. P. had returned from the city, George Pipwhistle came in. He had a mountain of parcels in his arms and the light of triumph in his eyes.

"Yes," he panted, as he untied the parcels and disclosed four corkscrews, a stuffed owl, an assortment of paint brushes, a remnant of a cloth-bound "Uncle Tom's Cabin," six walking sticks, a toasting fork, a brace of tin openers and a roasting jack. "Such a scramble! It's just about the best bargain sale that ever was!"

Get New Kidneys!

The kidneys are the most overworked organs of the human body, and when they fail in their work of filtering out and throwing off the poisons developed in the system, things begin to happen.

One of the first warnings is pain or stiffness in the lower part of the back; highly colored urine; loss of appetite; indigestion; irritation, or even stone in the bladder. These symptoms indicate a condition that may lead to that dreaded and fatal malady, Bright's disease, for which there is said to be no cure.

Do not delay a minute. At the first indication of trouble in the kidney, liver bladder or urinary organs start taking Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules, and save yourself before it is too late. Instant treatment is necessary in kidney and bladder troubles. A delay is often fatal.

You can almost certainly find immediate relief in Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules. For more than 200 years this famous preparation has been an unfailing remedy for all kidney, bladder and urinary troubles.

It is the pure, original Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used. About two capsules each day will keep you toned up and feeling fine. Get it at any drug store, and if it does not give you almost immediate relief, your money will be refunded. Be sure you get the GOLD MEDAL brand. None other genuine. In boxes, three sizes.—Adv.

No Pleasure in Idleness.

Idleness is never a source of pleasure. The nation puts folks on enforced idleness as a punishment. A well-earned rest is a boom to any busy man, but that's far from idleness. The idler is just a spender, a parasite, a candidate for social ostracism and the poorhouse. He soon loses the power for real enjoyment. He's just a burden to himself and the folks around him. He's always hunting happiness, but is too sluggish to use the means that bring it. His is the passive existence of indolence, stagnation and deadness. The very faculties capable of giving pleasure are obsolescent. It's no use to dream about happiness unless you are willing to do a little to help bring it. Like love it wears best when used.

A Square Meal.

Some American soldiers in the trenches were discussing the food situation when one said: "Just think of it, potatoes, steak, butter, honey, fruit, pie, and two eggs."

Another soldier reminded him that such a feed was not to be had at any price.

"Why," said the first, "it's not to eat it's to think about."

WINNERS DON'T USE IT.

I have been asked to tell what I think of the liquor question and I have to break over the traces at the jump. I do not discuss the "liquor question."

Spades are always spades with me, and I always call them spades. That is why I use the word booze. I can talk about booze and its effects, but such a nice expression as the "liquor question" gets my goat. Giving the stuff the right handle I can grab it and tell all I know about it.

Here it is, in one bunch: Booze doesn't make winners.

There never was a winner in the world that built his winning on booze. I don't care what line you get into, you won't find one winner who used the stuff to his advantage.

Ask Grover Cleveland Alexander how much booze has helped to make him the best pitcher that Charles Weeghman could buy to give the Cubs a pennant.

Go out to your Chicago university and ask Coach Stagg how much booze he feeds his football or baseball players, or his track athletes.

Ask Charlie Comiskey—bless his old heart—if booze ever helped him when he was first-basing around the country. Or ask him how much booze has done for Eddie Collins or Red Faber, or that center fielder of his, Happy Felsch.

You'll get the same answer anywhere you go—the old, old answer to the so-called "liquor question." It doesn't pay, it never has paid, and it never will pay.

And winners don't use it. They can't use it and win. And, after all, the Lord must love a winner. For winning means clean living, and clean living means efficiency, and efficiency means decency. None of these things takes off its hat and makes itself at home where booze hangs out.

To any reader who can name one man that has won with booze, I'll name a hundred—yes, a thousand—who have lost.—Billy Sunday in Chicago Examiner.

FOOD, OR DRINK?

"Food will win the war." But drink must lose it.
Why, then, as a nation, do we booze it?
What are all our soldiers fighting for
Indeed, if not, and soon, to win the war?

If food will win, and if the drinking won't,
Why are we sending soldiers to the front,
And holding fast at home by wine and beer?
Must we go on, so, weary year on year?

Yes, "Food will win," we loyally may say,
When Food makes manhood stronger, day by day;
But weakened manhood by the power of booze,
And how can men do other, then, than lose?

While brewers waste the food which means our might,
How shall our soldiers make a winning fight?
If beer must be at home the bread of life,
Why send our boys abroad, to losing strife?

They risk their lives, and possibly their souls,
In fight for freedom's highest, grandest goals;
Shall we be cowards thus to see them lose
Because we fear the brewer and his booze?

—National Advocate.

WHAT MODERATE DRINKING DOES.

The degeneration due to the so-called "moderate" consumption of alcohol is very similar to senile decay, in the opinion of Prof. G. Sims Woodhead, M. A., M. D., F. R. C. P., F. R. S. E., of Cambridge university, England.

"Alcoholic degeneration, however," Professor Woodhead points out, "does not proceed equally in every part of the body. The weaker tissues are first attacked and the patient gives way at the weak link of the chain. Alcohol calls upon the reserve strength which ought to be held like a balance at the bank to meet sudden and unexpected emergencies. If you have such a physical reserve, you are able to tide over emergencies and wear out gradually, but if you let alcohol withdraw your balance, exhausting your reserve, you may become a physical bankrupt at any moment."

HOW TO AVOID FOOD RIOTS.

Says Dr. Haven Emerson, commissioner of health, New York city: "If we would avoid serious food riots, such as occurred last year in this city, and which might be brought to a head any time, by reduction in available bread and milk for the poor, we must cut off the daily expenditure in this city of a million dollars a day, which is now the city's daily liquor bill. We must get that money out of liquor into food."

A SUMMIT OF PROGRESS

Governor Cox of Ohio pardoned a convict on condition that he stay away from the saloon. "Why," asks the Ohio State Journal, "not impose this upon all men?

If every man would abstain and keep out of saloons as this man has promised to do there would not be any penitentiaries, or if there were, they would not be much larger than county jails. Even from a social standpoint, leaving the moral out altogether, it would turn out to be a summit of progress.

THREE KINDS OF GENTLEMEN

Somewhat Peculiar Distinctions That Are Made by Inhabitants of the Emerald Island.

Ireland is the only country in which it has ever been customary to classify gentlemen as of three distinct kinds or species.

Probably the distinctions are still recognized to some extent in the Emerald Isle, but two centuries ago, and even much later, they were defined respectively as (one) the "half-mounted," (two) the "gentleman every inch of him," and (three) the "gentleman to the backbone."

The first class consisted of descendants of Cromwell's soldiers, who, if they could ride well, were called "Buckskin Breeches," or "Squireens."

The second class was composed of descendants of old families whose estates had been forfeited to the crown (for rebellion or other reasons), and who had been compelled to lower themselves by working for a living, in trade or the professions.

The third class—the "gentlemen to the backbone"—comprised the old stock, or folks who lived on the ancient family estates and the labor of the peasantry pertaining to their domains.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

Recruiters Please Notice.

In our city they were recruiting a battalion of short men known as the "Bantams."

One day our little four-year-old soldier came in complaining of tiredness. When asked what he had been doing he said, "I've been recruiting all day."

"Which battalion are you recruiting for?" he was asked.

"The Bantams," he replied.

"How many did you get?" was the next query.

"Oh," he said with a little sigh of weariness. "I recruited 500 bantams and one rooster!"—Canadian.

The Unkind Voice.

A politician who was running for congress, thought it worth while to make mention of his humble origin and early struggles.

"I don't know but I'll get into this war myself before it's over," mused Farmer Corntossel.

"Wouldn't that be fine!" exclaimed his wife. "Maybe you an' Josh would be in the same company."

"It wouldn't do. Josh has had too much start in the chance for promotion. Like as not he'd be under the painful necessity of disciplinin' me fur not speakin' respectful to my superior officer."

In No Hurry.

A rookie a Great Lakes was noted for being late. He was always the last to be dressed and the last to turn out. At last the company commander, exasperated by the rookie's tardiness, called him to the front of the company and said: "Say, are you with us in this war or not?"

AN INDIANA CASE.

Mrs. James A. Stitsworth, Bell Ave., Redkey, Ind., says: "For four years I had dropsy in its worst form and was a complete wreck. My back was weak and painful, my feet and body swelled and my nerves were all unstrung. I had terrible dizzy spells and was fast losing my sight. I had given up hope when Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention. I tried them and continued use cured me and although I am now over 70 years old, I am enjoying the best of health."

AN OHIO CASE.

A. Dearth, N. Main St., Camden, Ohio, says: "I was so bad with kidney trouble I nearly died. I wanted to take out a life insurance, but they wouldn't accept me, my kidneys were in such bad shape. The pains in my back were awful and I had chills and fever, too. I lost 27 pounds and my condition was serious. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me as soon as I took them. REALLY SEEMED ONLY WAY

Smith's Idea Was Bright Enough if the Horse Would Only Do His Part in the Game.

John Smith bought a horse. The first Sunday after the purchase he and his bosom pal harnessed the horse to a trap and went into the country on a fishing trip. At the shore of the lake they unharnessed the horse and let it loose while they fished.

Presently the sun began to go down, and Smith and pal decided to get ready for the return journey. They caught the horse, and Smith began to harness it. But here they met a difficulty. The horse wouldn't open its mouth for the bit.

They tried every means they could think of, but still the stubborn animal stood with closed mouth, placidly watching them.

At last Smith sat on the ground and began to tell jokes—horrible, moth-eaten jokes, that Adam would have thought chestnuts.

"What on earth are you doing?" asked Smith's pal.

"Trying to get the beast to yawn," said Smith.

The Reason.

"I hear you have a college graduate for a cook. Isn't that very expensive?"

"Not very. She works for her board and clothes."

"How is that?"

"She's my wife."

A Sluggish Liver Needs Attention

An Inactive Liver Affects the Kidneys and Deranges the Stomach and Bowels.

Too much stress can not be placed on the necessity of keeping the liver in good condition; upon it the health of the body largely depends. When the liver becomes sluggish, the kidneys are overworked, the digestive fluids are not properly secreted and a languid, bilious, nervous or sick headachy condition results. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body. Constipation, bloating, dizziness, belching, pain or soreness in the right side, impaired vision and, in fact, most diseases have their origin in an inactive liver. An inactive liver is easily corrected if taken in time, but the only way to doctor is to get at the cause. Glando Tonic is a liver remedy that has a splendid record for renewing activity, removing the poisons and building up the system. For bilious attacks, it can not be beaten. Mothers who are nursing a baby should take Glando Tonic to keep the bowels well regulated. This will keep baby's bowels in a good condition. Glando Tonic is a three-in-one treatment that brings results. A trial will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials will be furnished upon request. Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be obtained by sending 50c direct to the Grand-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

When the Austrians last October routed the Italian Army by trickery and drove before them half a million refugees, the part which the American Red Cross played in this stupendous tragedy will go down in the history of Italy and the world as one of the most magnificent dashes of relief work that has ever come to light.

Listen to what the Italian Premier said of this work in his address at the opening of Parliament early last December:

"Our soul is stirred again with appreciation and with admiration for the magnificent dash with which the American Red Cross has brought us powerful aid in our recent misfortune. We attribute great value to the co-operation which will be given us against the common enemy by the prodigious activity and by the exuberant and consistent force which are peculiar to the American people."

And this, mind you, was only a little over a month after the American Red Cross made its triumphant dash into Italy!

Commencement

Days are Over for the 1918 Class of Spencer Township High School and they are now Planning Future Activities.

A class of six—Misses Delphia Coburn, Goldie Hull, Daie Shull and Gladys Watson and Harry Hirsch and Walter Silberg—has completed the prescribed course in the Spencerville high school; and at commencement exercises, held at the Lutheran church last Friday evening, each received from Supt. Bertha Thornburgh the reward for four years' diligent work, a diploma.

The leading event of the evening was the class address, delivered by Dr. Frank E. Jaynes, of Wabash. The doctor is popular with Spencer township audiences, this being his third consecutive appearance at graduation exercises. No better compliment could have been paid him than Miss Thornburgh's introduction. She said: "All I need say is that Dr. Frank E. Jaynes is here and will address us." No more was required. Next moment, Dr. Jaynes was bowing his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted him.

Dr. Jaynes address was upon the great over-shadowing, all-pervading subject that is absorbing the attention of mankind, the world war, emphasizing the conditions that will exist after it is over. He prophesied that this great upheaval would bring about changed conditions for the better, although the extent and range of these changes no one can foresee. He advised his hearers, particularly the members of the graduating class, to get ready for them, giving the words of Lincoln: "I will prepare. Perhaps my time will come."

Before this, however, Dr. Jaynes traced the origin of war. A young prince, he said, looked from the walls of the city over which he ruled and saw in the distance the walls of the possessions of another prince, and he conceived the idea of doing something that none of his predecessors had ever dreamed of. A few nights later, he put it into execution: he stole out at the head of a band of armed men and surprised and captured the other city. To his armed men, he added those of the conquered city. With these, he subjected another place; and thus he went on, increasing his army and enlarging his domain until he ruled over an empire. In time, one of his successors went down before a mightier hand than his own; and this was the fate of every world-empire—of Assyria, of Babylonia, of Persia, of Greece, and of Rome and also of Napoleon, who for a time defied the combined powers of Europe. But the source of power was always men—armed men; and today the contending hosts outnumber all the men that ever bore arms in all the wars since the beginning of history.

Miss Thornburgh requested the class to arise; and after a brief presentation speech, handed each one his diploma. And then something happened that wasn't down on the program: Harry Hirsch announced that he had a speech to make. He disappeared into one of the class rooms beside the rostrum, whence he soon reappeared bearing a silver card receiver. This he presented to Miss Thornburg on behalf of the class. She, in turn, thanked the donors, saying at the outset that she might have known "Harry Hirsch would have the last word." And right here a short digression is permissible: Miss Thornburg has for five years been superintendent of the Spencer township schools—five successful years; and much of that success is due to her efficient, untiring efforts.

Music was furnished by an Auburn orchestra; and, in addition, there was a finely-rendered vocal solo by Mark Shull. The invocation was by Rev. A. K. Mumma, and he pronounced the benediction.

The church was tastily decorated. The class motto, "Be Equal to Our Trust," was very prettily arranged, the words constituting it being upon a neatly designed pair of balanced scales.

Obituary

Azariah VanZile, son of Azariah and Susan VanZile, was born in Ashland county, Ohio, on May 8, 1853; and died on the sixty-fifth anniversary of his birth at his home in Spencerville.

When he was about 6 months old, his parents moved to Allen county, Indiana, where he spent the greater part of his life.

On Oct. 18, 1885, he was united in marriage to Silvia Moudy. To this union were born three children —Minnie, Tillie and Clifford. Minnie preceded her father to the great beyond.

About thirty years ago, he made peace with God and united with the M. E. church at Hurshtown; and later he transferred his membership to the Spencerville church, of which he was a faithful member until sickness prevented.

About ten years ago, Mr. VanZile was attacked by creeping paralysis, which deprived him of the joys and activities of the church, although his hope was in Christ, and he could say with Apostle Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

He is survived by his widow, two children, two grandchildren, one brother, five sisters and a host of other relatives and friends.

The funeral was held at the M. E. church at 2 p. m. on Friday, Rev. Bryan officiating. Interment at the White City cemetery.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord,
  When love has bound the heart.
'Tis hard, so hard, to speak the words:
  Must we forever part?

Dearest loved one, we have laid thee
  In the quiet grave's embrace;
But thy memory will be cherished
  Till we see thy loving face.

CARD OF THANKS

The family desires to express their sincere thanks to the neighbors and friends for their kindness during the sickness and death of husband and father; also for the beautiful floral offerings.

Play For Red Cross

Last Saturday evening, students of Spencerville high school gave an entertainment for the benefit of the Red Cross. It was given at the Lutheran church and was in the form of a double number—two plays, "Captain Anne of the Red Cross" and "Somewhere in France."

The first play was an "Adamless Eden," there being not a single "horrid boy" in the entire cast; and in this one respect was not true to life; for nowhere in this broad land of ours could a bevy of such winsome girls assemble without boys' being there doing their bit.

The play opens with a number of Red Cross young ladies sewing for the soldiers. After they adjourn, Ann (Delphia Coburn) comes back and overhears a plot, in adjoining room, to blow up the munitions plant in the town. In the evening, the girls reassemble at the Red Cross room and Ann makes known her discovery. They organize into a ghost company and, with Anne as captain, sally forth to scare the plotters and save the factory. In this, they are successful, although this does not appear in the play. Bridget O'Flannigan (Irish) and Mary Dokenwaddle (German), enacted by Fanny Vallieu and Leone Widdifield respectively, furnished amusement for the audience. Others in the cast were Lola Beam, Margaret Lake, Edith Berry, Aileen Allen, Aileen Rhodes, Minnie Walker and Laura Goings.

Following is the cast of characters in the second play, "Somewhere in France:"

Pierre Graudet, a Frenchman, who has lost two sons in the war and who, with his family, refuses to leave his home, within sound of the German guns, Harry Hirsch.
Madame Graudet, his wife, Gaylon Markle.
Jean Graudet, their son, who is blinded by a German shell, but recovers his sight, Otis Koch
Nanon Graudet, their daughter, Mary Tyndall.
Lisette Graudet, another daughter, Garnet Beams.
Mary Dale, an American Red Cross nurse, Bernice Hart.
Dr. Montaine, a surgeon in the French army, Harold Miller.

Harry Hirsch threw pep into his words and action and rendered a difficult part in a manner that would do credit to a professional actor. Gaylon Markle and Mary Tyndall also were good, and little Garnet Beams was immenee. Otis Koch, the young soldier, acquitted himself creditably. Jean Graudet knew a good thing when he saw it —likewise when he couldn't see it— and capitulated to the charms of his American nurse. Do you blame him? Bernice Hart looked charming in her Red Cross uniform and played her part well. As Miss Dale, she was somewhat of a politician (Yankee blood will tell): her solicitude for the wounded soldier was so great that she made all, even his parents, leave the room, because it wouldn't do for him to be agitated; and then—oh, subtle daughter of Eve!—she inveigled him into agreeing to let her become Mrs. Jean Graudet and did it so adroitly that he thought he was popping the question, much to their mutual satisfaction. Harold Miller made the most out of a minor part.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

When you compare the low prices of Ford cars with the prices of farm produce, farm stock and everything else on the market, the great value of the Ford car can be fairly estimated. The price for the Ford Touring Car is only $450 f. o. b. Detroit—the same as last year. It is the greatest value, not only among motor cars, but in the whole run of articles grown and manufactured. Think of a five-passenger motor car with the reputation for service, durability and economy that's behind the Ford car, selling for $450! We urge prospective purchasers to give their orders without delay.

HOME GARDEN SHOULD PRODUCE SURPLUS FOR WINTER STORAGE

A half-acre garden, if cared for properly, will produce far more vegetables than the average family can consume during the maturing period of the crops. Only a small portion of a garden of this size should be devoted to those vegetables that must be used as soon as they reach maturity. It is advisable to devote the major portion of the space to those crops which if not needed at once may be kept for winter use. In fact, if the space is available the garden should be planned with the definite purpose of growing crops for storage for winter use.

Late beets, late cabbage, carrots, celery, onions, parsnips, late potatoes, sweet potatoes, salsify, and late turnips may be stored in their natural condition and if possible should be grown to the extent of the family needs for storage for winter use.

Work Garden All Season.

It is possible in nearly all sections of the country to grow late beets, late cabbage, late potatoes and turnips on ground that has already produced a crop of lettuce, radishes, beans, early peas, early potatoes, or some crop requiring a relatively short period for its maturity. Gardeners are inclined to neglect the opportunities for crop production in the garden after the first of the season has passed and frequently space is allowed to lie idle that should be producing a crop of late potatoes, cabbage or turnips. In sections where the season is short it is possible to plant the late crops between the rows of early crops before the early crops are removed, thus gaining two or three weeks' time.

Late potatoes may be planted on ground from which early peas or string beans have been removed.

Late cabbage may be planted between the rows of early potatoes before this crop is mature. Turnips may be sown between the rows of late corn and late bush beans. Late beets may be planted between the rows of late beans and will grow long after frost has killed the beans.

Storage in the Home.

By utilizing every square foot of space in the garden a considerable quantity of vegetables may be grown for storage for winter use. If no storage facilities exist in the home all the crops suitable for keeping may be stored in outdoor banks or pits. However, it is not at all difficult to provide storage facilities in most homes, it being only necessary to make use of the cellar, the attic, a large closet, or other parts of the dwelling, depending upon the character of the product to be stored.

Beans, including the Limas, may be stored dry, and it is advisable to grow them to as great an extent as possible for winter use. Limas and other pole beans may be planted around the fence, it being possible in this way to produce considerable quantities of dried beans for winter use. The pods should be allowed to remain on the vines until dry enough to rattle, should then be gathered, spread on the attic floor or in some other dry place, and when dry, shelled and stored in bags.

GOOD SUCCESSION OF CROPS

Garden Should Be Kept Busy All Season—Plan Given for Grouping Various Vegetables.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

All the ground in the garden should be kept fully occupied all the season. As soon as one crop is removed, something else should take its place. The following grouping of vegetables will serve to indicate which ones may precede or follow others.

Crops Occupying the Ground All the Season.

Beans, pole
Beans, pole Lima Cucumbers
Eggplant
Melons
Okra
Onions, from seed
Parsnips
Pumpkins
Peppers
Potatoes, Irish, main crop
Tomatoes
Squash
Potatoes, sweet

Early Crops Which May Be Followed by Others.

Beans, bush
Beets
Cabbage, early
Carrots
Corn, early
Lettuce
Peas
Potatoes, early
Radish
Spinach
Turnips

Late Crops Which May Follow Others.

Beets
Brussels sprouts
Cabbage, late
Cauliflower
Celery
Corn, sweet
Kale
Peas
Spinach
Turnips

In planning the garden all early-maturing crops should be grouped together, so that after removal the ground will be available as a unit for planting something else. It is not always necessary to wait until the crop is removed. Late cabbage or sweet corn may be planted between the rows of early potatoes some two or three weeks before the potatoes are harvested. Some dissimilar crop should follow the first crop occupying the ground, in order to help in the control of insects and diseases.

WITH THE LARK!

Gardening before breakfast starts any day right.

Those tomato stakes? Where are they? Expensive kindling.

Are you saving some finely sifted coal ashes to loosen that clayey spot?

Planting Castor Beans.

A bushel of castor beans of the India variety will plant from 15 to 20 acres. The seed should be soaked in warm water for 12 to 24 hours before planting. Such treatment makes germination more rapid and certain.

Mining Soil Profitable.

Mining the soil can only be made profitable by the miner turning manufacturer and selling his product on the market nearest the consumer, and returning the waste to the soil.

COMING UP TO SCRATCH

Surely a uniform! Overalls.

A few yards of wire netting may mean peace with your chicken-loving neighbor.

If that doesn't work, try a gentle message to his wireless run.

Growing Specialties.

It will pay the home gardener to grow certain specialties of which he may be fond, and which may be troublesome or expensive to purchase. Okra is an example of this class, and little beds of parsley, chives or other herbs take up very little room and provide the housewife with additions for her table which are most welcome if they can be picked conveniently and at the right moment.

Plants which grow high and cause heavy shade should not be located where they will interfere with sun-loving small plants. It is well, also, to separate perennials, such as rhubarb and asparagus which are not cultivated, from plants which must be tilled.

The same kind of vegetables should not be grown twice, if this can be avoided, in the same part of the garden. If a radically different kind is grown, disease spores and insects, though present in the soil, probably will not attack the second crop.

Ready Market for Crops.

Early cabbage, cauliflower, celery, tomato and other garden plants should find a ready market this year. Florists in some of the towns and cities are using part of their houses for growing this kind of stock.

Depth for Planting Beans.

Beans of any kind should not be planted any deeper than is necessary to secure good germination. This should never be more than 2 inches and on heavy soil it should not be more than 1¼ to 1½ inches.

Many Gardens Neglected.

Many gardens which start very favorably in the spring gradually decline in productivity as the season advances, and become weed patches long before fall arrives.

Great Nitrogen User.

Corn is a great user of nitrogen, while potatoes and root crops need plenty of potassium. Has your soil enough of these?

Don't Experiment.

Do not experiment with crops about which you know nothing. There is no easy way of beating the crop production game.

WAGE INCREASE IS ALLOWED R. R. MEN

Advances to 1,939,399 Employees, Based on Living Cost, Totals $300,000,000.

M'ADOO MAY NOT APPROVE IT

Report of Commission Submitted to Director General Results in Protest From Four Principal Brotherhoods.

Washington, D. C., May 9.—Railroad employees to the number of 1,939,399 will receive wage advances ranging from 1 to 43 per cent to the lowest paid workers, the total aggregating $300,000,000, according to the report of the railroad wage commission submitted to Director General McAdoo.

Mr. McAdoo is expected to adopt only part of the recommendations and probably will make a number of different alignments in deciding what wage increases shall be granted.

In general, the director general advocates higher pay for most classes of workmen to enable them to meet increased living costs, but he has been represented as favoring proportionately larger increases for some classes than for others now making the same pay. He also is strongly opposed to granting wage increases which might disarrange the general scheme of pay existing throughout other industries.

Leaders to Protest.

The leaders of the four principal railway brotherhoods found on examining the report that they had been recommended for less than half the increases they had asked of the railroad managements before government control started and which they repeated before the commission. Their demands had been for an average of somewhat less than 40 per cent, and increases for them average less than 20 per cent.

Some union leaders who anticipated that the commission's recommendations would not be for as great amounts as they had asked already have appealed to Director General McAdoo to amend the proposed scale to give them higher pay. Others, however, virtually have agreed to accept the report.

The wage advances, which range all the way from $1 to $34 a month, are increases above the amount of pay each employee was receiving on December 31, 1915. Employees who have received advances since that date will benefit now to the extent of the difference between their present wage and that fixed by the wage commission.

The net cost of the additional pay to the railroads is estimated at $200,000,000. This is exclusive of the estimated deficit of $800,000,000 in government operation of the railroads this year, as a result of which Director General McAdoo contemplates advancing passenger rates at least 2½ per cent and freight rates possibly as much as 15 per cent.

Based on Living Cost.

The scheme of wage advances adopted is based on an inquiry into the cost of living, which the commission found has increased approximately 40 per cent to the average railroad employee receiving $85 a month.

The commission favors a shorter average workday, presumably eight hours, but decided that in the war emergency the nation could not afford to put into effect a reform that would slow down the war machinery and discriminate against other classes of workers being called upon for great sacrifices.

Rates of overtime pay are not disturbed and the increases are adjusted to the mileage basis of compensation of some employees, a road engineer, for example, receiving an increase of 11¼ per cent in his mileage rate. A scheme of applying the increases to piece work and overtime therefor is also provided.

An important feature of the report was the recommendation that where the same service is rendered the pay shall be the same, without discrimination as to sex or race.

Report of Commission.

The report of the commission, consisting of Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior; Charles C. McChord, J. Harry Covington, and William R. Willcox, is an exhaustive one. In part the report says:

"The requests which have come to us for wage increases, would, if fully granted, involve an additional outlay in wages of somewhat over $1,000,000,000 per year in excess of the wage fund of last year, which exceeded $2,000,000,000. Some asked for an increase of 100 per cent in their pay, and from this they graduated downward to 10 per cent. None were satisfied with their present wages.

"An unprecedented call had come for men of certain trades in connection with the new industries that had been created by the war in Europe, and this long before our entry into the conflict. Machinists and iron workers of all kinds found themselves to be essential to the great munition plants and day labor of the most unskilled character rose into high demand.

Cut Off Those Not Needed.

"The commission recommends that during the period of government conduct of the railroads no salaries paid to officials who are not essential to the operation of the roads shall be charged as part of the operating expenses.

"There should be constituted a tribunal or tribunals to continue the study of railroad labor problems, composed in part at least of men experienced in this kind of work, for conditions are ever changing."

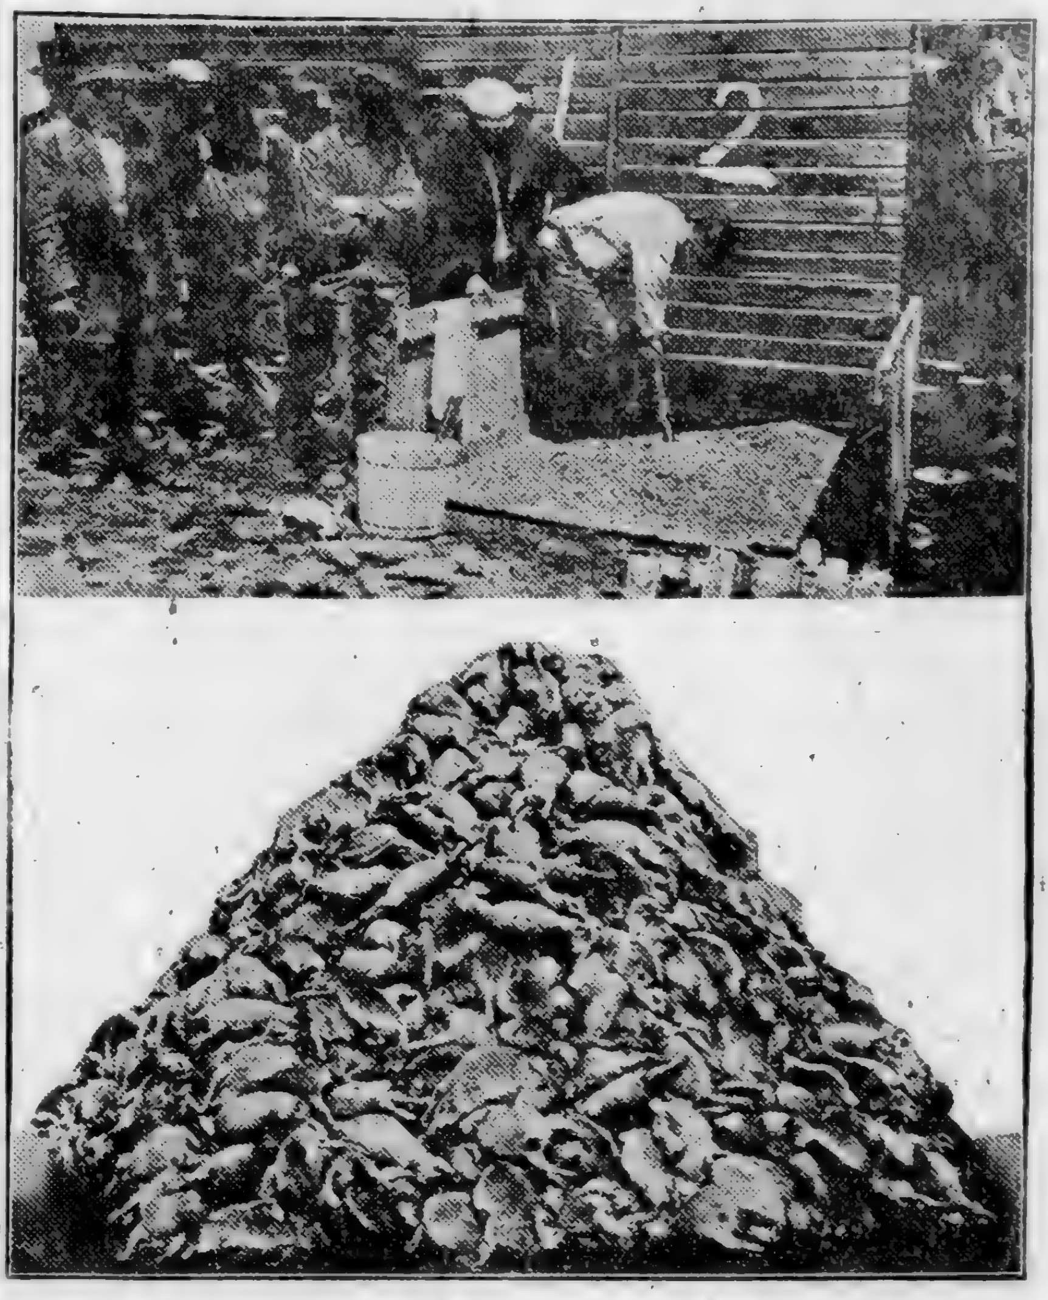
RODENTS EAT $150,000,000 WORTH OF FOOD



Sixteen Hundred and Forty-one Dead Prairie Dogs Were Collected From 320 Acres Which Had Been Treated With Poison the Day Before by One Man—Cost, Including Labor, $9.79—Specialists Teach Farmers How to Mix Poison.

POISONING STOPS LARGE CROP LOSS

Co-operation Among Farmers and All Authorities Concerned Is Necessary.

CAMPAIGN IN NORTH DAKOTA

More Than 5,000,000 Acres Treated in North Dakota and Saving of $1,000,000 Accomplished—Many Counties Organized.

Crops worth more than $150,000,000 are destroyed every year by such rodents as prairie dogs, ground squirrels, pocket gophers, rabbits, field mice and rats and woodchucks. This heavy toll does not include loss inflicted by house mice and rats. That the losses due to rodents constitute an entirely unnecessary drain upon the productive capacity of the farms and that they may be permanently eliminated at a cost which is but a small fraction of the damage occasioned during a single year has been proved by the extensive work already accomplished in campaigns conducted by the Biological Survey of the United States department of agriculture in co-operation with state and county organizations.

Community co-operation will do the work. Rodent pests have been practically eliminated from millions of acres of valuable agricultural land in the last four years through the co-operation of thousands of farmers. Describing these campaigns federal specialists declare that the eagerness with which farmers have availed themselves of the opportunity to join in concerted movements aimed at relief from these pests is most significant and gratifying, while the returns in increased crop yields from the amount of labor and money invested in the community campaigns have exceeded all expectations. A successful fight against rodent pests requires that all local, state and national agencies concerned be brought into harmonious and effective co-operation and that modern poisoning methods of proved efficiency be used.

Work in North Dakota.

In the great grain-producing areas of North Dakota there has been developed the most extensive and thoroughly organized campaign with a comprehensive plan of state-wide eradication of rodent pests that has yet been attempted. This campaign was organized under a co-operative project agreement between the bureau of biological survey and the states relation service of the United States department of agriculture and the North Dakota agricultural experiment station and extension service, including the county agent organization. The state legislature provided a revolving fund available for use in procuring and maintaining the required stock of poison supplies.

Many Gophers Killed.

The initial campaign was launched against the Richardson ground squirrel, commonly known locally as "gopher." In many places poisoning resulted in the killing of 98 per cent of the animals on the first application. Entire counties were organized in a systematic voluntary warfare upon the rodents, using the township as a convenient working unit. Poisoned grain was prepared in quantity, placed in plainly marked containers and distributed to farmers, who then applied it according to directions around the ground-squirrel burrows on their farms.

More than 5,000,000 acres were treated with poison in 1916. During the spring of 1917 16,000 farmers in North Dakota joined in this movement. The ground squirrels were poisoned on 1,500,000 acres, resulting in a practical elimination of the pest in the areas treated and a saving in the year's crop of more than $1,000,000. Including hire of labor to distribute the poison, the cost averages less than 5 cents per acre under North Dakota conditions, and where landowners perform the labor the actual cash outlay per acre is materially reduced.

Co-operative Campaigns.

In other states co-operative campaigns have been effective against other pests, such as prairie dogs and jack rabbits. As suggested by the campaigns which have already been conducted effectively, these five important features essential to ultimate success are named by specialists of the department of agriculture: (1) Co-operation of all agencies involved, including farmers, local organizations, county, state, and federal officials; (2) leadership trained and experienced in methods of rodent control and in organization; (3) a unit plan to systematize activities and cover a sufficiently large territory to prevent reinfestation; (4) financial support to procure supplies in large quantities; and (5) legal provision for the extermination of pests upon neglected areas.

HARM FROM RODENTS IS COUNTRY-WIDE

Food-destroying rodents are common throughout the United States. In states west of the Mississippi river prairie dogs, ground squirrels, pocket gophers, rabbits, cotton rats and field mice have taken a continually increasing toll from the crops of wheat, oats, corn, barley and other cereals, alfalfa, potatoes, beans, fruit, melons and almonds and from pasture ranges. States east of this boundary have suffered heavily from the depredations of rabbits, woodchucks and meadow pine and white-footed mice in gardens, field and truck crops, orchards and vineyards. The estimate of $150,000,000 loss to crops annually in the United States is based upon information regarding conditions reported by field representatives of the biological survey, United States department of agriculture, county agricultural agents, other competent officials, and farmers. It does not include losses inflicted by house mice and rats.

States' Losses From Rodents.

Some idea of the loss suffered by individual states from native rodents may be obtained from the following estimate recently submitted to the United States department of agriculture by state directors of agricultural extension work: Montana $15,000,000 to $20,000,000; North Dakota, $6,000,000 to $9,000,000; Kansas, $12,000,000; Colorado, $2,000,000; California, $20,000,000; Wyoming, 15 per cent of all crops; Nevada, 10 to 15 per cent of all crops or $1,000,000; New Mexico, $1,200,000 loss to crops and double this amount to range.

EMPEY JOINS THE "SUICIDE CLUB," AS THE BOMBING SQUAD IS CALLED.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Empey goes "over the top" for the first time and has a desperate fight.

CHAPTER XII.

Bombing.

The boys in the section welcomed me back, but there were many strange faces. Several of our men had gone West in that charge, and were lying "somewhere in France" with a little wooden cross at their heads. We were in rest billets. The next day our captain asked for volunteers for bombers' school. I gave my name and was accepted. I had joined the Suicide club, and my troubles commenced. Thirty-two men of the battalion, including myself, were sent to L——, where we went through a course in bombing. Here we were instructed in the uses, methods of throwing and manufacture of various kinds of hand grenades, from the old "jam tin," now obsolete, to the present Mills bomb, the standard of the British army.

It all depends where you are as to what you are called. In France they call you a "bomber" and give you medals, while in neutral countries they call you an anarchist and give you "life."

From the very start the Germans were well equipped with effective bombs and trained bomb throwers, but the English army was as little prepared in this important department of fighting as in many others. At bombing school an old sergeant of the Grenadier guards, whom I had the good fortune to meet, told me of the discouragements this branch of the service suffered before they could meet the Germans on an equal footing. (Pacifists and small army people in the U. S. please read with care.) The first English expeditionary forces had no bombs at all, but had clicked a lot of casualties from those thrown by the Boches. One bright morning someone higher up had an idea and issued an order detailing two men from each platoon to go to bombing school to learn the duties of a bomber and how to manufacture bombs. Noncommissioned officers were generally selected for this course. After about two weeks at school they returned to their units in rest billets or in the fire trench, as the case might be, and got busy teaching their platoons how to make "jam tins."

Previously an order had been issued for all ranks to save empty jam tins for the manufacture of bombs. A professor of bombing would sit on the fire step in the front trench with the remainder of his section crowding around to see him work.

On his left would be a pile of empty and rusty jam tins, while beside him on the fire step would be a miscellaneous assortment of material used in the manufacture of the "jam tins."

Tommy would stoop down, get an empty "jam tin," take a handful of clayey mud from the parapet, and line the inside of the tin with this substance. Then he would reach over, pick up his detonator and explosive, and insert them in the tin, fuse protruding. On the fire step would be a pile of fragments of shell, shrapnel balls, bits of iron, nails, etc.—anything that was hard enough to send over to Fritz; he would scoop up a handful of this junk and put it in the bomb. Perhaps one of the platoon would ask him what he did this for, and he would explain that when the bomb exploded these bits would fly about and kill or wound any German hit by same; the questioner would immediately pull a button off his tunic and hand it to the bomb maker with, "Well, blame me, send this over as a souvenir," or another Tommy would volunteer an old rusty and broken jackknife; both would be accepted and inserted.

Then the professor would take another handful of mud and fill the tin, after which he would punch a hole in the lid of the tin and put it over the top of the bomb, the fuse sticking out. Then perhaps he would tightly wrap wire around the outside of the tin, and the bomb was ready to send over to Fritz with Tommy's compliments.

A piece of wood about four inches wide had been issued. This was to be strapped on the left forearm by means of two leather straps and was like the side of a match box; it was called a "striker." There was a tip like the head of a match on the fuse of the bomb. To ignite the fuse, you had to rub it on the "striker," just the same as striking a match. The fuse was timed to five seconds or longer. Some of the fuses issued in those days would burn down in a second or two, while others would "sizz" for a week before exploding. Back in Blighty the munition workers weren't quite up to snuff, the way they are now. If the fuse took a notion to burn too quickly they generally buried the bomb maker next day. So making bombs could not be called a "cushy" or safe job.

After making several bombs the professor instructs the platoon in throwing them. He takes a "jam tin" from the fire step, trembling a little, because it is nervous work, especially when new at it, lights the fuse on his striker. The fuse begins to "sizz" and sputter and a spiral of smoke, like that from a smoldering fag, rises from it. The platoon splits in two and ducks around the traverse nearest to them. They don't like the looks and sound of the burning fuse. When that fuse begins to smoke and "sizz" you want to say good-by to it as soon as possible, so Tommy with all his might chucks it over the top and crouches against the parapet, waiting for the explosion.

Lots of times in bombing the "jam tin" would be picked up by the Germans, before it exploded, and thrown back at Tommy with dire results.

After a lot of men went West in this manner an order was issued, reading something like this:

"To all ranks in the British army: After igniting the fuse and before throwing the jam-tin bomb, count slowly one! two! three!"

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

Throwing Hand Grenades.

This in order to give the fuse time enough to burn down, so that the bomb would explode before the Germans could throw it back.

Tommy read the order—he reads them all, but after he ignited the fuse and it began to smoke—orders were forgotten, and away she went in record time and back she came to the further discomfort of the thrower.

Then another order was issued to count, "one hundred! two hundred! three hundred!" But Tommy didn't care if the order read to count up to a thousand by quarters, he was going to get rid of that "jam tin," because from experience he had learned not to trust it.

When the powers that be realized that they could not change Tommy they decided to change the type of bomb and did so—substituting the "hair brush," the "cricket ball," and later the Mills bomb.

The standard bomb used in the British army is the "Mills." It is about the shape and size of a large lemon. Although not actually a lemon, Fritz insists that it is; perhaps he judges it by the havoc caused by its explosion. The Mills bomb is made of steel, the outside of which is corrugated into 48 small squares, which, upon the explosion of the bomb, scatter in a wide area, wounding or killing any Fritz who is unfortunate enough to be hit by one of the flying fragments.

Although a very destructive and efficient bomb the "Mills" has the confidence of the thrower, in that he knows it will not explode until released from his grip.

It is a mechanical device, with a lever, fitted into a slot at the top, which extends half way around the circumference and is held in place at the bottom by a fixing pin. In this pin there is a small metal ring, for the purpose of extracting the pin when ready to throw.

You do not throw a bomb the way a baseball is thrown, because, when in a narrow trench, your hand is liable to strike against the parados, traverse or parapet, and then down goes the bomb, and, in a couple of seconds or so, up goes Tommy.

As the bomb leaves your hand, the lever, by means of a spring, is projected into the air and falls harmlessly to the ground a few feet in front of the bomber.

When the lever flies off it releases a strong spring, which forces the firing pin into a percussion cap. This ignites the fuse, which burns down and sets off the detonator, charged with fulminate of mercury, which explodes the main charge of ammonal.

The average British soldier is not an expert at throwing; it is a new game to him, therefore the Canadians and Americans, who have played baseball from the kindergarten up, take naturally to bomb throwing and excel in this act. A six-foot English bomber will stand in awed silence when he sees a little five-foot-nothing Canadian outdistance his throw by several yards. I have read a few war stories of bombing, where baseball pitchers curved their bombs when throwing them, but a pitcher who can do this would make "Christy" Mathewson look like a piker, and is losing valuable time playing in the European War bush league, when he would be able to set the "big league" on fire.

We had a cushy time while at this school. In fact, to us it was a regular vacation, and we were very sorry when one morning the adjutant ordered us to report at headquarters for transportation and rations to return to our units up the line.

Arriving at our section, the boys once again tendered us the glad mitt, but looked askance at us out of the corners of their eyes. They could not conceive, as they expressed it, how a man could be such a blinking idiot as to join the Suicide club. I was beginning to feel sorry that I had become a member of said club, and my life to me appeared doubly precious.

Now that I was a sure-enough bomber I was praying for peace and hoping that my services as such would not be required.

CHAPTER XIII.

My First Official Bath.

Right behind our rest billet was a large creek about ten feet deep and twenty feet across, and it was a habit of the company to avail themselves of an opportunity to take a swim and at the same time thoroughly wash themselves and their underwear when on their own. We were having a spell of hot weather, and these baths to us were a luxury. The Tommies would splash around in the water and then come out and sit in the sun and have what they termed a "shirt hunt." At first we tried to drown the "cooties," but they also seemed to enjoy the bath.

One Sunday morning the whole section was in the creek and we were having a gay time, when the sergeant major appeared on the scene. He came to the edge of the creek and ordered: "Come out of it. Get your equipment on, 'drill order,' and fall in for bath parade. Look lively, my hearties. You have only got fifteen minutes." A howl of indignation from the creek greeted this order, but out we came. Discipline is discipline. We lined up in front of our billet with rifles and bayonets (why you need rifles and bayonets to take a bath gets me), a full quota of ammunition, and our tin hats. Each man had a piece of soap and a towel. After an eight-kilo march along a dusty road, with an occasional shell whistling overhead, we arrived at a little squat frame building upon the bank of a creek. Nailed over the door of this building was a large sign which read "Divisional Baths." In a wooden shed in the rear we could hear a wheezy old engine pumping water.

Great Writers Lazy.

Shelley had an indolent vein. He was very fond of the water, and many of his finest poems were composed as he idled at his ease in a boat. He made the best of his short life, however, and that cannot be said for Coleridge, who seemed to be afflicted with that lack of will to work which some people call laziness. He had one of the greatest minds, but he left even his finest poems mere fragments.

I. Jesus Officially Presented to the Jewish Nation as King (vv. 1-11). This should not be designated the "triumphal entry," for it was only in outward appearances. The shouts were empty and meaningless. It was the promised King publicly offering himself to the nation.

1. The preparation (vv. 1-6).

(1) Two disciples sent for the ass (vv. 1-3).

He told them just where to go to find it, and how to answer the owner's inquiry. This shows how perfectly the Lord knows our ways. His matchless gaze beholds all that we think or do, by day or night. It also shows that God uses unlikely and insignificant things in the accomplishment of his purposes. The providing of this animal was the working out of the Divine plan according to Christ's foreknowledge.

(2) Obedience of the disciples (vv. 4-6).

Without asking why, they go at his bidding. The command may have seemed strange and unreasonable, but they rendered explicit obedience. The true disciple will render full and glad obedience, no matter how strange or unreasonable the command may seem.

2. The entry into the city of Jerusalem (vv. 7-10).

(1) The disciples put their garments upon the ass and set the Lord upon it (v. 7).

This act showed their recognition of him as their king (2 Kings 9:13).

(2) The multitude.

Some spread their garments in the way; others who had no garments to spare, cut down branches and strewed them in the way, which was just as acceptable unto him. To give what we have and do what we can, is all that the Lord demands of us. This entry was in fulfillment of a prophecy uttered some five hundred years before (Zech. 9:9).

(3) The Lord's action (v. 10).

Upon entering the Temple, he looked around upon all things; but as it was eventide he withdrew to Bethany with the twelve.

II. Jesus Exercising His Royal Authority (vv. 12-19). 1. The barren fig tree cursed (vv. 12-14). The fig tree is typical of the Jewish nation. The fruit normally appears on the fig tree ahead of the leaves. The presence of leaves is the assurance of fruit. This was an acted parable of the Lord's judgment on Israel for pretension of being the chosen people without the fruits thereof. It indicated the spiritual state of the Jews.

2. The Temple cleansed (vv. 15-19). For the various sacrifices in the Temple, many oxen, sheep and doves were needed. Many persons came from the distant parts of the land; therefore it was impracticable for them to bring their sacrifices with them, so they brought money and bought the animals needed. This privilege the law had granted to them (Deut. 14:24-26), for the exchange was necessary. When evil men used it as an opportunity for gain, it became an offense before God. It defiled his house. He made himself a scourge of cords, and drove out the money changers, overthrowing their tables and pouring out their money. By this act he declared himself to be the Lord of the Temple and one with God. That which God intended to be a house of prayer for all nations was being made a "den of thieves."

III. Jesus' Authority Challenged (vv. 27-33). They challenged him to show by what authority he accepted the honors of the Messiah, and who gave him the authority to cast out the money-changers. This placed Jesus in a dilemma. He responded by a question which placed them in a counter-dilemma.

Since John was his forerunner, the divinity of his commission rested upon that of John. They were powerless to discredit John, because the people accepted John as such. If they had accepted John's message, they would have been prepared to accept his. They cowardly confessed that they did not know. The agnostic is always a coward. These rulers had no affection for Jesus, so they rejected him and sought to destroy him. It is the same today. The reason men reject Jesus is not because of intellectual difficulties, but because of the lack of affection for him.

U. S. MEN PRAISED BY LONDON PRESS

YANKEES CHEERED BY CROWD

Writers Unite in Giving Unstinted Praise to Appearance of Men—Viewed by King and Queen From Buckingham Palace.

London, May 13.—The appearance of American National army men on parade in London on Saturday aroused the enthusiasm of the Sunday papers as have few events in months. The writers unite in giving unstinted praise to the appearance of the men, and predict for them a record of splendid achievement when they reach the front.

"And the waiting crowds found a new name for the visitors. As the first battalion swung out from Waterloo station some one called out to a friend that they were 'a real husky lot.' The word pleased the fancy of the crowd, and soon every one was calling for cheers for 'the huskies.'

Finest Sight of the War.

"It was a great friendship which was struck up between the London crowd and the American boys who have come across to give them a hand. That was the feeling that persisted to the last when the visitors said good-by for the time being to London."

"Since the thrilling days of the first months of the war," says the Observer, "London has not known such notable scene of enthusiasm as that of Saturday.

"The finest sight I have seen since the war began," was the verdict of a young soldier who has seen service on four fronts. The men are a fine looking body and appear to be in the pink of condition."

London's Greatest Cheers.

The companies filed past with light, elastic step, keeping excellent time and creating a mighty favorable impression of their marching qualities and physique.

King Views Parade.

King George V. and the Prince of Wales, standing outside Buckingham Palace, reverently bared their heads as the American national army troops from Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga., marched to the strains of "The Stars and Stripes Forever," played by the Grenadier Guards.

Wherever the doughboys passed traffic was halted and every open space was a sea of faces.

With the king and his heir were Queen Mary and Princess Mary.

American Tunes Lead.

Col. Whitman, Gen. Pershing's quartermaster in Mexico, commanded the parading troops, astride a coal black horse. The troops wore the old style cowboy hats, canvas leggings and light shoes instead of the modern trench boots. They carried full equipment from trench spades to gas masks, but no steel helmets.

The Scots Guard Band, playing "Hello, New York," led the machine gunners. Then followed the Irish Guards, playing "My Old Kentucky Home," leading another contingent, and finally there were the Grenadiers, playing "Over There."

Six silk-hatted, frock-coated civilians preceded the third battalion with a banner bearing the words:

"We Civil war veterans hail the United States."

In the crowds watching the inspiring spectacle were many Americans, including aviators, bluejackets, engineers and convalescent soldiers.

The drafted troops showed up well, carrying rifles at proper slope, eyes straight ahead.

U. S. APPEAL ENDS STRIKE

Workers in War Plants at Bridgeport, Conn., Agree to Work—Appeal Made to Men's Patriotism.

Bridgeport, Conn., May 13.—The strike of machinists and toolmakers that had tied up 22 of the smaller factories here for more than a week and seriously affected several of the larger plants, came to an end Saturday. The men responded to an appeal by Maj. E. A. Rogers of the ordnance department, United States army, who called upon them to show their patriotism in turning out vitally needed war supplies. They returned to work under conditions prevailing at the time of the strike, while their demands are under consideration by the war labor bureau. The men have been promised that any wage increase granted them will be retroactive from May 1.

People in Finland Starving.

Copenhagen, May 13.—The people of Finland are starving because no food is reaching that country from Germany, according to reports received here. People are said to be dying in the streets of Helsingfors and Viborg.

Fire Destroys Berlin Granaries.

Paris, May 13.—The Berlin municipal granaries near Grosbeeren have been destroyed by fire, with the loss of 20,000 quintos of grain, according to a dispatch from Zurich to the Petit Journal.

WOMAN'S NERVES MADE STRONG

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Winona, Minn.—"I suffered for more than a year from nervousness, and was so bad I could not rest at night—would lie awake and get so nervous I would have to get up and walk around and in the morning would be all tired out. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and thought I would try it. My nervousness soon left me. I sleep well and feel fine in the morning and able to do my work. I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to make weak nerves strong."—Mrs. ALBERT SULTZE, 603 Olmstead St., Winona, Minn.

How often do we hear the expression among women, "I am so nervous, I cannot sleep," or "it seems as though I should fly." Such women should profit by Mrs. Sultze's experience and give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial.

For forty years it has been overcoming such serious conditions as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, dizziness, and nervous prostration of women, and is now considered the standard remedy for such ailments.

Bilkins had bought his cow now about a week, and asked a friend over to give his opinion on the purchase.

The visitor arrived and was shown into a room to wait, and commenced chatting to Bilkins, Jr.

"How much milk does your cow give a day?"

"'Bout eight quarts, sir."

"And how much of that do you sell?"

"'Bout twelve quarts, sir."

Collapse of Bilkins, coming in the door.

"Have you any worth-while books in here?" asked the superior person.

"We have thousands of volumes, sir," replied the clerk. "I'm sure there is something in our stock to suit the most exacting taste. What do you require?"

"I want want a book of synonyms."

SORROWFUL JONES

thicker than St. Joe river mosquitoes in dog days. Every day, mad men shake their whiskers and fists in my face and cuss and discuss the telephone service. I

Count that day but lost
  Whose low descending sun
Hears no kick--
  No act of cussing done.

No trouble hunter for me. But," he added more cheerfully, "I have one consolation: I am charged no more phone rent than other subscribers."

"Mr. Widney, misery loves company. There's a pair of us." So saying, Sorrowful hung up the receiver.

Forty years rolled around; and Sorrowful still sat at the phone, his whiskers more luxuriant and his grouch more pronounced. "Dolores," he said to his youngest granddaughter, "go out and split some wood, so if anyone brings a telephone into your home after you and John are married, you will know how to use an axe."

"Oh, dear!" wailed Docile, "it's up to me to phone our friends that Sorrowful's dead. I ain't equal to the job." She smiled as she said "How'dy" to Death and lay down in peace beside Sorrowful's remnants.

"Oh, dear!" wailed Dolores, "it's anything but a good thing that grandma has passed on to me. I see my finish with John."

At the funeral, the choir sang for the consolation of the mourners:

There'll be no telephones there.
There'll be no telephones there.
In heaven above, where all is love,
There'll be no telephones there.

Zonker-Krabill

For several days, it had been whispered about that a St. Joe young couple had stolen a march on their friends and had been quietly married. The rumor finally reached the ears of the reported bride's father; and, on Tuesday, he questioned the young lady regarding the matter. She did not deny the story of her marriage. The facts are as follows:

Early in February, Miss Princess Krabill went to Mansfield, Ohio, to visit; and, about the same time, Walter W. Zonker, of Kendallville, was taken sick—so sick that it was necessary for his brother, Clarence, then of St. Joe, to go to his assistance. Walter, in quest of relief, also journeyed Ohioward; and, on Feb. 7, at Bucyrus, a minister of the gospel applied the balm that relieved his aching heart. Then the happy couple agreed to keep their marriage secret, which they succeeded in doing for three months.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Krabill, of this place, and her entire life has been passed here. Her friends will be surprised at her marriage, and will join in wishing her well. The groom is running a meat market at Kendallville, and was at one time associated with his brother in the same business in St. Joe.

Mrs. Mary Garton, of Ft. Wayne, is visiting her son, H. F. Garton.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrater for Indiana.

The federal food administration, working in conjunction with the department of agriculture will prohibit profiteering among threshermen. A charge of from 6 to 8 cents per bushel for wheat is believed to be sufficient to cover all increased costs. A proposed rate of 10 cents in Wayne county is regarded as "entirely too high." A proportionate increase in the price of oats threshing will be permitted, allowing the threshers a fair return.

The food administration will co-operate with the food and drug division of the state government to prohibit the traffic in rotten eggs. A definite plan will be worked out at a conference of food administrators at Washington for the guidance of every state.

Orders for binder twine are solicited by the federal food administration, in behalf of the supply houses. The administration is regulating the price of sisal twine, in co-operation with the manufacturers. Early orders will facilitate delivery and guarantee against inconvenience to the farmer.

Cars for perishable food stuffs will be given preferred attention by the director-general of railroads, it is announced to the Indiana State Council of Defense, by Robert E. Wright, assistant to Mr. McAdoo. This information is intended for the encouragement especially of canners and producers depending upon car service for a satisfactory and profitable local market.

Prices of substitutes for wheat flour are held insufficient excuse for increases in the price of bread. Herbert Hoover points out that corn flour is obtainable at less than asked for wheat flour, and the price range for other substitute is downward.

May 15th marks the inauguration of the food administration's policy of rationing all consumers of sugar. Manufacturers will receive in proportion to their essential character, from 80 to 100 per cent. of requirements, except those starting business January 1, 1918 or after, who will receive none, and those starting November 1, 1917 or after who will receive fifty per cent. The necessity of the individual ration of three pounds per person per month must be maintained strictly, in addition to the manufacturers' rationing, if there is to be enough sugar to meet the demands of the conserving and preserving season. The housewife who desires to can fruit or vegetables is privileged to buy in anticipation of her canning needs.

May is the month for storing eggs in water glass, the food administration announces. The eggs keep better when stored this month and the price average is lowest for the year. Stored eggs are recommended as a desirable substitute for staples that are needed for export.

Solicitors Appointed

Concord township has organized for the forthcoming Red Cross drive, which begins next Monday and ends Saturday evening. At a meeting held at THE NEWS office last Monday, the territory was divided among the following solicitors, who can secure the necessary supplies from F. R. Bowman, the township chairman:

Town, north of Main street from Spencerville to Third, Frank Kinsey.
Town, north of Main and east of Third street, including Hamburg, Alvy D. Perry.
Town, south of Main street, from Spencerville to Third, J P. Buckingham.
Town, east of Third street and south of Main, Mesdames Ada Bassett and Rolland Bearss.
Township, north of St. Joe on Concord road, Ray Reasoner, Joe Hull, Harvey Hull and L. W. Yeiser.
Cheesetown section, Mesdames Pluma Hamilton and Earl Tustison.
West of St. Joe, O. K. Shull and Lorenzo Means.
Concord section, Charles Jackson and Ern Johnson.

The amount Concord has to raise is not definitely known, but it is about 60c per capita. Every citizen should do his duty and help put the township over the top; and those who refuse, should be forced to come across. The country is commandering young American manhood. Why should it pass by money-grabbing slackers, unless, of course, dollars are of more value than red blood?

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. ST. JOE NEWS.

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

MY DEAR PARENTS:—

Received your letter a few nights ago, which had enclosed Mr. Russell's letter. The same night, I received two other letters and three ST. JOE NEWS. Well, I can't tell you how glad I was to get some mail again. Since I received my last mail (that is, before I got this bunch the other night), we have moved to the front.

Well, as I have already said, we are at the front at last. It has taken me nearly a year to get here, and I am glad I am not in the States in some training camp. I see by the paper that a few more of the boys are on the way to training camps. If I could speak to them, I would wish them much joy while in training over there. I like this side much better.

The last thing we hear before going to sleep are reports of our guns or an enemy's shell bursting, and that is also the first thing we hear in the morning. We don't think much about a fight in the air any more. We are stationed in an old deserted town near the front lines. I could walk up there in thirty minutes. So you see how near we are. I have never seen the enemy's front line trenches but once.

I was in a place the other day where shells were bursting all around me. That day was the first time I saw bloodshed caused by shrapnel. No one in our company has been hit yet, but we can't tell when one will come across with our number on it. Well, we are here to do our duty; and if it costs our blood, all well and good.

I have seen a few French soldiers a short time after they had been gassed with mustard gas. This affects the eyes more than any other part of the body. It is possible to hold the breath until one gets a gas mask on, but it is hard to keep the eyes closed tight that long. They can not see from three to five weeks after being gassed.

We have no Y. M. C. A. here now, but expect one most any time. At the place where we got on the train to come up here, the Y. M. C. A had a stand and served free coffee and lunch.

We had turkey for dinner (Easter). I did not expect anything like that when we got up here. We are having all we want to eat—bacon, fresh beef, corned beef, canned roast beef and I don't know what kind of beef we don't get except "young beef."

Kindest regards to everybody.

PAUL PERRY.

April 3, 1918.

CAMP SHERIDAN, May 8, 1918.

DEAR FRIEND:—

I received your last letter all O K., and was glad to hear from you.

Well, we have been having some regular old-fashioned hot weather here lately, most too hot to be comfortable. This is a queer climate: it is hot in the day time and cool enough at night to sleep under two or three woolen army blankets.

We have been having a lot of company drill and regimental and brigade open warfare maneuvers Our platoon—the signal platoon—has to furnish the communications for the regiment in these maneuvers. This is done by telegraph, buzzers, runners, aerio and flags. We have done fine work so far with the equipment we have.

For the last week or so, I have been going to a buzzer (or, rather, telegraph) school, which is very interesting to me. Makes you think fast as the dots and dashes fly when they are sending ten to fifteen words per minute.

We had a regimental parade on Monday evening, when our company got a fine send off by the colonel. When we passed by him in company front, he said: "My God! twice the largest company in the regiment and three times the straightest." So you know that we have a fine company. We had division review today, n honor of Major General Farnsworth, our our new division commander. We sure had a straight line when we passed by him—just as straight as a string. Well, I guess if we don't be careful, we will be getting a boat ride. I hope it will be in a week or two, as all of us are itching to give the Germans a shower of lead and the points of our bayonets. There are several rumors around that the 145th infantry will be the next to move, and I sure hope that the rumors are true.

Well, guess I am about run down. So I will close for this time.

MRS. MALONE AND THE CENSOR

When Mrs. Malone got a letter from Pat,
She started to read it aloud in her flat.
"Dear Mary," it started, "I can't tell you much:
I'm somewhere in France, and I'm fightin' the Dutch.
I'm chokin' wid news thot I'd like to relate,
But it's little a soldier's permitted to state.
Do ye moind Red McPhee? Well, he fell in a ditch
An' busted an arm, but I can't tell ye which.

"I've been to the dintist an' had a tooth out.
I'm sorry t' lave ye so shrouded in doubt;
But the best I can say is thot one tooth is gone—
The cinsor won't let me inform ye which one.
I met a young fellow who knows ye quite well,
An' ye know him, too; but his name I can't tell.
He's Irish, red-headed an' there wid th' blarney.
His folks once knew your folks back home in Killarney."

"Be gorry," says Mrs. Malone in her flat,
"It's hard to make sinse out av writin' like that.
But I'll give him as good as he sinds, thot I will."
So she went right to work with her ink-well and quill;
And she wrote: "I suppose ye're dead eager for news.
You know when you left we were buyin' shoes.
Well, the baby has come, an' we're both doin' well.
It's a——. Oh! but that's something they won't let me tell."

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex.,

DEAR FOLKS AT HOME:—

I am over to the Y. M. C. A. tonight to write letters. So I will write a few lines home. We have been on the range all this week, so I did not have much time to write. We left for the range at 7:15 in the morning and came in at 12:00, and left at 1:45 and came in at night about 6:15. So you know it was about bedtime when we got our guns cleaned. I have made 228 points out of 300 so far. We will have two more weeks on the range before we are through.

It has been raining all day; and, believe me, it rains here. I have seen more rain since I came here than I ever saw at home. We are on the Gulf of Mexico, and that is the reason for the rain.

I have seen Merritt Hull several times, and I was sure glad to know that he was here. He is the only person that I have seen that I know since I left home. He said Don Hindman was down here; and, come to find out, he was here the same day that I came.

I have taken out a $50 Liberty Loan bond. Perhaps I can save some of my money that way. My insurance is $6.40 a month and the bond $5.00. So, you see, I don't have much to spend.

Tell all the folks to write, and I will answer as soon as I can. Goodbye.

Enlist in the Engineers

The 5th Engineers, U. S. A., in their paper, The Sapper, send out the following advice relative to joining the army:

"If you are between the ages 18-21 and 32-40 and desire to serve in one of the finest branches of the service and in one of the finest regiments, that spportunity is yours. There are vacancies in the famous Fifth Engineers; and those desiring to enlist should apply either in person or by letter to the headquarters of the regiment, Corpus Christi, Tex., without delay.

"A number of men have recently been transferred to other commands, thereby leaving a few vacancies. Mechanics and men skilled in other trades are especially needed. We are of the opinion that an increasingly large number of men will be called to the colors before this war is won. If you enlist now, you can choose the branch of the service that most appeals to you. Later on, you may be sent to a branch not so pleasing.

"Do it now!"

An open meeting was held by the local Knights of Pythias, Wednesday evening, at which the above named members, all of whom are serving their country, were honored by the unveiling of a service flag. As the name of each one was called, Mrs. C. R. Price, who represented the Goddess of Liberty, laid a rose on a table at the foot of the flag; and to the veterans of the civil war ond to those who may be hereafter called to the present conflict a like tribute was paid. This was a very pretty and affecting ceremony and came immediately after the unveiling of the flag, which was done by Rev. Helms, of Butler, who made the principal address of the evening. Following was the program:

War Saving Stamp Notes

The first state wide war savings drive in Indiana begins May 27 and ends June 3. During this week, it is planned to sell $7,500,000 in war savings stamps, which is $2.50 for each man, woman and child. Multiply the population of Concord township by $2 50, and you will have the amount we are expected to raise.

Of course, some will want to buy more than $2.50 worth. Many will have to in order to keep up the average.

It is patriotic to buy war savings stamps, and it is the best investment the government has ever offered. We must do our part.

The first dividend of the second Liberty Loan is due May 15, and it is suggested that this be used to buy war savings stamps. Thus, instead of paying out money for interest, the government will have it to use in the prosecution of the war. J. Pierrepont Morgan once said that the way to accumulate a fortune is to make your investments multiply themselves. Put your Liberty Loan interest on interest. This suggestion will be made to you by your banker when you receive your interest coupons.

ASSISTANT Secretary of Agriculture Carl Vrooman, says that more than a billion dollars worth of stable manure is wasted annually in the United States. This is an average of $167 for every farm. In the face of the urgent need for bigger crops, such waste as this is a national tragedy. That manure properly used will put us beyond fear of any crop shortage this year except one that might be made by bad weather. A bigger crop could be produced without the addition of another acre, another man, or another horse power, if every farmer would decide to waste no stable manure this year but buy and use a

U. S. TO SEND MEN TO BATTLE UNTIL VICTORY--WILSON

Makes Statement in Red Cross Speech at New York.

NO LIMIT ON AMERICAN ARMY

Declares U. S. Will Not Be Diverted From Its Purpose of Winning War by Insincere Approaches on Subject of Peace—Asks All to Contribute Generously to the $100,000,000 Fund.

New York, May 20.—Opening with a speech here, the Red Cross' drive for a second $100,000,000 war fund, President Wilson announced the purpose of the United States to set no limits on its effort to win the war.

"I have heard gentlemen recently say," said he, "that we must get 5,000,000 men ready. Why limit it to 5,000,000? I have asked of congress to name no limit, because congress intends, I am sure, as we all intend, that every ship that can carry men or supplies shall go laden upon every voyage with every man and every supply she can carry."

The United States, the president declared, will not be diverted from its purpose of winning the war by insincere approaches on the subject of peace.

Dwelling on the duty of Americans to give to the Red Cross, the president declared no man could affard to make money out of the war.

The audience was composed of distinguished men and women, most of whom have been leaders in the work of the Red Cross.

Text of Speech.

"Mr. Chairman and fellow countrymen: I should be very sorry to think that Mr. Davison in any degree curtailed his exceedingly interesting speech for fear that he was postponing mine, because I am sure you listened with the same intent and intimate interest with which I listened to the extraordinarily vivid account he gave of the things which he had realized because he had come in contact with them on the other side of the waters.

"We compare them with our imagination; he compared them in his personal experience, and I am not come here to review for you the work of the Red Cross; I am not competent to do so because I have not had the time or the opportunity to follow it in detail. I have come here simply to say a few words to you as to what it all seems to me to mean and it means a great deal.

Two Duties in War.

"There are two duties with which we are face to face. The first duty is to win the war. And the second duty, that goes hand in hand with it, is to win it greatly and worthily, showing the real quality of our power not only but the real quality of our purpose and of ourselves.

"Of course, the first duty, the duty that we must keep in the foreground of our thought until it is accomplished, is to win the war. I have heard gentlemen recently say that we must get five million men ready. Why limit it to five million?

"I have asked the congress of the United States to name no limit because the congress intends, I am sure, as we all intend, that every ship that can carry men or supplies shall go laden upon every voyage with every man and every supply she can carry.

Finds Foe Insincere.

"And, we are not to be diverted from the grim purpose of winning the war by any insincere approaches upon the subject of peace. I can say with a clear conscience that I have tested those intimations and have found them insincere. I now recognize them for what they are, an opportunity to have a free hand, particularly in the East, he carry out purposes of conquest and exploitation.

"Every proposal with regard to accommodation in the West involves a reservation with regard to the East. Now, as far as I am concerned, I intend to stand by Russia as well as France."

A voice from the audience interrupted with:

"God bless you."

"The helpless and the friendless are the very ones that need friends and succor," the president continued, "and if any man in Germany thinks we are going to sacrifice anybody for our own sake, I tell him now he is mistaken.

"For the glory of this war, my fellow citizens, in so far as we are concerned, is that it is, perhaps for the first time in history, an unselfish war. I could not be proud to fight for a selfish purpose, but I can be proud to fight for mankind.

"If they wish peace, let them come forward through accredited representatives and lay their terms in the table. We have laid ours and they know what they are.

"But behind all this grim purpose, my friends, lies the opportunity to demonstrate not only force which will be demonstrated to the utmost but the opportunity to demonstrate character, and it is that opportunity that we have most conspicuously in the work of the Red Cross.

"Not that our men in arms do not represent our character, for they do, and it is a character which those who see and realize, appreciate and admire; but their duty is the duty of force. The duty of the Red Cross is the duty of mercy and succor and friendship.

Knitting World Together.

"Have you formed a picture in your imagination of what this war is doing for us and for the world? In my own mind I am convinced that not a hundred years of peace could have knitted this nation together as this single year of war has knitted it together; and, better even than that, if possible, it is knitting the world together.

"Look at the picture. In the center of the scene, four nations engaged against the world, and at every point of vantage, showing that they are seeking selfish aggrandizement; and, against them, 23 governments, representing the greater part of the population of the world drawn together into a new sense of community of interest, a new sense of community of purpose, a new sense of unity of life.

Cites Italian Example.

'The secretary of war told me an interesting incident the other day. He said when he was in Italy a member of the Italian government was explaining to him the many reasons why Italy felt near to the United States.

"'If you want to try an interesting experiment go up to any one of these troop trains and ask in English how many of them have been in America and see what happens.'

"He tried the experiment. He went up to a troop train and he said, 'How many of you boys have been in America?' and he said it seemed to him as if half of them sprang up: 'Me from San Francisco; me from New York; all over.' There was part of the heart of America in the Italian army.

Must Serve One Another.

"Friendship is the only cement that will ever hold the world together. And this intimate contact of the Red Cross with the peoples who are suffering the terrors and deprivations of this war is going to be one of the greatest instrumentalities of friendship that the world ever knew, and the center of the heart of it all, if we sustain it properly, will be this land that we so dearly love.

"My friends, a great day of duty has come, and duty finds a man's soul as no kind of work can ever find it.

"May I say this—the duty that faces us all now is to serve one another, and no man can afford to make a fortune out of this war. There are men amongst us who have forgotten that, if they ever saw it.

Should Give Freely.

"And your relation to the Red Cross is one of the relations which will relieve you of the stigma. You can't give anything to the government of the United States; it won't accept it. There is a law of congress against accepting even services without pay. The only thing that the government will accept is a loan, and duties performed; but it is a great deal better to give than to lend or to pay, and your great channel for giving is the American Red Cross.

"Down in your hearts you can't take very much satisfaction, in the last analysis, in lending money to the government of the United States, because the interest which you draw will burn your pockets; it is a commercial transaction, and some men have even dared to cavil at the rate of interest, not knowing the incidental commentary that constitute upon their attitude.

No Favors to Come.

"But when you give, something of your heart, something of your soul, something of yourself goes with the gift, particularly when it is given in such form that it never can come back by way of direct benefit to yourself. You know there is the old cynical definition of gratitude, as 'the lively expectation of favors to come.'

"Well, there is no expectation of favors to come in this kind of giving. These things are bestowed in order that the world may be a fitter place to live in, that men may be succored, that homes may be restored, that suffering may be relieved, that the face of the earth may have the blight of destruction taken away from it, and that wherever force goes, there shall go mercy and helpfulness.

"And when you give, give absolutely all that you can spare, and don't consider yourself liberal in the giving.

"And think what we have here! We call it the American Red Cross, but it is merely a branch of a great international organization, which is not only recognized by the statutes of each of the civilized governments of the world, but it is recognized by international agreement and treaty as the recognized and accepted instrumentality of mercy and succor. And one of the deepest stains that rests upon the reputation of the German army is that they have not respected the Red Cross.

Members of Great Fraternity.

"That goes to the root of the matter. They have not respected the instrumentality they themselves participated in setting up as the thing which no man was to touch, because it was the expression of common humanity. We are members, by being members of the American Red Cross, of a great fraternity and comradeship which extends all over the world, and this cross which these women bore today is an emblem of Christianity itself.

"It fills my imagination, ladies and gentlemen, to think of the women all over this country who are busy tonight and are busy every night and every day doing the work of the Red Cross.

"When you think of this, you realize how the people of the United States are being drawn together into a great intimate family whose heart is being used for the service of the soldiers not only, but for the service of civilians, where they suffer and are lost in a maze of distresses and distractions.

"And you have, then, this noble picture of justice and mercy as the two servants of liberty.

Tells Indian Story.

"I heard a story told the other day that was ridiculous, but it is worth repeating, because it contains the germ of truth. An Indian was enlisted in the army. He returned to the reservation on a furlough. He was asked what he thought of it. He said: 'No much good; too much salute; not much shoot.' Then he was asked: 'Are you going back?' 'Yes.'

"'Well, do you know what you are fighting for?' 'Yes, me know; fight to make whole damn world democratic party.'

No Party Purpose.

"He had evidently misunderstood some innocent sentence of my own. But, after all, although there is no party purpose in it, he got it right as far as the word 'party,' to make the whole world democratic in the sense of community of interest and of purpose, and if you ladies and gentlemen could read some of the touching dispatches which come through official channels, for even through these channels there come voices of humanity that are infinitely pathetic, if you could catch some of those voices that speak the utter longing of oppressed and helpless peoples all over the world to hear something like the 'Battle Hymn of the Republic,' to hear the feet of the great hosts of liberty going to set them free, to set their minds free, set their lives free, set their children free, you would know what comes into the heart of those who are trying to contribute all the brains and power they have to this great enterprise of liberty.

"I summon you to the comradeship, I summon you to say how much and how sincerely and how unanimously you sustain the heart of the world."

ALLIES' ARMIES WIN AT AMIENS

Both British and French Make Gains in Picardy.

HUN ARTILLERY IS ACTIVE

Beginning of Gigantic Offensive by Germans Depends on the Weather—Enemy Masses 1,900,000 Men on West Front.

London, May 20.—In the face of the growing menace of a German offensive against Amiens, the key position on the Picardy front, both the British and French held the aggressive in this sector and scored appreciable gains during the day.

The fighting centered at two points that have figured almost daily in the local operations of the pact three weeks—Morlancourt and Hangard.

At Morlancourt the Australians continued their series of daring onslaughts against the German line. Striking the enemy near Ville-sur-Ancre, slightly to the northwest, they advanced and further improved their positions against the expected German drive and at the same time took a number of prisoners and machine guns.

French Gain at Hangard.

At Hangard, where American troops are engaged, their French brothers in arms took the aggressive. In a sharp night attack they thrust back the German lines and gained a toll of prisoners.

As a background for these local battles was the growing intensity of the German preparatory fire.

Every indication points to a renewal of the German offensive on a grand scale within a few days, possibly tomorrow, and Amiens undoubtedly is still the grand objective of the kaiser's effort.

British Front Is Quiet.

With the British Army in France, May 20.—Beyond artillery activity the allied front between Flanders and Amiens has been absolutely quiet. Many aerial battles have taken place and a number of German machines have been driven down.

Germans Have 1,900,000 Men.

Paris, May 20.—The beginning by the Germans of a formidable offensive, by which they expect to achieve final success, now depends only on weather conditions. The commander in chief, the French troops and their allies are waiting for the shock with the greatest confidence.

The Petit Parisien says the enemy has massed nearly all his best troops on the attacking front. Between the Belgian coast and the Oise, it states, 140 divisions (about 1,900,000 men) have been distributed, 82 on the front line or for direct support and the remainder behind the lines, to be used for augmenting the push at the principal point of attack. This newspaper says the German plan is to threaten Amiens, cut the railroad between that point and Clermont and break up the allies' forces whatever the cost may be.

British Casualties 39,889.

London, May 20.—British casualties compiled from the official lists published during the last week totaled 39,889. The casualties were divided as follows. Officers killed, 322; wounded, 1,024; missing, 477. Men killed, 4,333; wounded, 20,701; missing, 13,032.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Indianapolis.—Agriculturalists and men of allied interests who are to wage a big campaign for 1919 wheat production in Indiana will hold a preliminary meeting in this city. This was agreed upon at a meeting of the food-production committee of the state council of defense. It was decided to have representatives of Purdue university, the Indiana Grain Dealers' association, the Indiana Millers' association, the Indiana Bankers' association and the Indiana Fertilizers' association attend the meeting. D. S. Myer of Purdue will preside. He is the assistant state leader of the county agents. The idea in Indiana is to hold the wheat acreage without loss. Normal acreage has been increased 25 per cent since the war began and Hoosier leaders do not want to see the state fall down. A similar campaign will be begun in other states as a part of a nationwide movement. Careful selection of seed, early plowing and other essential points will be emphasized in the campaign.

Terre Haute.—New through freight rates, which went into effect recently on the Evansville & Indianapolis railroad reopen about fifteen coal fines along the railroad, that have been closed down for some time. These rates, which supersede the former tariffs which were ordered last winter at a time when coal was in such a demand that any hauling rate could be charged, will permit the mines to supply territories reached by the Pennsylvania, the Big Four and the Monon railroads. Other through freight schedules are being prepared by the receiver of the Evansville & Indianapolis, and will become effective as soon as possible. The biggest problem facing the railroad is car supply. With more equipment the mines can appreciably increase the coal supply of the state.

Indianapolis.—Indiana citizens—all of whom will be practically dependent on Indiana coal next winter—are advised to buy coal now. This advice was given out following a conference of the public service commission of Indiana, fuel superintendents, executive officers of Indiana coal-carrying roads and representatives of Indiana coal operators, who were summoned to the conference. As a result the public service commission is to impress on the government the need of a 15 per cent increase in the car supply for Indiana next month. An effort is to be made by operators to prepare the best grades of Indiana coal for domestic uses. Every effort is to be made to give opportunity to Indiana people to lay in next winter's supply of coal.

Lafayette.—"Indiana crops are the best of any between here and Washington, D. C.," said Prof. G. I. Christie, Purdue extension superintendent, now assistant secretary of agriculture. "Especially is this true of the wheat crop, which has a condition of 96 per cent, according to the United States bureau of crop estimates. Indiana stands highest of any state in the Union at the present time. If only a few more farmers could have treated their seed and their soils in the way practiced by the best farmers, Indiana would have had a 100 per cent wheat crop this year." Mr. Christie recommends another wheat campaign this year on a bigger scale than that of 1917.

Terre Haute.—Mayor Hunter has named a special morals squad in an attempt to stop the importation of liquor into Terre Haute. West end saloonkeepers are buying liquor in small Illinois towns near the state border and are bringing it to this city by motortruck at night, it is said. A marked increase in the number of persons arrested on charges and the "doped" appearance of those arrested lead police to believe a new drink—a combination of the "alcoholless" beer and some powerful narcotic—is being sold.

Indianapolis.—Edward H. Wasmuth of Huntington was elected chairman of the Indiana Republican state committee, succeeding Will H. Hays, now chairman of the national Republican committee. Secretary L. W. Henley, who declined to be a candidate for the chairmanship, was re-elected secretary. Fred Van Nuys of Indianapolis is the new Democratic state chairman, elected by the state committee to succeed Charles A. Greathouse.

South Bend.—That the War Savings stamps are not intended for the children alone, but, on the contrary, are an excellent investment for older persons as well, is being emphasized by the Indiana war savings committee in preparation for its coming drive, May 27 to June 3, when it is expected $7,500,000 worth of stamps will be sold in the state.

Terre Haute.—In a statement here Eugene V. Debs announced that the national Socialist party would hold a convention in the near future when a restatement of its war attitude will be given to the public. The date or place of meeting have not been decided on, he added.

New Albany.—The city council has appropriated $1,000 to be used in carrying on the work of suppression and regulation of certain diseases which make soldiers unfit for service. An ordinance was adopted by the council, following a conference with Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the state board of health, and Maj. L. D. Fricks of the United States army.

Jeffersonville.—An innovation has been introduced at the United States quartermaster's depot in the employment of 45 negro women to do work of a light character heretofore done by men.

Indianapolis.—"The Indiana farmers and stockmen have done their bit to stop the German offensive in France—done it not only in larger crops, but in the increased production of pork—the best food for shipment and consumption for the soldiers and the product of the farm most necessary to win the war," said Dr. L. E. Northup, Indiana state veterinarian, active head of the propaganda for more hogs in Indiana. Doctor Northup started last May with a slogan of "25 per cent more brood sows." He says the production of hogs will approach a 33 1-3 per cent increase. Records show an increase, for the month of February this year over last year, in receipts at the Indianapolis stock yards totaling 44,579,025 pounds of pork, which, at 17½ cents a pound for February, 1918 means an increased value of more than $7,500,000. There also are public yards at Evansville, Lafayette and other points. In this great work the Indiana farmers have had the assistance of the veterinarians of the state and the other forces interested in the growth of better stock. Farmers promptly responded to the request to stop shipping brood sows to market; also to put more brood sows on the farm and to feed more light hogs shipped into Indiana for fattening, there being an available supply of soft corn on hand for fattening. Through the able assistance given, and the influence of the county agents, the hog population of Indiana for 1918 will exceed all former records. The bureau of animal industry, with 20 federal veterinarians co-operating, have aided in the eradicating of hog cholera and the control of other diseases. The department of state veterinarian consists of 17 assistants to Doctor Northup.

South Bend.—Federal officers stationed in the grandstand of the interstate fair grounds using a spyglass discovered the location of $5,000 worth of whisky in the rear of a roadhouse between South Bend and Mishawaka. They arrested the proprietor of the place, Bruno Hertram, who was held under $2,500 bond. The federal agents saw men remove a quantity of dirt, and then by means of a pump draw whisky. A raid revealed truckloads of intoxicants all of which was confiscated. Two barrels of whisky surrounded by kegs of sherry, rum and gin were buried five feet. In another place were found two barrels of champagne, a case of imported liquors, a case of imported bitters, 14 jugs of whisky and a barrel of beer.

Michigan City.—The common council has reported on its investigation into the legal department of the city for the alleged sale of worthless bonds to city officials. Eight of the nine councilmen signed a written report demanding the resignation of City Attorney M. J. Kenefick, but a few minutes later when a vote was taken on an accompanying resolution it failed of passage. The mayor cast the deciding vote. There is talk of a grand jury investigation into the legal department of the city.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich, when asked whether he had information to the effect that the new Indiana state militia might receive an early opportunity to see federal service, in connection with a threatening Mexican situation, said he could give no information on the subject. Rumors have become prevalent to the effect that a distinct possibility has arisen, in which the militia, which now comprises more than a full brigade in Indiana, might see service in connection with the Mexican situation.

Brazil.—G. W. Gordon, an architect, of Indianapolis, charged with giving a bribe to Carl Biller, trustee of Posey township, to procure contracts, took a change of venue from Judge John M. Rawley. Judge Brill of Danville, who was selected as special judge in the Earl Clevenger bribery case, sent word that the trial date might be set for June, and by agreement it was set down for June 12. The case of Ben Cones of Indianapolis, on a similar charge, was set for June 17.

Valparaiso.—The Porter county auditor received an order to have the proposed state highway commission work on the Lincoln highway stopped. A judge has declared that the law is unconstitutional. The attorney general is appealing to the supreme court, but no decision is expected before fall, so the hundreds of thousands of dollars offered to be spent by the nation and state on surfacing Indiana roads is held up.

Bedford.—With a second raise of White river and its tributaries in this district, travel has been cut off on many Lawrence county roads leading to this city. The oolitic region is covered with a six-foot overflow from Salt creek. The crest of the flood is expected to be reached here soon. Farmers say the damage to crops in the overflowed bottoms cannot be estimated until the waters are off the submerged fields.

Owensville.—Farmers in Wabash township report that much of the frozen corn left to rot in the fields all winter and now lying in newly plowed ground is displaying remarkable vitality following recent rains. Scattered grains are sprouting and growing and in some instances whole ears have germinated on the cob.

Chicago, Ill.—Total Liberty loan subscriptions in the Seventh federal reserve district amounted to $608,655,450, it was announced officially by the governor of the Chicago Federal Reserve bank. The district quota of $425,000,000 was oversubscribed 33 1-3 per cent. Of 4,048,052 subscriptions 2,364,528 were for $50 bonds. Indiana, with a quota of $53,770,000, subscribed $70,734,250, or 131.5 per cent, while Michigan, with a subscription total of $97,923,000, was 29.5 per cent above its quota of $75,600,000. Iowa led the district with a total subscription of $117,160,050, or 164.89 per cent.

I. The Parable of the Husbandman (vv. 1-12).

Having put the scribes, chief priests and elders to confusion by a skillful counter-question when they demanded his authority, Jesus, by means of a little story, lays before them his claim of divine authority, and charges them with betrayal of trust and plotting to murder the very Son of God. His teaching in this parable cut them to the quick, and they sought to lay hands upon him, but desisted for fear of the people. This parable is simple, yet very comprehensive.

II. The Tribute Money (vv. 13-17).

They already would have gladly taken him by violence and killed him, but they feared the people. In order to destroy him, they seek to discredit him among the people. To this end they send the representatives of both factions—"certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians to catch him in his words" (v. 13).

III. The Resurrection of the Dead (vv. 18-27).

The Pharisees and Herodians being silenced, the Sadducees came with a question which involved not only the immortality but the resurrection of the body. The Sadducees were the rationalists of their day. They denied the reality of the resurrection, and believed not in angel nor spirit (Acts 23:8).

1. The case proposed (vv. 19-23).

The law of Moses made it not only legal but morally binding in the case of a man dying without children for his brother to take his wife (Deut. 22:5). They propose the case of a woman married successively to seven brothers. They ask whose wife she shall be in the resurrection. This was doubtless a hypothetical case. This is the way the successors of the Sadducees do today. They deal largely in hypotheses.

2. Jesus' reply (vv. 24-26).

By a quotation from the Mosaic law (Ex. 3:6) he proves the resurrection of the dead, and their continued existence beyond the dead as human beings. The immortal spirit clothed with a deathless body is his thought. He shows that marriage is only for this present life—does not belong to the resurrection life. Some of the functions of the body will cease with this life. Since there will be no death after the resurrection, there will be no necessity for births. In this respect humankind will be as the angels in the resurrection life. He points out to them that their great error was due to two things:

1. Ignorance of the Scriptures (v. 24). In the very Scriptures which they professed to believe was positive proof of the resurrection (Ex. 3:6). Rationalism and infidelity today, as then, are due to ignorance of God's Word.

2. Ignorance of the power of God (v. 24). God is able to provide a life where there is no death, no births or marriages. In heaven, life will be on a plane infinitely higher than the most blessed relationships of this life. Our chief concern is to find out what is written, and then believe that God is able to accomplish that which he has promised.

IV. The Great Commandment of the Law (vv. 28-34).

The code of morals among the Jews was very complex. The question as to which of God's commandments was first was frequently debated. Christ's answer shows marvelous insight. He sums up man's whole duty in one word—love, love to God and love to man. The first and great commandment is supreme and undivided love to God. The second is like unto it in that love is its center, but love is for our neighbor in the measure that we love ourselves. Love for God is to be supreme. He is worthy of all our affections. Love is the actuating power behind all our service. Having put his questioners to silence, Jesus now puts to them a question which involves the central doctrine of the Christian faith—the person of Christ (vv. 35:40).

Cow Saved His Life.

London, Ont.—George Johnson, a farmer here, owes his life to a good old mooley cow. Johnson was out plowing on his land when he suddenly stepped into a hole of water that was formed by the melting snow. As he was about to go under he grasped the tail of one of his cows that had wandered out to where he was plowing, and she hauled him into the safety zone.

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

MACHINE GUNNER, SERVING IN FRANCE

©1917 BY ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

EMPEY JOINS PICK AND SHOVEL SQUAD AND DIGS TRENCHES IN NO MAN'S LAND.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Chaplain distinguishes himself by rescuing wounded men under hot fire. With pick and shovel Empey has experience as a trench digger in No Man's Land.

We lined up in front of the baths, soaked with perspiration, and piled our rifles into stacks. A sergeant of the R. A. M. C. with a yellow band around his left arm on which was "S. P." (sanitary police) in black letters, took charge, ordering us to take off our equipment, unroll our puttees and unlace boots. Then, starting from the right of the line, he divided us into squads of fifteen. I happened to be in the first squad.

We entered a small room, where we were given five minutes to undress, then filed into the bathroom. In here there were fifteen tubs (barrels sawed in two) half full of water. Each tub contained a piece of laundry soap. The sergeant informed us that we had just twelve minutes in which to take our baths. Soaping ourselves all over, we took turns in rubbing each other's backs, then by means of a garden hose, washed the soap off. The water was ice cold, but felt fine.

Pretty soon a bell rang and the water was turned off. Some of the slower ones were covered with soap, but this made no difference to the sergeant, who chased us into another room, where we lined up in front of a little window, resembling the box office in a theater, and received clean underwear and towels. From here we went into the room where we had first undressed. Ten minutes were allowed in which to get into our "clabber."

My pair of drawers came up to my chin and the shirt barely reached my diaphragm, but they were clean—no strangers on them, so I was satisfied.

At the expiration of the time allotted we were turned out and finished our dressing on the grass.

When all of the company had bathed it was a case of march back to billets. That march was the most uncongenial one imagined, just cussing and blinding all the way. We were covered with white dust and felt greasy from sweat. The woolen underwear issued was itching like the mischief.

A Bathroom at the Front.

After eating our dinner of stew, which had been kept for us—it was now four o'clock—we went into the creek and had another bath.

If "Holy Joe" could have heard our remarks about the divisional baths and army red tape he would have fainted at our wickedness. But Tommy is only human after all.

I just mentioned "Holy Joe" or the chaplain in an irreverent sort of way, but no offense was meant, as there were some very brave men among them.

There are so many instances of heroic deeds performed under fire in rescuing the wounded that it would take several books to chronicle them, but I have to mention one instance performed by a chaplain, Captain Hall by name, in the brigade on our left, because it particularly appealed to me.

A chaplain is not a fighting man; he is recognized as a noncombatant and carries no arms. In a charge or trench raid the soldier gets a feeling of confidence from contact with his rifle, revolver, or bomb he is carrying. He has something to protect himself with, something with which he can inflict harm on the enemy—in other words, he is able to get his own back.

But the chaplain is empty-handed, and is at the mercy of the enemy if he encounters them, so it is doubly brave for him to go over the top, under fire, and bring in wounded. Also a chaplain is not required by the king's regulations to go over in a charge, but this one did, made three trips under the hottest kind of fire, each time returning with a wounded man on his back. On the third trip he received a bullet through his left arm, but never reported the matter to the doctor until late that night—just spent his time administering to the wants of the wounded lying on stretchers.

The chaplains of the British army are a fine, manly set of men, and are greatly respected by Tommy.

CHAPTER XIV.

Picks and Shovels.

I had not slept long before the sweet voice of the sergeant informed that "No. 1 section had clicked for another blinking digging party." I smiled to myself with deep satisfaction. I had been promoted from a mere digger to a member of the Suicide club, and was exempt from all fatigues. Then came an awful shock. The sergeant looked over in my direction and said:

"Don't you bomb throwers think you are wearing top hats out here. 'Cordin' to orders you've been taken up on the strength of this section, and will have to do your bit with the pick and shovel, same as the rest of us."

I put up a howl on my way to get my shovel, but the only thing that resulted was a loss of good humor on my part.

We fell in at eight o'clock, outside of our billets, a sort of masquerade party. I was disguised as a common laborer, had a pick and shovel, and about one hundred empty sandbags. The rest, about two hundred in all, were equipped likewise: picks, shovels, sandbags, rifles and ammunition.

The party moved out in column of fours, taking the road leading to the trenches. Several times we had to string out in the ditch to let long columns of limbers, artillery and supplies get past.

The marching, under these conditions, was necessarily slow. Upon arrival at the entrance to the communication trench, I looked at my illuminated wrist watch—it was eleven o'clock.

Before entering this trench, word was passed down the line, "no talking or smoking, lead off in single file, covering party first."

This covering party consisted of 30 men, armed with rifles, bayonets, bombs, and two Lewis machine guns. They were to protect us and guard against a surprise attack while digging in No Man's Land.

The communication trench was about half a mile long, a zigzagging ditch, eight feet deep and three feet wide.

Now and again, German shrapnel would whistle overhead and burst in our vicinity. We would crouch against the earthen walls while the shell fragments "slapped" the ground above us.

Once Fritz turned loose with a machine gun, the bullets from which "cracked" through the air and kicked up the dirt on the top, scattering sand and pebbles, which, hitting our steel helmets, sounded like hailstones.

Upon arrival in the fire trench an officer of the Royal Engineers gave us our instructions and acted as guide.

We were to dig an advanced trench two hundred yards from the Germans (the trenches at this point were six hundred yards apart).

Two winding lanes, five feet wide, had been cut through our barbed wire, for the passage of the diggers. From these lines white tape had been laid on the ground to the point where we were to commence work. This in order that we would not get lost in the darkness. The proposed trench was also laid out with tape.

The covering party went out first. After a short wait, two scouts came back with information that the working party was to follow and "carry on" with their work.

In extended order, two yards apart, we noiselessly crept across No Man's Land. It was nervous work; every minute we expected a machine gun to open fire on us. Stray bullets "cracked" around us, or a ricochet sang overhead.

Arriving at the taped diagram of the trench, rifles slung around our shoulders, we lost no time in getting to work. We dug as quietly as possible but every now and then the noise of a pick or shovel striking a stone would send the cold shivers down our backs. Under our breaths we heartily cursed the offending Tommy.

At intervals a star shell would go up from the German lines and we would remain motionless until the glare of its white light died out.

When the trench had reached a depth of two feet we felt safer, because it would afford us cover in case we were discovered and fired on.

The digging had been in progress about two hours, when suddenly hell seemed to break loose in the form of machine-gun and rifle fire.

We dropped down on our bellies in the shallow trench, bullets knocking up the ground and snapping in the air. Then shrapnel butted in. The music was hot and Tommy danced.

INTERNATIONAL FILM SERVICE

Trench Digging.

The covering party was having a rough time of it; they had no cover; just had to take their medicine.

Word was passed down the line to beat it for our trenches. We needed no urging; grabbing our tools and stooping low, we legged it across No Man's Land. The covering party got away to a poor start but beat us in. They must have had wings because we lowered the record.

Panting and out of breath, we tumbled into our front-line trench. I tore my hands getting through our wire, but, at the time, didn't notice it; my journey was too urgent.

When the roll was called we found that we had gotten it in the nose for 63 casualties.

Our artillery put a barrage on Fritz' front-line and communication trenches and their machine-gun and rifle fire suddenly ceased.

Upon the cessation of this fire, stretcher bearers went out to look for killed and wounded. Next day we learned that 21 of our men had been killed and 37 wounded. Five men were missing; lost in the darkness, they must have wandered over into the German lines, where they were either killed or captured.

Speaking of stretcher bearers and wounded, it is very hard for the average civilian to comprehend the enormous cost of taking care of wounded and the war in general. He or she gets so accustomed to seeing billions of dollars in print that the significance of the amount is passed over without thought.

From an official statement published in one of the London papers, it is stated that it costs between six and seven thousand pounds ($30,000 to $35,000) to kill or wound a soldier. This result was attained by taking the cost of the war to date and dividing it by the killed and wounded.

It may sound heartless and inhuman, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that from a military standpoint it is better for a man to be killed than wounded.

Empey tells of many ways the soldiers have of amusing themselves, in the next installment.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

CHINESE INTERROGATION POINT

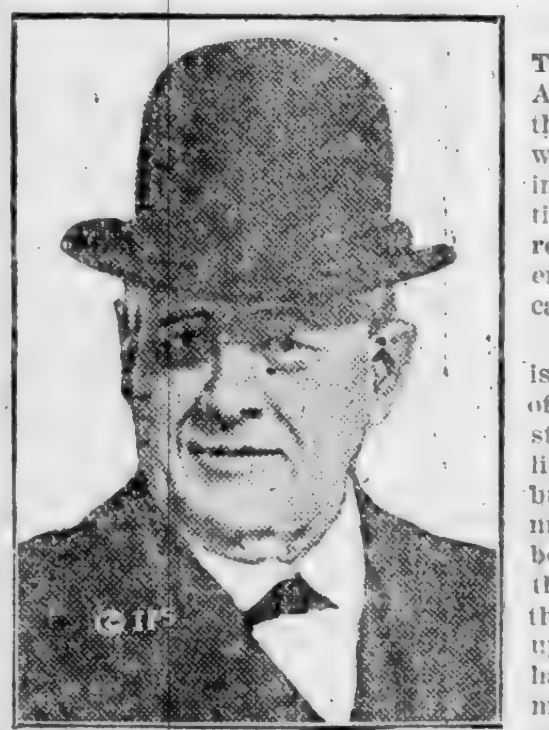
"Feng is a rapier. Under his presidency China is destined to see some eventful days," wrote Adachi Kinnosuke in the New York Tribune last July when the reins of government were put in the hands of General Feng Kwochang. Things have been happening in a pretty tumultuous fashion ever since; but the bitter words of self-reproach that accompanied Feng's announcement of his decision to retire from the presidency seem to indicate that the days were eventful in spite of rather than because of any potency in himself. His mandate was filled with such self-abasing sentences as: "I ordered the negotiations for peace while the rebels were triumphant;" "My effort to save from misery brought more misery; my hope to save the situation resulted in more confusion;" and "I am too weak for the burden."

Apparently, President Feng is still, as Mr. Adachi called him, "an interrogation point of Chinese politics." Of his past, which he says is simple, the writer continued: "He was born some 59 years ago in the metropolitan province of Chihli, in the prefecture of Hochien. He went through the Paoting Military academy, and made his way up from the ranks of petty officers to the presidency of the Peers' Military academy, in 1905. His onward march has been singularly free from backslidings, which is a near miracle in that hothouse of all manner and variety of petty jealousies and intrigues called the officialdom of China. The following year saw him at the head of the Imperial Guards.

"Yuan Shih-kai in his glory days stood upon the shoulders of four stalwart pillars. They were called his Big Four. General Feng Kwochmang was one of them."

General Feng was one of those whom Yuan Shih-kai, who dominated several of the commanders of the Imperial army, secretly ordered to bring about the emperor's abdication of the throne.

MARTIN, BOSS OF CONGRESS



Congress has a boss, and he is Thomas Staples Martin, of Virginia. As the majority leader of the senate, the Virginia senator wields a power which holds the entire war congress in line. Theoretically, Senator Martin has no power over the house of representatives, yet his word bears enough weight so that he has practical control of both bodies.

From the gallery Senator Martin is about the busiest man on the floor of the war senate. Diminutive in stature, he bustles around very much like a clucking hen watching over her brood. When there is important administration legislation before the body, it is Senator Martin who whips the recalcitrants into line, and when there is antiadministration legislation up it is the same diminutive, white-haired senator from Virginia who makes himself very busy working the soft pedal.

As a floor speaker Senator Martin is a negligible quantity. He does not orate and rarely appears in the Congressional Record, but when he speaks the senate acts.

HELPING THE FRENCH

To help restore the penniless among the French war sufferers to economic independence and at the same time promote closer commercial relations between the United States and France, an exchange market for American and French goods will be established through the efforts of the Travail Franco-Americain, according to Mrs. Benjamin Cram of Baltimore and New York, organizer of the society.

Mrs. Cram, who is a French woman married to an American, recently returned from Paris, where she spent six months. Among the patrons and patronesses of her organization in France, she says, are the wife of President Poincaire; Mrs. William G. Sharp, wife of the American ambassador; Pierre Mille, the writer; Felix Decori, Mme. Paul Adam, C. W. Veditz, commercial attache of the American embassy at Paris; Comptesse Mathieu de Nosilles, Gen. Mailterre and the Duchesse de Clermont.

An American committee will be organized, Mrs. Cram announces. In this country the organization will operate under the name of the French Crafts society.

BURIAN, TOOL OF THE KAISER

When Count Czernin found the situation in Austria-Hungary too much for him and resigned from the office of foreign minister, the Germans and the pan-German of the dual kingdom were rather anxious about his successor. But when Baron Burian was named they were content, for the baron always has been entirely submissive to the kaiser.

Of plebeian Magyar birth, with a mushroom Magyar title of baron, he is despised and detested quite as much in Hungary as in Austria. He is as graceless in appearance as he is in manner and speech, is defective in vision, except as regards distant objects, and is extremely deaf, a disadvantage compensated by his extraordinary skill in lip reading. He is a man of no initiative or constructive ability, and his only advantage in the eyes of the kaiser is that he can rely upon him to carry out his orders.

Tisza in Hungary and Burian in the remainder of the empire stand for reactionary despotism and tyranny of the Hohenzollern brand. Tisza is a masterful man of the most harsh and cruel character who has relentlessly crushed every effort to introduce universal suffrage in Hungary and who has treated the Slavs subject to the crown of St. Stephen like helots.

West Philadelphia, Pa.—"During the thirty years I have been married, I have been in bad health and had several attacks of nervous prostration until it seemed as if the organs in my whole body were worn out. I was finally persuaded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it made a well woman of me. I can now do all my housework and advise all ailing women to try Lydia E. There are thousands of women everywhere in Mrs. Fitzgerald's condition, suffering from nervousness, backache, headaches, and other symptoms of a functional derangement. It was a grateful spirit for health restored which led her to write this letter so that other women may benefit from her experience and find health as she has done.

ALL WOMAN HAD IN WORLD

Pathetic Plea Made to Governor Goodrich Asking Him to Allow Liberty to Her Dog.

"All I have in this world is my poor dog," a southern Indiana woman said in a heartfelt, pathetic letter to Governor Goodrich, begging him not to make a law "that no one is allowed to let their dogs out this summer." Possibly an owner of sheep spread a report that an offensive campaign is to be conducted against dogs this year.

The letter:

"Governor Goodrich: Beg pordon. Could I ask you a question they say you are going to make a law that no one is allowed to let their dogs out this summer. Would you be so kind to not pass that law? I have a dog is all I have in this world. I would not like to see him locked up all summer while the weather is nice they like to be out.

"I pay taxes for him.

"I will ask God to bless you. A poor woman's wish.

"All I have in this world is my poor dog."

A Discrimination.

"Everybody admires a good loser."

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne. "But nobody envies him."

W. C. T. U. Convention

The DeKalb county W. C. T. U. held a two-day institute at this place on Monday and Tuesday of last week. The proceedings were characterized by an interest never exceeded by any similar meeting of the kind ever held within the county and were highly profitable. Miss Mary E. Woodard, of Fountain City, state corresponding secretary, was present and gave the institute the benefit of her knowledge of and and experience in the work; and to her was due much of the interest of the occasion. Mrs. Addie Patterson, of St. Joe, county president, was in charge.

The opening session was held at the Christian church Monday afternoon, at which time an organization was effected. Miss Woodard outlined the plan of campaign for constitutional prohibition; and the unions of Auburn, Butler, Newville and St. Joe reported on the war work done. Mrs. Ada Lane, of Auburn, conducted a profitable quiz on the annual report.

Probably the most interesting feature of the entire institute was the grand gold medal contest Tueskay evening. This was in charge of Mrs. Della Cogswell, county superintendent. The contestants and their subjects were as follows: "Anarchy and the Saloon," Mrs. Clara Platter; "A Teetotaler's Story," Mrs. Gertrude Metcalf; "Christian Patriotism," Miss Pauline Moffit; "Men Wanted," Mrs. Julia Simpson; "The Story of Patsy," Mrs. Goldie Meyers. The judges—Miss Woodard, Mrs. A. K. Mumma and Rev. J. C. Coons—awarded the medal to Mrs. Meyers. A pretty flag drill was given by a number of little St. Joe girls. The music was under the direction of Mrs. Chloe Hart.

Tuesday's sessions were held at the Lutheran church. In the forenoon, the following subjects were discussed: "Temperance and Missions," Mrs. Elizabeth Mumma; "The World War and the Mission of the W. C. T. U.," Miss Woodard; "Review of the United States Congress on Dec. 17, 1917, Passing of the Prohibition Amendment," Rev. L. H. Hively; "What We Expect to Demand of the Legislature of 1919," Rev. L. W. Spayd. In the afternoon: "Co-operation of the W. C. T. U. With Red Cross Society, Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense and Kindred Organizations. Why? How?" Miss Woodard; two quizzes on election procedure, Mrs. Alice Lewis and Mrs. Minnie Husselman; "What Can Women Do Toward Electing Men to the Indiana Legislature Who Will Maintain Our Prohibition Law and Vote to Ratify the Federal Amendment?" J. P. Buckingham; "Fifteen Minutes With the War Mothers (Isa. lxvi, 13 and Matt. xiv, 12), and They Went and Told Jesus," Mrs. Minnie Hively.

In the evening, Miss Woodard gave an address on "Is Prohibition Work War Work?"

A pretty feature of the afternoon was the pinning of white ribbons on a number of little children, the mothers of whom pledged themselves to bring them up as pure and true as they possibly could. They are Walter Gee, Josephine Bachtol, Dale Deloss Collins, Vivian Mason, Edna Milliman, Margaret E. Hamilton and Keith and Carlton Wilmot.

St. Joe now leads in W. C. T. U. work. There are 100 members here, 98 active and 2 honorary. Twenty additions were made last week, as follows: Emma Abel, Esther Bowman, Elma Brown, Carolina Chorpenning, DeLora Curie, Mary Garton (Fort Wayne), Nellie Garton, Pluma Hamilton, W. E. Henly, Nancy Hindman, Jane Hull, Lydia Kees, Mayola Kinsey, Blanch Leighty, Nan Lysher, Leona Mason, Maude Monroe, Margaret Thomas, Opal Wilmot and Musie Woodcox.

Trimmed hats from $1.25 to $3.75. They can't be beaten. See them at J. Beams.

Frank Scholes expects to leave next week for his work in Virginia, an account of which was given in this paper a few weeks ago. He expects to take about 100 men with him. They will travel in a special Pullman car.

Wanted.—Four passengers for the Sunday school convention at Butler on Thursday morning and three on Friday. Fare for the round trip, 50c. Notify The News office.

The Loose-Screw Liar

Reports come to me about dissentions among the people of St. Joe and vicinity. This seems to come out of constant gossip about one thing and another. Someone makes a business of starting falsehoods. This is to be regretted, as there is nothing that will break down the morale of the people any more than petty gossip. The petty liar and gossiper is aiding the enemy. We want and must have harmony to win the war. Anyone who is so small as to be constantly peddling falsehoods is, in the final analysis, pro-German.

No such statement has ever come to me that Christian Curie is pro-German. I have always held this old gentleman in the highest esteem, I will continue to do until the facts are made known to me that he is unworthy. Such falsehoods should be run down and the perpetrator made to suffer.

Tidal waves, earthquakes, tornadoes and the like inflict the least of losses. History's bloodiest pages are indebted to trifles. The liar, the gossiper and the falsifier are a blight upon society. When the Creator had made all good things, there was still some dirty work to do. So He made the beasts, reptiles and poisonous insects; and when he had finished, he had some scraps that were too bad to put into the rattle snake, the hyena, the scorpion and the skunk. So He put these together and covered it with suspicion, wrapped it with jealousy, marked it with a yellow streak and called it a knocker. The knocker, the gossiper and the falsifier must go. The good work of the Red Cross must be carried on. Anything that tends to disorganize the people is aiding the kaiser. The blood of your own boys will be upon your own heads. Harmony and co-operation must be had or we are lost. When the war is over, everyone of these pests will be known and despised and his name will be dishonored for all time.

Get right, keep right and work right! Get out of your narrow cell and see the big things outside your circumscribed vision.

J. Y. W. McClellan,
Chairman DeKalb County Council of Defense.

Obituary

Alexander Emanuel Culbertson, son of Isaac and Nancy Culbertson, was born in Jackson township, DeKalb county, Indiana, on March 11, 1859; and died at his home on the farm where he was born on May 16, 1918, at the age of 59 years, 2 months and 6 days.

Deceased's entire life was practically passed in this vicinity. He was married on Dec. 30, 1885, to DeEtte Hull, who survives him. To them were born seven children, all of whom are still living. They are Henry and Ivan, of near Auburn; Fred, near Butler; Alice, of Toledo; Nellie, Ross and Vernon, at home. He is survived by three grandchildren; three brothers, Abe and George, of St. Joe, and Rich of Auburn; one sister, Mrs. Mary Jane Steward, of Auburn; and other relatives and friends. A twin sister, Mrs. Ellen White, preceded him in death several years ago. Two brothers also are dead, one dying in 1851 and the other in 1865.

Many years ago, Mr. Culbertson united with the Concord church, and was a member at the time of his death.

For almost a year, he had been in failing health; for some time, he had realized the seriousness of his condition and had anticipated the end. Some time ago, in conversation with his pastor, he said that his life had not always been what he wished it had been; but that he had always been a firm believer in Christianity and wanted his life to be right with God.

Funeral services were held at the Concord church on Friday afternoon, in charge of Rev. J. C. Coons, The remains were deposited in a crypt in the mausoleum at Auburn cemetery.

Marriage at Newville

George Strong and Miss Lorain Thomas were united in marriage on Friday evening at the home of the bride's parents, Elder and Mrs. Fred Thomas. The bride's father officiated. Only immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present. They have gone to house keeping on the farm of Charles R. Scoville, uncle of the groom. The boys did not fail to give them a belling, to which was added a joy ride in a spring wagon drawn by an automobile; and they did it right, too, a fact to which the people of St. Joe can attest: they arose in their respective beds in consternation and terror and wondered what was coming—whether Gabriel had blown his horn or all the Indians from the time of Christopher Columbus to the present had come to life and were descending upon the town. No need for megaphones in that crowd!

The Spencer township Sunday school convention was held at the M. E. church, Spencerville, Sunday. There were two interesting sessions—afternoon and evening. The program, as published in this paper last week, was carried out in full, with the addition of a talk by Howard Pervines, who is home on furlough from a training camp, in which he spoke of the manner in which the spiritual needs of the soldiers are looked after. A pretty feature was a patriotic drill, given by sixteen little girls—sixteen charming little Red Cross nurses. J. M. Life was down on the program for his illustrated lecture, "The Other Wise Man;" but owing to the lack of electricity, due to the storm, he was unable to give it. He gave instead "The House That Jack Built and the House That Jack Did Not Build." He will give "The Other Wise Man" at the Lutheran church on Sunday evening, June 2.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

When you compare the low prices of Ford cars with the prices of farm produce, farm stock and everything else on the market, the great value of the Ford car can be fairly estimated. The price for the Ford Touring Car is only $450 f. o. b. Detroit—the same as last year. It is the greatest value, not only among motor cars, but in the whole run of articles grown and manufactured. Think of a five-passenger motor car with the reputation for service, durability and economy that's behind the Ford car, selling for $450! Neckline Given Drastic Change

New York.—The world that amuses or instructs itself by watching the changes in dress finds itself highly diverted in the month of May. This is the time for settlement. February is full of rumors and cables from Paris concerning the gowns that are exploited there by the dressmakers. During the month of March the clothes that arrive in America are shown first by the importers, who cater to the dressmakers, then by the dressmakers and shops, who cater to the public. After the first week of April the public takes a hand in the settlement of fashions and wears its new spring clothes at all hours, with reckless prodigality.

Now, asserts a leading fashion authority, we come to the month of observation. We see what has failed and what has succeeded. We know what the public likes and what it has discarded.

Established Neckline.

In the settlement of fashions which comes this month there is one predominant feature that interests the majority as well as the minority. It is the new arrangement of the neckline.

This style has been creeping on us unawares since January, but it seems to have sprung out of ambush and attacked the people as the warm weather burst over the land.

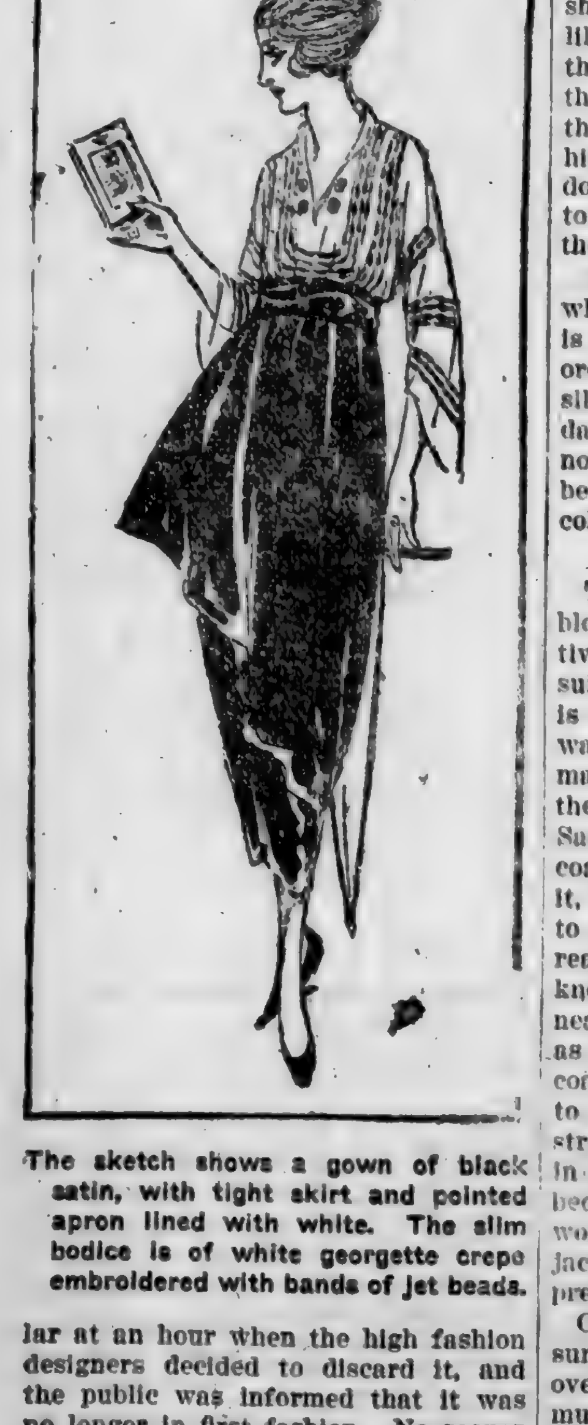
Those who were not observing fashion closely went about with their shirtwaist collars pulled out over the coat collars, or the wide collars of guimpes pulled out over the bare edge of a one-piece frock.

Then, suddenly, the whole process seemed to be wrong. The careless public observed that the fastidious crowd had abandoned white coat collars. They also noticed that the neckline of a one-piece frock was not outlined by a collar except at the back. They noticed that sailor collars had disappeared from fashionable garments. They realized that the neckline, instead of being V-shaped, was square and deeply decollete, or delta-shaped—the decolletage that we associate with Dresden shepherdesses, Dolly Varden styles, Mozartian opera and Janice Meredith. This kind of neckline was accepted only for frocks; it should go without saying that it was not contemplated for coats.

But whatever the garment, its neckline was no more hidden and enveloped by a white collar. It is quite probable that this somersault in fashions disturbed the minds of more women than even the incoming of the tight skirt, for it necessitated thought and an entire change in the arrangement of the garments which have been carelessly worn in the same combination for several seasons. It made one go into numerous shops and regard one's self for numerous moments before mirrors in order to secure a satisfactory adjustment of the new fashion to one's neck and face.

High Collar on Coat Suits.

And another movement in the arrangement of the neck is disquieting. It is the introduction of the high collar at an hour when the high fashion designers decided to discard it, and the public was informed that it was no longer in first fashion. No sooner had this edict gone out and been accepted than a vast number of women—well-dressed women, too—appeared with high loose collar, that either enveloped the chin or rolled in a loose fold beneath it.



The sketch shows a gown of black satin, with tight skirt and pointed apron lined with white. The slim bodice is of white georgette crepe embroidered with bands of jet beads.

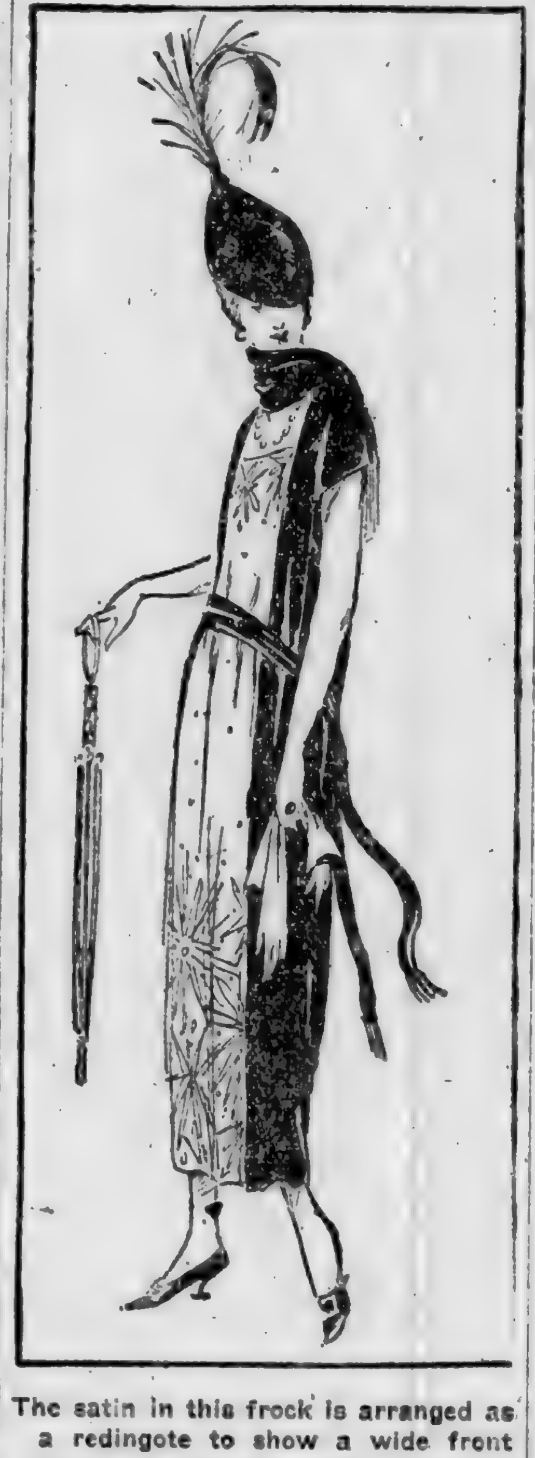
There are two or three practical things that every woman must somehow manage to master in this new fashion if she intends to look her best during the warm-weather season.

One of them is that a coat suit requires some kind of collar at the back and sides of the neckline, to prevent the rough material from resting against the skin.

Another feature of the new neck arrangement which it is well to absorb into the mind is that the blouse with the Italian decolletage is the best to wear under all coats. It is wiser to avoid superimposing one collar on another. This Italian neckline may be round, or straight across the shoulders, or brought to the base of the neck. The wearer must decide on that. Her features should determine the exact curve which is employed.

Low Neck for Day Usage.

Another interesting detail of fashion is the definite tendency toward a deep decollete for day usage. The neckline may be on the Italian model, or it may be on the American Colonial model, which brings the material high and tight against the back and side of the neck and then dips it down to a deep square or delta in front.



The satin in this frock is arranged as a redingote to show a wide front panel of biscuit-colored georgette boldly embroidered in black. The sleeves are short, and the scarf is attached to the frock.

The introduction of the high collar seems to have come about through necessity rather than choice or inclination. True, there are smart women who insist that their one-piece frocks shall have these up-standing, flower-like collars that rise on the stem of the neck and open out wide to envelop the chin and the back of the head, but the majority of women have adopted high collars only with coat suits. They don't know any other kinds of collar to adjust with a jacket that is high in the neck and has rolling revers.

They find that the wash blouse, which has a high turn-over collar and is worn with a cravat of black or colored picot ribbon, gives just the right silhouette to the neckline of an every-day coat suit. If this high collar cannot be adopted, then a low one must be worn with the suit, because of its collarless condition.

Strength of Surplice Jacket.

The lessened number of chiffon blouses shown this summer is indicative of the lessened number of tailored suits worn, so the workers claim. It is true that the shops are filled with wash blouses, which are always in demand for many reasons. However, there is a large segment of Anglo-Saxon women who will not forsake the coat and skirt, and they will cling to it, if not for humane reasons, in order to give men work, then for personal reasons. It is our uniform, and we know how to wear it. We are not nearly so sure of the one-piece frocks as we are of the well-cut, well-sewed coat and skirt. It is futile, therefore, to speak of its abolition while this strong feeling of approval exists for it in this country, as in England. And because of this condition it is well for women to realize that the buttonless jacket, or the surplice kind, is the one preferred.

One might deduct, in looking at these surplice jackets, chemise robes, slip-over-the-head tunics and Callot mummy gowns, that it is a buttonless era. We are to be tied into our clothes from now on. In truth, those startling Callot frocks for afternoon and evening, which strike the only really new note since 1915, give one a quick memory of the ludicrous costumes of those who took part in picnic days, hopping along in coffee sacks tied at the feet, through a lane of cheering, excited pleasure seekers.

Helping the Meat and Milk Supply

AVOID MONOTONY OF SALT MEAT EVERY DAY.

Preparing Meat for Canning by Steam-Pressure Method.

STEAM-PRESSURE CANNER FAVORED

Every Useful Portion of Pork, Beef, Fish and Fowl May Be Preserved.

WASTE AVOIDED BY CANNING

Great Convenience to Housewife When Usual Supplies of Fresh Meat Are Exhausted—More Varied Diet Made Possible.

It is very difficult to keep fresh meat on the farm without a refrigerator or ice supply. As such conveniences are often lacking in the farm home, the importance of canning becomes evident, especially as the curing of meat is also difficult in certain regions, as for example in the extreme South. The farmer who has no ice frequently loses meat when the weather suddenly turns warm at butchering time. Often, too, he uses more fresh meat than he needs in order to consume it before it spoils. This means a waste of one of the most important articles of the diet and one which is usually relatively expensive. It is possible not only to avoid such waste by canning, but also to utilize meat scraps, soup bones, and, in fact, every part of the animal useful for food purposes.

With a supply of canned meats the housewife can prepare and serve a palatable meal on short notice with saving of both fuel and time. It also makes possible a more varied diet, lessening the dependence upon cured, salted, and smoked meat, the constant and exclusive use of which means a monotonous and less wholesome diet.

Canners for Home Use.

Steam-pressure canners for home use are generally made of steel boiler plate riveted together and supplied with cast-iron covers, that can be securely fastened to the retort, or they may be made of cast aluminum. They can be had from reliable makers at prices ranging upward from $15, according to capacity and material used in construction. Steel canners can be had either with or without a suitable heating device. They can be used over a wood, coal, or gas stove or over a brick furnace, just as they can be used over several types of gasoline (under pressure) burners. The aluminum pressure canners, common in many homes where they are not only used for canning under steam pressure but for every-day cooking, may be heated successfully on common wood, coal, gasoline or kerosene stoves as well as where more intense heat is used. Care should be exercised not to exceed the pressure specified in the directions furnished with the canners, otherwise a serious explosion may occur.

Meats are ready for preparation for the canner as soon as the animal heat has disappeared. They must be handled in as cleanly a manner as possible. For home canning, meats should be cooked first—fried, broiled, roasted, baked, or stewed—just as would be done for immediate serving, to preserve not only the meat but the home-cooked flavor as well. The meat is seasoned according to individual taste, and is heated until it is entirely cooked through, without needing to be cooked tender, before placing it in the cans.

Use for Various Parts.

Select the meat intended for roasting, slice the meat wanted for steak, and what is not suited to either of these can be used for goulash or stews or be chopped up and made into sausage meat, formed into little cakes, fried, and canned. What meat is left clinging to the raw bones will be utilized when the bones are boiled for soup stock. For this purpose it is well to cut the bones at several places. The bones removed from the roasts and steaks, with any adhering meat, can also be utilized for soup stock. Put the bones in cold water, heat to near the boiling point, simmer, and continue cooking until all of the strength has been extracted. The sinews, the head, and the feet, after they are cleaned, may be added for the soup stock. Do not add any salt. When well cooked remove the bones and meat and strain the soup. It may be poured into the cans as it is or it may be clarified. To clarify the soup mix beaten whites of eggs with an equal portion of water and the crushed egg shells, which have first been washed, and add this mixture to the soup, bring slowly to a boil, and cook for five minutes. Strain, salt to taste, and pour into hot cans. (The soup stock should jelly when cold. If it does not, simmer until sufficient water has evaporated, so that it will jelly when a little is poured into a saucer and cooled.)

Utilizing Every Ounce.

The liver is soaked in water, the coarse veins cut out and the liver skinned and prepared as desired before canning it, or it may be made into liver sausage, boiled, and canned. The heart can be used for goulash. The kidneys should be soaked in salt water, split open and the little sack removed; then they can be used either for stew or for fried kidneys and canned. The sweetbread is boiled and canned or may be prepared in various ways and then canned. The brain is soaked in water to remove the blood, and the membrane inclosing it is removed. It can be fried or prepared in other ways and then canned. The ox-tail is used for soup. The tongue is soaked in water, washed clean, salted, boiled, skinned, and packed in cans, with meat jelly or soup stock added. If the head is not utilized for soup stock and is of a young animal, it can be boiled, after it is split, cross-sectioned, and soaked in cold water and cleaned carefully, the eyes taken out, and the mucous membrane of the nostrils removed. Boil, remove the meat and utilize it for mock turtle stew or ragout. The tripe can be prepared in the usual way, then boiled and canned. When all the value of the bones for soup stock has been extracted by boiling, the bones may be dried, run through a bone crusher, and fed to the chickens or used for fertilizer. Thus, nothing of the dressed animal is wasted.

Danger of Poisoning.

There is perhaps more danger of food poisoning from meats than from vegetables if any error or oversight has been made in the selection of the stock or in the processing. More scrupulous care, therefore, is necessary in the canning of meats. The United States department of agriculture recently issued, for distribution among its extension workers in home economics, a bulletin on the "Home Canning of Meats and Sea Foods With Steam Pressure Canner." Information pertaining to the canning of meats may be had in various other forms from the department. The safe practice, however, for housewives who expect to undertake the canning of meats or fish would be to get in touch with the home demonstration agent in the county or district, who will be in position to demonstrate every step from the selection of meats to the final sealing of the cans.

FRESH MEATS ALL YEAR

Of course you do your share of complaining about the monotony of eating salt meat every day.

Stop it! Stop both of them—the complaining and the constant eating of salt meat.

Get in touch with the department of agriculture's home demonstration agent in your county or district.

Learn how to operate a steam-pressure canner.

Utilize every bit of pork, beef, mutton, fowl, and fish.

And vary the family diet by substituting fresh meat for salt meat whenever you like.

Temperance Notes

THE WOMEN'S PETITION.

In no better way can this great and significant petition be described than by quoting from the speech of Senator Jones of Seattle in presenting a copy of that notable document to the United States senate. "A few days ago," he said, "one of the most remarkable petitions ever prepared was presented to the president of the United Staets, asking in very respectful terms that he exercise the power that congress has given him and, as a war measure, prohibit the further use of grain and other food products in the manufacture of malt and vinous liquors. That petition was signed by many prominent women of this country of every class and occupation. It was signed by the representatives of all the big woman's organizations in the country. It represented 6,000,000 of the patriotic women of this country, of the most representative character, not only in their own persons but for those whom they represented as the officials of organizations of various kinds. This is distinctly a 'win the war' appeal by the patriotic women of this country, who are doing everything in their power to bring this war to a successful termination. The women of America are doing their part now, as they have always done it in the history of the nation, and they presented the petition to the president as a war proposition. They believe the course suggested by them would have much to do with the winning of the war, and as patriots, and not as partisans of any particular idea, they presented it to him.

"I think this is the first time in the history of the temperance movement that all of the leading organizations of women have united in behalf of a particular proposition. They have all united in behalf of this one proposition and they are all represented in the petition that was presented to the president.

"This petition was prompted by that great organization, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and, in my judgment, will take rank among the historic petitions of the world."

Miss Gordon's statement to the president, the text of the petition, and every signature affixed thereto, was, at Senator Jones' request, printed in the Congressional Record, occupying more than eight pages of that periodical.

THEIR ONE ADVANTAGE.

"Had I wanted to vote for liquor," said one of the members of the Maryland legislature after that body had voted for ratification of the federal amendment, "I could have got enough for my vote to have made me a rich man; many times a rich man." The only advantage the liquor interests have over the advocates of prohibition in the ratification campaign is that they are not hampered by scruples in their choice of tactics pursued, comments the Union Signal. It is with them a life and death struggle, and apparently they will not hesitate to resort to any measures known to corrupt politics to gain their ends. The members of the state law-making bodies will be submitted to severe tests when it comes to a vote on ratification, and no candidate for the position of legislator should be considered at the primaries by the friends of prohibition who has not demonstrated that he is absolutely incorruptible; who cannot show that he is rooted and grounded in the principle of prohibition and who in his ante-election pledge will not make a public promise regarding his attitude on the wet or dry question.

AGAIN POOR OLD KANSAS.

"Army officers, who are slow usually about handing out compliments, all remark on the physical, mental and moral make-up of the Kansas troops," says Governor Capper. "They say no state ever sent a better type of young men into the service. It is noteworthy that not a single Kansas boy was rejected on account of alcoholism and that the percentage of rejections for physical disabilities was smaller among Kansas troops than those of any other state.

"Many Kansas towns did not have to send a single man to the first draft army. Their quotas had been more than filled by volunteers.

"General Leonard Wood, commander of Camp Funston, frequently has taken occasion to say in public addresses, that the standards of living in Kansas have not only increased the efficiency of Kansas soldiers 25 per cent, but that the prohibitory and other welfare laws of the state have made it comparatively easy to conduct a model army camp at Funston."

There is but one way of repressing prohibition. Give it the earth.

HOW THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC PAYS.

Mark Twain said: "A man bought a hog for $1.50, and fed it $20 worth of corn, and then sold the hog for $12. He lost money on the corn, but made $10.50 on the hog." This illustrates the financial results of the license system. The saloons breed vice, poverty, disease, and crime. It costs the tax-payers thousands of dollars annually to look out for the criminals and the poor; but they are making money from the license fees. Well might Shakespeare exclaim, "What fools these mortals be!"

MARCH TO VICTORY

Courage is a matter of the blood. Without good red blood a man has a weak heart and poor nerves.

In the spring is the best time to take stock of one's condition. If the blood is thin and watery, face pale or pimply, generally weak, tired and listless, one should take a spring tonic. One that will do the spring house-cleaning, an old-fashioned herbal remedy that was used by everybody nearly 50 years ago is still safe and sane because it contains no alcohol or narcotic. It is made up of Blood root, Golden Seal root, Oregon Grape root, Queen's root, Stone root, Black Cherry bark—extracted with glycerine and made into liquid or tablets. This blood tonic was first put out by Dr. Pierce in ready-to-use form and since then has been sold by million bottles as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If druggists do not keep this in tablet form, send 60 cents for a vial to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

Kidney disease carries away a large percentage of our people. What is to be done? The answer is easy. Eat less meat, eat coarse, plain food, with plenty of vegetables, drink plenty of water between meals, and take an uric acid solvent after meals for a while, such as Anuric (double strength), obtainable at almost any drug store. It was first discovered by Dr. Pierce. Most every one troubled with uric acid finds that Anuric dissolves the uric acid as hot water does sugar. You can obtain a trial package by sending ten cents to Doctor Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute in Buffalo, N. Y.

You have my heartfelt thanks, and may everyone that has this trouble see this and give Peterson's Ointment, that is worth a hundred dollars or more a box, a trial."—Sincerely yours, A. Newth, Columbus, Ohio.

"It makes me feel proud to be able to produce an ointment like that," says Peterson. "Not only do I guarantee Peterson's Ointment for old sores and wounds, but for Eczema, Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Itching Skin, Pimples, Blackheads and all skin diseases. I put up a big box for 35 cents, a price all can afford to pay and money back from your druggist if not satisfied." Mail orders filled, charges prepaid by Peterson Bros., Buffalo, N.Y. Adv.

SAFE, GENTLE REMEDY CLEANSES YOUR KIDNEYS

For centuries GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been a standard household remedy for kidney, liver, bladder and stomach trouble, and all diseases connected with the urinary organs. The kidneys and bladder are the most important organs of the body. They are the filters, the purifiers of your blood. If the poisons which enter your system through the blood and stomach are not entirely thrown out by the kidneys and bladder, you are doomed.

Weariness, sleeplessness, nervousness, despondency, backache, stomach trouble, headache, pain in loins and lower abdomen, gall stones, gravel, difficulty when urinating, cloudy and bloody urine, rheumatism, sciatica and lumbago, all warn you to look after your kidneys and bladder. All these indicate some weakness of the kidneys or other organs or that the enemy microbes which are always present in your system have attacked your weak spots. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules are what you need.

They are not a "patent medicine," nor a "new discovery." For 200 years they have been a standard household remedy. They are the pure, original imported Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used, and are perfectly harmless. The healing, soothing oil soaks into the cells and lining of the kidneys and through the bladder, driving out the poisonous germs. New life, fresh strength and health will come as you continue the treatment. When completely restored to your usual vigor, continue taking a capsule or two each day; they will keep you in condition and prevent a return of the disease.

Do not delay a minute. Delays are especially dangerous in kidney and bladder trouble. All druggists sell GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. They will refund the money if not as represented. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules are imported direct from the laboratories in Holland. They are prepared in correct quantity and convenient form, are easy to take and are positively guaranteed to give prompt relief. In three sizes, sealed packages. Ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL. Accept no substitutes.—Adv.

Don't Be Afraid of Your Meals

Take "Eatonic" and Laugh At Stomach Troubles

H. L. Kramer, the man who originated Cascarets, has discovered a sure, safe, quick-acting relief for bad stomachs. He named it EATONIC for your stomach's sake.

You can eat anything you like now and digest it in comfort, for stomach ease is positively assured if you eat an EATONIC tablet regularly after each meal.

EATONIC acts directly with the food the moment it enters the stomach. It immediately checks any tendency toward too much acid and enables the food to pass from the stomach into the bowel in a sweetened condition, and thus prevents the formation of sour distressing gases that upset digestion and cause a bloated, dull, lumpy feeling that makes your FOOD REPEAT.

EATONIC enables you to eat your fill and laugh at indigestion, dyspepsia, heartburn, "sour stomach" and all the other bugaboos of "the-man-afraid-of-his-stomach."

Kramer says: "EATONIC should be in every home ready for use after every meal. An EATONIC tablet will aid you naturally to easily digest and assimilate—your food can be thoroughly enjoyed without the slightest danger of misery from acid stomach. I strongly advise every one to take EATONIC after meals. To correct bad stomachs and keep them in perfect condition, it is a most wonderful discovery."

If EATONIC fails to give you prompt stomach relief, your money will be refunded; 50c buys a large box at any drug store. Or write to Eatonic Remedy Co., 1018 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, U. S. A.

The KITCHEN CABINET

Blessed is he who is such a friend to humanity that he seeth good in every man, for his own spirit shall be constantly enriched by the Christ spirit.

COMPANY GOOD THINGS.

These days we do not make frosted cakes except for state occasions and even plain cakes should be used sparingly to save our sugar.

Lightning Cake.—Beat half a cupful of butter substitute to a cream, add half a cupful of sugar, the yolks of four eggs beaten light, three tablespoonfuls of milk and one cupful of corn flour sifted with a teaspoonful of baking powder. Spread the mixture in a shallow pan, beat the whites of the eggs, add gradually three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, then fold in a half cupful of blanched and shredded almonds. Spread this meringue over the cake mixture, dredge the top with sugar and cinnamon and bake thirty minutes. Cut in strips for serving.

Small sponge cakes baked in gem pans and when cold cut open and filled with sweetened and flavored whipped cream make a most delicious cake for nice occasions.

Dog Biscuit.—Roll thin a baking powder biscuit dough, using barley flour instead of wheat, cut out the biscuit and place a slice of bologna sausage on one then cover with another pressing the edges together. Bake as usual. This is a most appetizing dish enjoyed by people who do not ordinarily care for bologna. The name is the only drawback to this biscuit.

Pineapple and Cream Cheese Salad.—Wash and dry the leaves of head lettuce; cut canned sliced pineapple into straws, keeping the straws as long as the slices will allow. Roll cream cheese into balls or egg shapes. Dispose the pineapple straws in the heart leaves of the lettuce and set three eggs in each nest, flock each egg with paprika. Serve plain French dressing in a bowl. Allow two tablespoonfuls of oil, and one of lemon juice with a few grains of salt and pepper for each nest.

Banana Parfait.—Peel and scrape two or three bananas, then press the pulp through a ricer or sieve, scald the pulp with two-thirds of a cupful of sugar and the juice of half a lemon boiled together, chill, then fold in one cupful of cream whipped and one-third of a cupful of candied cherries, cut fine and soaked in orange juice over night.

Rice Muffins.—Take a pint of soft-boiled rice, a cupful of sweet milk or sour, using soda if sour milk is used, two well-beaten eggs, a tablespoonful of fat, and a half teaspoonful of salt. Add corn flour sifted with baking powder to make a batter thick enough to drop. Drop in gem pans and bake in a hot oven.

Friendship—that select and sacred relation which is kind of absolute and which leaves the language of love suspicious and common, so much is this purer, and nothing is so much divine. —Emerson.

MORE POTATO DISHES.

A simple dish and one easy to prepare making a variety in serving potatoes is:

Spanish Potatoes.—Cook potatoes as usual, after peeling, in boiling salted water. Drain well, then turn into a hot vegetable dish which contains a generous portion of butter, three tablespoonfuls of finely scraped or chopped onion, and salt and pepper (cayenne) to taste. Turn in the potatoes and chop coarsely with a silver knife, mixing them well with the seasoning. Then serve with cold meat.

Scalloped Potatoes.—Cut raw potatoes into eighth-inch slices and arrange in a baking dish putting in a layer of potatoes, then salt and pepper, a dash of flour and a few small bits of butter or cheese then repeat until the potatoes are all used. Fill the dish to an inch from the top, then cover with milk and bake in a hot oven. Keep covered the first 15 minutes. Bake until the potatoes are tender.

Russian Salad.—Mix one cupful each of cold cooked carrot cubes and potato cubes with a cupful each of cold cooked peas and beans; marinate with French dressing for two hours, arrange on lettuce leaves in four sections, keeping each vegetable by itself. Garnish two sections with smoked fish and one with hard-cooked egg white chopped, the other with the yolks put through a ricer.

Potato Salad.—Cook small-sized potatoes in their jackets until tender, peel and cut in cubes; while hot add a few tablespoonfuls of French dressing, with one small onion finely chopped or three small green onions, tops and all. Let stand for a half hour after adding salt and paprika. Just before serving add a cupful of diced celery to four cupfuls of potatoes and one small cucumber cut in cubes. Mix well, add boiled or mayonnaise dressing, and serve. For a hot salad the potatoes may be taken while hot, placed in a dish, and onion, bacon fat and vinegar left from spiced pickles heated hot and poured over the potatoes makes a very tasty salad.

MORE GOOD SAVING DISHES.

As potatoes are plentiful this season as well as cheap, we may use more in our bread, adding to its moisture and keeping quality as well as making a palatable loaf. Where a large proportion of mashed potato is used it is necessary to add the flour gradually or it will not work in and if not enough flour is added the bread will be undesirable.

Scalloped Potatoes and Hominy.—Put six medium-sized potatoes through a ricer. Butter a baking dish and put a layer of potato in the bottom of the dish, then a layer of cooked hominy, seasoning well and cover with a layer of grated cheese. Repeat until a cupful of hominy, a cupful of grated cheese and the potatoes are all used. Cover with a cupful of milk and finish with a fourth of a cupful of dried crumbs well buttered. Bake in a moderate oven twenty minutes.

Slice bananas and brown in a little hot fat, sprinkle with lemon juice and a few grains of sugar. Serve with meat as as vegetable.

Oatmeal Macaroons.—Take one and a half cupfuls of oatmeal, parch it until is it light brown, then put it through the meat grinder, unless it is the steel cut oatmeal, that does not need grading. Add a half cupful of coconut, a half cupful of sugar, creamed with a tablespoonful of fat, one well-beaten egg and mix all together. Drop by spoonfuls on a buttered sheet and bake until brown. This recipe makes two dozen macaroons.

Banana Bread Pudding.—Place layers of buttered bread and sliced bananas in a baking dish, beat two eggs, add a fourth of a cupful of sugar and two and a half cupfuls of milk with a pinch of salt, pour this over the bananas and bake until the custard is set. Tart jelly may be used instead of the lemon juice if desired.

Bananas With Strawberries.—Peel and mash four ripe bananas; mix thoroughly with a half cupful of crushed strawberries that have been sweetened to taste. Add whipped cream and serve in sherbet cups with whipped cream and a sliced berry on top.

A slice of ham spread with peanut butter and cooked in a little mix makes a change from the ordinary way of serving.

You do surely bar the door upon your own liberty if you deny your griefs to your friends.—Shakespear.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

Now that lettuce, even the head variety, is reasonable in price it should be used freely. In the green leaves of plants is a substance which promotes growth and is indespensable as food for children. A simple salad which all will like and one which is wholesome and good for the little people is head lettuce dressed with a sprinkling of chopped onion; the mild green or the southern onion is best. Add a teaspoonful of peanut butter to the French dressing which is made by using three tablespoonfuls of oil to one of lemon juice or mild vinegar, a few dashes of salt and cayenne, all well mixed with the peanut butter and poured over the lettuce. Chopped peanuts may be used for the older people who will promise to masticate the nuts well.

Barley Pudding.—Wash a half cupful of barley and put into a pudding dish with four cupfuls of milk, a third of a cupful of honey, a half teaspoonful of salt, a half teaspoonful of cinnamon and a tablespoonful of fat. Stir often during the first hour of cooking to keep the barley from settling.

Barley Fifteen Minutes Pudding.—Take a cupful of barley flour sifted well with a teaspoonful and a half of baking powder, a half teaspoonful of salt and mix with a half cupful of rich milk. Butter small cups and put into each a spoonful of the mixture, add a tablespoonful or two of any juicy fruit, like cherries, strawberries or any canned fruit desired. Cover with a spoonful of the batter, set the cups in a pan of boiling water, not enough to boil up into the cups, cover with a tight cover and boil fifteen minutes. Turn out of the cups and serve with cream and sugar or with a sauce made of the fruit juice.

Curry of Beef Heart.—Pour a pint of boiling water over a beef heart and let it stand ten minutes, drain and trim. Chop an onion and brown in two tablespoonfuls of the fat, then the heart cut in bits and rolled in seasoned flour. Add a half cupful of water and replenish as it boils away. When cooked add a tablespoonful of curry powder and salt and pepper to season.

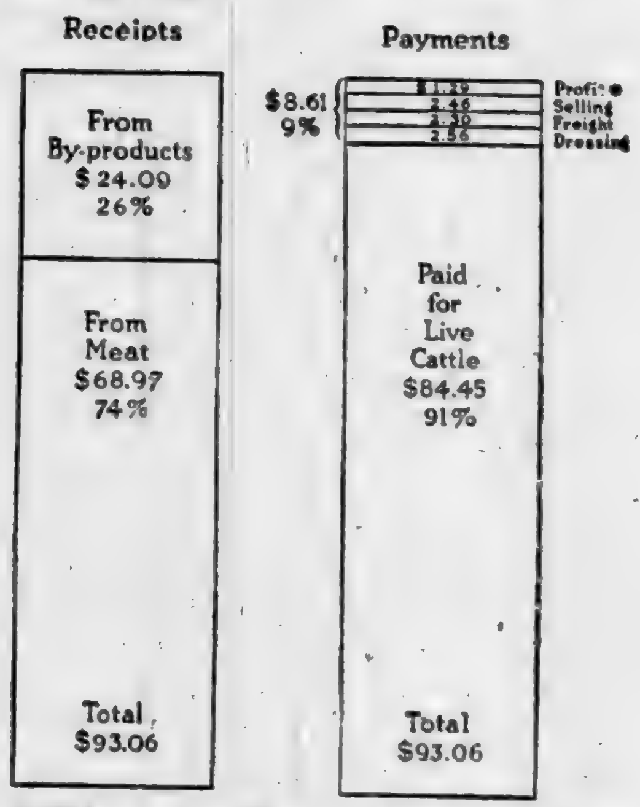
If Swift & Company Made No Profit

The cattle raiser would receive only ⅛ cent a pound more for his cattle

So small is Swift & Company's profit on any single transaction that if it were turned over to the cattle raisers of the country, they would receive only ⅛ cent a pound more for cattle than they receive now.

Swift & Company pays for live cattle about 90% of the amount received for dressed meat and by-products. The remaining 10% pays for packing-house expense, freight to market, operation of distributing houses and profit. Swift & Company's actual figures per head for 1917 on over two million cattle were as follows:



* This net profit of $1.29 per head averages ⅛ cent a pound live weight.

And out of this small net profit dividends must be paid to shareholders.

INVEST IN HUMANITY

By JOHN OLIVER LA GORCE
Associate Editor, National Geographic Magazine.

"SUFFER Little Children to come unto me," declared the compassionate Christ.

But never since He dwelt in flesh upon the earth have there been so many "Little Children" in need of compassion as now.

There are the "Little Children" who have gone to France for you and me and for Christendom and by going have given their all. Can you do less? Shall you keep from your boy or your neighbor's boy that which is symbolic of the Compassionate One by neglecting the call of the Red Cross Mother?

Then there are the uncounted "Little Children" of our allies who have fallen wounded and ill in defense of their home fires. Who but the Red Cross Mother can know the suffering, the anguish, of the shell-torn, thirst-stricken soldier who lies upon the ghostly bed of No Man's Land? Will you deny him the life-giving cup?

Think also of the "Little Children" of devastated lands. Some are "Little Children" in size and tender years. Others, alas, are mature in stature and age, but none the less "Little Children" in their helplessness—their abject need. Can we in our plenty withhold from them the bare bread of existence? Can we still our inner voice with the thought that others will bear our burden, when in our heart we must know that there are no others?

The Red Cross helps no one who does not need help a hundred times more than we need the money. Therefore, let us give, give until we feel it, give until it pinches. Then and only then we shall know that we have indeed offered the "Little Children" of the war the tender compassion of a nation.

While we are all busy trying to raise all that is possible this year, especially potatoes, it will be well for all to keep a close watch for the old hard shell bugs that are so numerous in many patches laying eggs. Monday, while ye editor was busy working his potatoes, he gathered nearly a pint of those fellows from a small patch. They do their work in a hurry. So beware, so prepare for those little fellows.

Post cards were first used in Austria. They became part of the country's postal service in 1869. They cost less than half a cent to send, and the first were limited to twenty-five words. They were taken up by England a year later. The first picture post card is said to have been sent in England in 1891. Some two or three years later, the first view cards made their appearance. Post cards came into use here in 1877. See the splendid line at The News office.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

Ft. Riley, Kan., May 21.

Dear Mother and All:

Received your letter this morning and was glad to hear from you. I am not working this afternoon, so I thought I would write you.

Zay sent me his picture the other day. I think he looks good. You ought to see me. I have gained about 7 pounds since I joined, and I certainly can tell it on myself.

I am just getting along fine with my cooking, and I like it pretty well so far. I baked twenty-six pies this morning for dinner. You should have a piece of it. It was all lemon pie. I did not get corn starch enough in them, so they were a little soft. I expect I could bake fifty pies in about two hours if I hurried, but I don't need to hurry.

My name was on the bulletin board yesterday to move, but something happened. So I have to stay here about three weeks more, and probably longer. Fifteen hundred men went out of here yesterday on their way to France. There was certainly some bunch of men, but we did not miss them one bit, for there are others to take their places.

They are building a large bunch of hospitals here for the wounded brought back from France. Some of them are completed, and they are mighty fine buildings. This is one of the main places in the United States.

We had moving pictures of France last night, showing different peoples fighting against the Huns. They give us good shows here. They are at the Y. M. C. A. Some people think the Y. M. C. A. isn't of much interest to the men; but if it were not for the association, the fellows would hardly know what to do. Everything is free to all, and it is always crowded.

From your son,

Ray Sailer.

Goes Over The Top

Concord township went over the top, DeKalb county went over the top, Indiana went over the top, the country went over the top. This is the answer to the Red Cross' appeal for $100,000,000. Credit is due those who labored so zealously to bring about this result and to those who contributed so liberally. Those who assisted in this great humanitarian work have reason to rejoice, and those who bore no part have reason for regret. Duty done is ennobling; duty shirked, debasing.

Saturday evening, when it was learned that Concord township had gone over the top, St. Joe became delirious with joy. Some noise, eh? There was no limit to the game of noise making—sounded as if a rollicking, jovial cyclone were sweeping through the streets. Joe Hull and F. R. Bowman performed prodigies on their automobile horns and Dr. Price's smile was so broad that his face seemed to sit crosswise on his shoulders instead of up and down. Did anyone blame them? Not so you could notice it! Because everybody else was foolishly happy.

Lest we forget, Concord's quota was $682. She raised $771.06, or $89 06 more than her share. There were a couple notorious slackers, but—

We should worry! Let's forget them in our thankfulness for the patriotic and sacrificing spirit shown by the others.

Hoo-RAY and hoo-RAH!

We went hell bent

Me---M'Gee

[Perhaps some of the readers of The News may have read the following powem in the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette. If they have, it's worth re-reading, It is based on facts. Walter McGee, a wealthy New Yorker, is doing his bit helping to load vessels for France. He trid to enlist in the army and in the navy, but was rejected because of his age.]

There's a chair in a club room corner
That's shaped to the shape of McGee—
An easy chair that's stuffed with hair,
With a place for a glass near the knee.
But he isn't there in that easy chair
(Which, of course, is plain to see).
"They do not serve who sit and wait,"
Said he. "That's me—McGee!"

Touch o' gray in his foretop.
"A soldier I'll be," said he—
"Plenty of room in the doughboys
For the likes o' me—McGee."
Touch o' gray in his foretop—
Creaky o' back and knee.
"Put on your duds," said the sawbones—
"Rejected—W. McGee!"

Touch o' gray in his foretop,
"Gee!" said W. McGee,
"Maybe, by gosh, there's a job awash
For the middle-aged likes o' me."
"Keep on your duds," growled the doctor—
Too old to go to sea.
Stand aside for a younger man—
Rejected—W. McGee!"

Creaked too much for the army—
Too old to go to sea.
Said he: "I swear there's a job somewhere
For the likes o' me—McGee!
I can wallop a dock to a frazzle,
As good as the next man—me!"
"Take off your coat!" snarled a foreman—
Accepted—W. McGee!"

There's a chair in a clubroom corner
That fitted him to a T;
There's an empty glass that the waiters pass
Which belonged to W. McGee.
Touch of gray in his foretop,
But easy o' back and knee.
"Hi, lend a hand!" yells the foreman, grand.
"Coming, boss! Me—McGee!"

BRAINSTORM

Parents often have the unpleasant duty forced upon them of punishing a child for the faults of its elders. Such is the case when the little one uses coarse language. He does not realize the import of what he says—but repeats what he hears; but he must be taught that this is wrong, and to do this correction is often necessary. Profanity ln public causes many a child to offend. Why not quit it?

The Hicksville News recently published an article in which it was stated that the saloon keepers of Ohio are in danger of a whiskey and beer famine. Oh, well! the barkeeps of the Buckeye state can "cheer up"—it might be worse: there is an abundance of that "rare, sparkling, carbonated food-drink" that is "gloriously welcome the moment you drink a bottle." It is recommended by a certain Sunday school teacher along with Smudge & Punk's cigarettes.

There is a marked tendency on the part of some people to come late to public gatherings, many coming as late as an hour after the time fixed for beginning. The fast time is, in part, responsible for this; but it was very noticeable even before the clocks were set ahead. It is due principally to carelessness or indifference, the latter being a species of selfishness: for the individual who is indifferent to the comfort of others and says, by his action, "Let 'em wait," is selfish. Out of regard for those who gather promptly, any public meeting should begin on time. Their convenience should be consulted before that of those who persist in straggling in behind time.

Judging by the way Uncle Sam is going about the war, as shown by the recent Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives, the firm of "Me und Gott" will soon dissolve partnership. The claims of "Me," here on earth, will be settled at the points of Yankee bayonets. The kind of compromise he may intimidate the devil into giving, hereafter, is none of our business: our interest ceases when Rev. Pershing and his band of missionaries in khaki have civilized the kaiser and taught him that "Gott" always has been a very silent partner. We don't care whether the devil gets the kaiser or the kaiser gets the devil. Hell will remain about the same—a place to steer clear of.

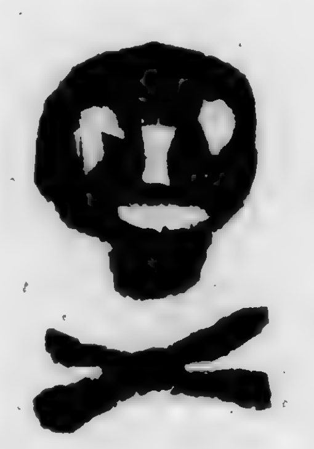
"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction," etc. (James i, 27). "If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them: 'Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled,' notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what profiteth it?" (James ii, 15-16). Those verses of Scripture may be read with profit by those Christians who gave little—and that grudgingly—to the Red Cross Their number is few, we are thankful to say. The starving and naked of Belgium and France are crying out to America, asking if our religion is of the "pure and undefiled" type. Our answer is that band of devoted, self-sacrificing men and women, the Red Cross, and money to back up that answer. A few say: "Depart in peace. Be ye warmed and filled." They are the ones that limit their charity to fervent prayers for the sick and afflicted. We have no criticism to offer on such praying, not being the judge; but the man who arises from his knees with his pocket book open and backs up his prayer with dollars is the one that ends his petition with the right kind of an "amen." There is no doubting his sincerity.

Slackers, Beware!

Auburn Star: "Frank Fanning, of west First street, while on business in Flint, Mich., this week, saw an I. W. W. man get rough handling from a large crowd of people. The man, a cigar make, who is a German, had $900 in the bank and would not give anything to the Red Cross, the Liberty loan or other patriotic movements and had said he would not give to them, but would give all his money to the I. W. W. He was given a coat of yellow paint and decorated with signs, a large log cha n was suspended from his neck and he was made to parade through the main business street of the city. Later, a rope was placed around him and he was thrown into the river and then taken back to the Red Cross headquarters. After receiving his ducking, he offered some money for the Red Cross, but it was not accepted. He was placed in jail."



The foregoing is printed as a warning to slackers—those who refuse to give to patriotic causes or those who give so little of their abundance as to be equally contemptible as those who refuse. Loyal citizens will, in time, get out of patience with these slackers—these men who value dollars above human life, some of whom lift up their voices in prayer for the afflicted; and when they do, a pressure will be put upon these puny-souled money grabbers—a pressure that will make a Red Cross solicitor become a welcome sight, so welcome that they will rush out to meet him and travel so fast that the Twentieth Century limited could not pass them, but would seem to be backing up.

By violence? No, violence is the weapon of the brute. Let them understand that they are not fit to have a place among loyal citizens—leave them alone with their dollars by refusing to fraternize with them until such time as they are willing to do their bit at home as loyally as the boys in khaki are doing theirs in France.

Curie will have a carload of binder twine here—the McCormick Standard, at 25c per pound—by the 1st of June. Give us your order at once.

Stackhouse Holds Farm

Auburn Star: Homer Stackhouse can stay on George W. Wade's farm in Spencer township, at least so far as Justice of the Peace Chester Hodge is concerned. The justice handed down this decision Saturday morning with the completion of the testimony in ouster proceedings and the arguments, the latter by Attorney P. V. Hoffman for the plaintiff and Attorney J. E. Pomeroy for the defendant.

Mr. Wade sought to force Stackhouse to vacate the farm, claiming the lease had expired. Mr. Stackhouse contended that the written lease of the previous year had been renewed for another year by a verbal contract, and he had witnesses to prove that Mr. Wade had confirmed this agreement. Mr. Stackhouse stated that he had put out his wheat crop last fall with the understanding that he was to remain on the farm another year, and that he proceeded with the spring sowing accordingly.

The court decided that Mr. Wade should pay all the court costs, including the fees of those witnesses for Mr. Stackhouse who were put on the stand. It is probable an appeal will be taken to circuit court.

A Word to Coal Buyers.

The Government through the fuel administration has advised everybody to lay in their coal as much as possible during the spring and summer months. The dealers also are urged to lay in their supply now.

The reason for this is, the government will need the coal as soon as cold weather sets in more than now and the car supply will be short, therefore they ask domestic consumers to buy now. This we are doing and we hope to continue doing. But we must have our coal bills paid promptly as most of this coal is paid for before we unload it and it takes money to buy coal.

We ask you to give this your attention us we will have to insist that all back bills are paid at once as coal is CASH with us. We have kept St. Joe in coal during the worst coal famine the country has ever known and we will try to keep on doing so, but we must have your co-operation, we mean PAY UP.

Let every citizen do his duty—We are doing ours.

HIS LAST SALUTE

Gen. Grant's Pathetic Farewell to the Brave Men Who Saved the Union.

THE magnanimity of General Grant's soul will live forever. Recently the question was put to His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons, "What is civilized warfare?" Immediately came the reply: "The war between the States." And then the aged prelate added "Suppose General Grant had compelled General Lee and the captive Southerners to have gone to Washington and built the Union a triumphal arch, what would the world have thought? And yet, that was exactly what happened to the Jews at the fall of Jerusalem which Titus' arch commemorates."

When in the spring of 1884 the veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic knew their beloved chieftain was mortally ill, the soldiers, one and all, felt it would be a great privilege if once again they might see Grant's face. They wished to pay him some homage of sympathy, since, "A rose to the living is more than countless wreaths to the dead."

This expression of love materialized in a plan to march by his home, on Memorial day, as General Grant was then in New York city. Early on the morning of May 30 these old soldiers were awake, burnishing accoutrements and medals of honor; unfurling old battle flags.

The quick ear of Grant heard commotion in the street. His voice that had cheered on the Boys in Blue at Vicksburg and Corinth, was now, due to his malady, unable to even ask for a cup of cold water, yet there are certain sounds which to a soldier need no interpretation; and quick as lightning Grant recognized the heavy moving step of columns falling in. He arose feebly and tottered toward the window. Notes of martial music floated out on the spring air—"Yankee Doodle," "America," "The Star-Spangled Banner," "Marching Through Georgia."

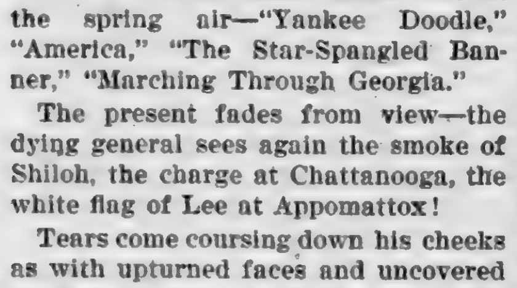
Statue of General Grant, in Lincoln Park, Chicago.

The present fades from view—the dying general sees again the smoke of Shiloh, the charge at Chattanooga, the white flag of Lee at Appomattox!

Tears come coursing down his cheeks as with upturned faces and uncovered heads he watches his old veterans file by.

Grant slowly lifts his hand in salute. It is his farewell forever to the army that had saved the Union.

All present realized that ere another Memorial day dawned Grant would be numbered among the nation's immortal dead.



ONWARD FOR HUMANITY.

Snow-white and rosy-fingered morn
  Speeding the hosts of night,
Heralds a new Memorial Day,
  Its cohorts armed for right!

Out of the dawning's mists come wraiths
  Of those who our standards made,
And find a nation, grim and set,
  Ready and unafraid.

Shame that the morns must come blood-red
  Shame that men still must die,
But the fight for peace is a world-old fight,
  And the price of freedom, high.

Then onward! No time now for slacking or tears,
  Till the cause of humanity's won,
Till oppression is sunk in the bottomless sea,
  And the need of all warfare is done.

Death's Terrible Toll.

At a moderate calculation there were sent into eternity during the Civil war more than a million of men, who left home in the prime of life and in health and in strength.

Millions of Men Involved.

When peace was declared the number of troops engaged had mounted to 2,772,408, of which the North furnished something over two million.

Our remembrance for one day of the service of the dead is valuable only if it inspires in us, the living, their spirit of devotion.

THIS MEMORIAL DAY

Nation's Tribute to Its Heroic Dead Has a New and Greater Significance.

By HERMAN HAGEDORN.
Of the Vigilantes.

IT IS fifty years now that the American people have every year laid aside their tools for a day to remember their noble dead.

This year they again lay aside their tools. This year they again gather roses and lilacs and apple blossoms and cherry blossoms and wander out to the cemeteries to decorate those old but never forgotten graves. This year they decorate them with apprehensive hearts.

This year, as in other years, they refresh in their memory the heroic deeds and sacrifices of their fathers; but they do something besides this. Recalling those deeds and those sacrifices in the bright light of new heroism and the shadow of new sacrifice, they dedicate themselves, their hands, their minds, and their spirits, to the new struggle on which their country is embarked.

They remember American men who died fighting on old battlefields, but they remember more vividly American women and children who died on the Lusitania.

They remember Gettysburg, and Chancellorsville, and Fredericksburg, and Chickamauga, and the Wilderness; but they remember more vividly what happened in Belgium, and France, and Serbia, and Armenia, and on the open seas.

They remember the Lost Cause and the Cause that was victorious. With high hearts they remember them, and with grateful hearts they remember the men who fought and died defending them, and the men who fought and lived and were great enough, for the sake of a united nation, at last to forgive and forget. They remember these things. But more vividly they remember that the nation which Washington created and Lincoln preserved is face to face with the most sinister foe that has yet threatened its liberty. They remember that this foe, with sly and insidious cunning, sought to confuse, corrupt, and hamstring the energy and moral will of the American people even while he sank their ships and slaughtered their fellow-citizens. They remember that by the force of his arms this foe has beaten down great Russia, subjugated Serbia, Roumania, Belgium, northern Italy and northern France.

They remember liberty, and they remember that where this foe has trod, liberty has died.

In the midst of a great war, the American people give a day to their heroic dead. They honor them in speeches and parades. They honor them with flowers and music. They are doing them no more than justice when they so honor them.

But they honor them best if with firm will and fearless heart they resolve that humanity's foe shall die; but that, by the strength, the courage, the endurance, the spirit of devotion and sacrifice not only of the men in khaki or in blue in France and Flanders and on the sea, but of the fathers and mothers and wives, the sisters, the sweethearts, the brothers, who work and wait at home in the Great Republic of the West, Democracy shall triumph, Right shall triumph, and Liberty shall live, bringing to the world a peace that shall endure, and to men and women everywhere a happiness that shall have foundations.

Will Be With Us Many Years.

Although their ranks are steadily, and even rapidly, diminishing, the old soldiers have many a march yet to make before the last of them departs for that bourne whence there is no return.

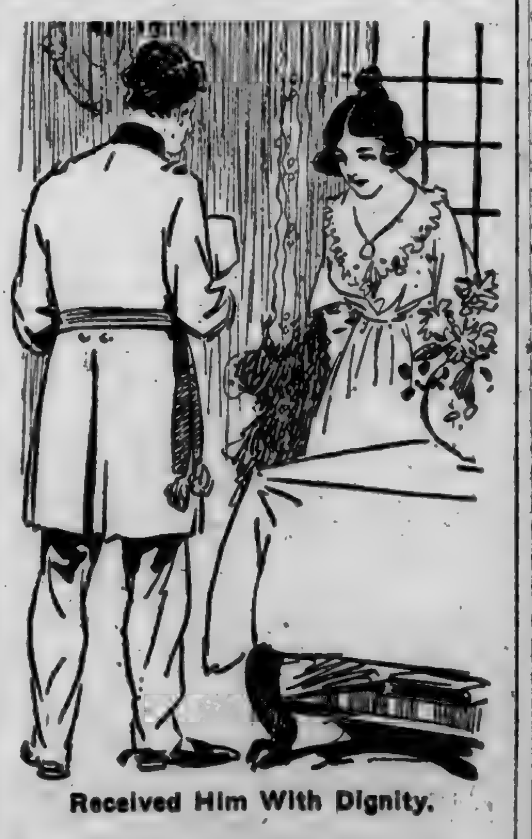
TWO ENEMIES MADE ONE

A Romance of Our Civil War

THE death of Maj. Cassius E. Gillette in Philadelphia recalled to the Record of that city an interesting and romantic incident in the life of his soldier father-in-law, the noted General Hamilton of Columbus, Ohio. In the Civil war General Hamilton commanded a brigade in Sherman's army, being at the time one of the youngest brigadiers in the service. His command was a part of the host which, under Sherman, made the famous march to the sea.

After the army had passed through Georgia its route was deflected northward with the object of moving through the Carolinas. In North Carolina during a halt at a certain point in that state, General Hamilton was sent for by a young southern lady, the daughter of a former governor of the state, deceased, a strikingly handsome young woman and a belle. The general, whose youthful, soldierly figure was well calculated to attract the attention of the fair sex, supposed he was summoned by the young woman to receive a plea for the protection of her property, as it appeared she had been left an orphan in the possession of several large plantations, and repaired without delay to her residence, a stately southern mansion with a beautiful lawn and many fine old trees.

She received him with the dignity and ceremony befitting his rank, and the general saw he was in the presence of a beautiful brunette with an abundance of fire and spirit in her make-up. He expected to hear reproaches, but was agreeably surprised to find himself mistaken. The conversation at once proceeded on her part on a line direct.

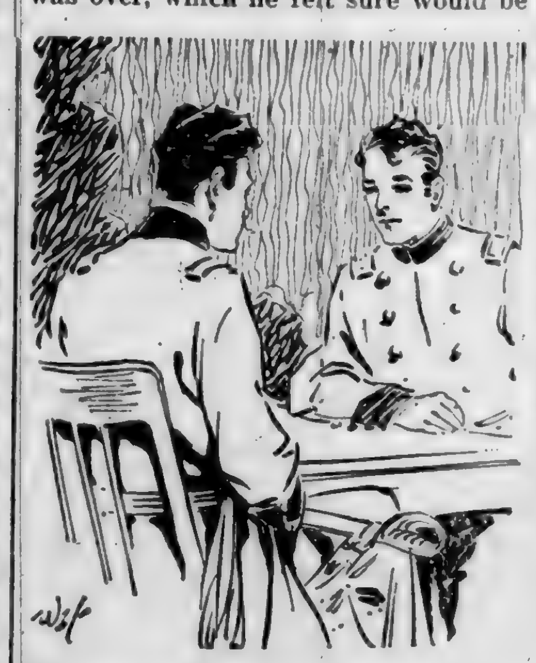


Received Him With Dignity.

"General," she said with a simple candor which at once enlisted his interest and sympathy, "all our young men, the flower of the South, have gone to the front and been killed in battle with your armies. None is left to whom we can turn, and I have sent for you to ask you what you intend to do for us women who have been left without the hope of finding mates among our own people. There are none left whom I, speaking for myself, would care to marry. Now, what are you going to do for us?"

She looked at the general, her dark eyes seeming, as he afterward said, to be seeking to read his soul. After a short silence she came to the point direct by proposing that he should marry her. She explained that she owned large landed properties but, the slaves having been set free, she could not obtain the labor to till her lands. She needed a man to lean upon.

General Hamilton, somewhat taken aback by a proposal he had not reckoned upon, rose to the necessity of the occasion, however, and with all the gallantry and sympathy inherent in an honorable man, explained to her that there was a little woman left behind in Ohio to whom his heart was pledged and that he expected the wedding bells to ring for them when the cruel war was over, which he felt sure would be very soon. But he had an idea he could be of service to her, nevertheless. He informed her that there was a young colonel in his command, handsome, brave and the soul of honor, who, so far as he knew, had no ties, and if she were agreeable he would take pleasure in bringing him to her house and introducing him. The young lady signified her willingness. The general went back to headquarters, sent for the young officer and after a private conversation with him they set out for the young lady's residence. There they were received with proverbial Southern courtesy and dignity, and after the introduction and the interchange of compliments the general withdrew.



The General Explained Matters to the Young Officer.

"And, do you know," said General Hamilton in after years, "that in the closing days of the war those two 'enemies' were happily married and after the colonel was mustered out he settled there in the home of his bride and the last I heard of them they had seven children and everybody seemed to be merry and joyous on 'the old plantation.'"

Make no mistake about the place which this Decoration day of 1918 will hold in the history of the greatest republic of all time. It is one of the red-letter days in the most tremendous chapter of the world life of the American people.

INCREASE IN WESTERN CANADA LAND VALUES

But Forty and Fifty Bushels of Wheat to the Acre.

During the past year there has been a greater demand for farm lands in Western Canada than for a number of years past. The demand is for good farm lands improved or unimproved. And at an increase of from ten to fifteen dollars an acre more than the same lands could be had for a couple of years ago.

The rise in the price of every kind of produce grown on these Western lands, in some cases to double and in others to treble the price prevailing before 1914, have attracted and are attracting in ever-increasing proportions the men who are anxious to invest their money, and apply their energies in the production of wheat for which the allied nations are calling with voices which grow louder and more anxious as the months roll on, and the end of the war still seems distant. Beef, and more especially bacon, are required in ever greater quantities, and the price of all these things has soared, until it is not a question of what shall we produce, but how much can we produce. Even should this world calamity be brought to a close in six months from now, it will be years before normal pre-war prices prevail, and meantime self-interest if not patriotism is turning the minds of thousands back to the land. The inevitable consequence has been the rise in value of land, especially wheat land.

The Calgary Herald, commenting on these conditions says:

"From inquiries made from leading dealers in farming and ranching properties, and from the information gathered in other ways, it is known that the value of all land—wheat land, mixed farming properties and even good grazing land—has risen in the last two years 40 per cent. Wheat lands in some districts have practically doubled in price. One dealer in farm lands recently sold three sections for $70 an acre, one extra good quarter went as high as $90, and another brought $100. These are, of course, large prices, but that they will be equaled or even surpassed in the near future is beyond question. There is a feature about this rush to the land from which the most solid hope can be drawn for the success of the movement. The proper tillage of land, to produce large crops in a climate like ours is now understood and practiced as it never was in the early days of the province. It would seem too that with the increase of land under cultivation, the seasons are changing and the rainfall becoming greater and more regular.

"Crops are being harvested, especially in Southern Alberta, which would have seemed impossible to the old-time farmer, with his old-fashioned ideas of breaking and seeding. And at the price now set by the government for wheat and which possibly may be increased during the coming season, the return to the practical skilled agriculturist must necessarily be very large.

"What matters $10 or even $20 an acre extra on wheat land when a return as high as 50 bushels and even more may be taken from every acre sown? With hogs bringing $20 a hundred pounds; beef on the hoof at $12, and mutton $16, while wool under the new government arranged system of handling and sale brings 65 cents a pound (and these values cannot fall to any great extent for some years) the demand for land will continue and values increase in a corresponding degree.

"There has never been in the history of Canada a time so favorable for the farmer as the present; self-interest, the inspiration of patriotic feeling, the aid freely extended by the government, who are permitting the import of certain agricultural implements free, all these tend to still further raise the price of Alberta land."—Advertisement.

Bridget Had Little Trouble in Explaining Why She Had Used Poker on Her Husband.

Bridget was before the magistrate upon the charge of beating her husband, who stood near the desk with his head bound up in a mass of bandages and surrounded by an odorous cloud of iodine, indicating that he had undergone extensive treatment at the hospital. The magistrate called the wife to the bar of justice.

"Now, madam," he said, "can you explain to me why you struck your husband over the head with the poker?"

Bridget laid her hand on the bar and leaning far over so she could impress her answer upon the attentive officer of the law, replied:

"Shure, I hit him with the poker, your honor, because at that moment I couldn't lay my hands on the broomstick that I most generally uses."

How to Win a Seat.

Here is a tip for Pittsburgh straphangers on how to win a seat. It was tried with success recently on a Broadway car by a woman who looked tired but couldn't induce any of the men sitters to give her a seat. She looked around pleadingly, but all those who had seats were absorbed in their newspapers. The car had gone a block or two when suddenly a voice was heard singing "The Star-Spangled Banner." It was the woman who had just entered the car. Every one arose. Then the woman edged into a seat that had been occupied by one of the men. When the woman was seated the song suddenly ended.—New York Sun.

Part of Her Costume.

Bessie came running to her grandmother holding a dry, pressed leaf, obviously the relic of a day long gone by. "I found it in the big Bible, grandma," she said. "Do you 'spose it belonged to Eve?"—Boston Transcript.

Indiana Brevities

Indianapolis.—An intensive campaign throughout Indiana counties to provide a better distribution of labor is to be started at once, according to an announcement from the state council of defense. Ross W. Lockridge, employment and welfare director at the Fort Wayne knitting mills, Fort Wayne, has been named by the federal government to co-operate with W. C. DeMiller, the federal labor director for Indiana, in such a plan. Five general employment bureaus, acting under authority from the government, are now established in Indiana, in the larger cities, and these will be used as centers for a more complete distribution of war labor. Mr. Lockridge was nominated to represent the state in the matter some time ago by the state council of defense and his appointment has just ben confirmed by the federal government.

Lafayette.—Indiana's apple crop will be 1,000,000 bushels above that of last year, or a total of 6,750,000 bushels, but the peach crop will be a total failure, due to the severe weather of last winter, which killed most of the trees, according to an estimate made by H. H. Swain, secretary of the Indiana Horticultural society, who is co-operating with the extension department of Purdue university. His estimates are based on reports from 116 fruit growers all over the state. Present condition of the fruit indicates an almost normal crop of cherries, a normal crop of plums, better than average crop of strawberries, average crop of grapes and from a half to two-thirds crop of raspberries and blackberries.

Decatur.—A report filed in Adams county by the state board of accounts shows a remarkable situation and tells how a lot of farmers in that county have been required to pay excess ditch assessments. It also says that Phil L. Macklin, county surveyor, owes Adams county and the property owners $29,225.62, of which sum $14,691.50 is due property owners for overcollection on ditch assessments, and $14,444.12 is unitemized claims which the report says were not legally allowed. It also asserts that the bond of Macklin for his first term is faulty, and declares he has not made reports of money handled by him.

Lafayette.—Girls and boys between sixteen and twenty years of age, adjudged winners in the live stock judging contests at the Indiana state fair in September, will receive a $200 trophy, $175 in two scholarships in the Purdue college of agriculture, $75 in cash prizes, and four silver cups. The $200 trophy will go to the team of three boys or girls, representing a county, township, city or high school, held to be the best judges of live stock. The $175 in Purdue scholarships will be divided into one of $100 and the other of $75. The cash prizes will be divided, $20, $15, $12.50, $10, $7.50, and two of $5 each.

Indianapolis.—Alexander Cavins and W. W. Spencer, Republican and Democratic members of the committee appointed by the governor to interpret and compile the election laws for the coming election, appeared at the governor's office to confer on this year's compilation and interpretation of the laws. The material is in shape, the men said, for the approval of the governor and the two state committees. It will be issued later as pamphlets to political workers throughout the state.

Winchester.—The building committee for the proposed hospital for this county has been notified by the state council of defense that the erection of the hospital should be postponed until the close of the war. A site for the building and $10,000 was given by Mrs. W. E. Miller, and the county commissioners and the county council had made arrangements to build this year. Plans and specifications have been submitted and accepted.

Michigan City.—Numerous residents of this city who were required by the federal government to ask for permits to go within certain zones are preparing to avail themselves at the first opportunity of the new federal law, which permits them to complete their naturalization, providing they pass a satisfactory examination. Mayor Fred C. Miller says he wil lavail himself of the new law.

Brazil.—Practically every farmer called to serve on the jury in the case of the state vs. Dr. J. W. Vansandt of Carbon, charged with the murder of Grover Jackson, begged to be excused from duty because of farm labor and the limited time for planting of corn. Judge J. M. Rawley excused the farmers.

Hammond.—Oscar Landmesser, the itinerant evangelist, who shot up the Hammond city court room October 10, killing Fred Bayne, his rival in love, and wounding Mrs. Myrtle Pfeffer, a policewoman, was found guilty of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Hammond.—Because there are no empty houses in Hammond, 5,000 employees of the Standard Steel Car company, a war munition manufacturing concern here, are to be housed in flats and dwellings on the South and West sides of Chicago. Co-operation from the government in the way of free transportation to and from the city daily has been obtained through the railroad administration. Special trains for workingmen are operated over the Nickel Plate and Michigan Central lines. The Standard company also is operating 40 motor busses to bring men in and out of Hammond

Washington, D. C.—An additional 1,000 men, newly drafted into the army, will begin reporting at Indianapolis June 15 for attendance in the war school for special mechanical training. About 500 soldiers already are attending the Inidanapolis vocational schools. It is planned to house the 1,000 men in the Indiana State School for the Deaf and to turn buildings at the Indiana state fair grounds into workshops. The deaf school will be in vacation by the time the men report. The 500 soldiers now housed at the Metropole hotel and attending the efficiency school in gunsmithing and motor mechanics held in the vocational school buildings will complete their two-months' course by June 15, at which time they will be replaced by another 500 men. This number will be in addition to the 1,000 men to be sent to motor mechanics' shops at the fair ground, so that the enrollment of the Indianapolis war school will aggregate 1,500.

Petersburg.—Every coal mine along the Evansville & Indianapolis railroad recently resumed operation, after having been idle for eight weeks. A dispute over freight rates, which caused the shutdown, recently was settled by the federal government. Reopening of the mines will mean an increase of about 25,000 tons of coal a week in Indiana. The various shafts employ a total of about 1,000 men. Cars now are being supplied by the railroad. New mines are being opened by the Atlas company just north of this city. Seven machines will be used in taking out the fuel and approximately 350 men will be employed in the work. The Petersburg Business Men's association has been asked to build 50 new houses to accommodate the increase in workmen. Hundreds of miners who left here when the mines along the Evansville & Indianapolis railroad closed down, are returning.

Gary.—The assessed valuation of Gary and adjacent districts in Calumet township, for 1918 is shown at $32,648,365, an increase of $2,053,070 over last year. John McFadden, township assessor, announces that the United States Steel corporation, Lake county's largest taxpayer, will pay nearly half of Gary's taxes. Excluding the steel corporation's improvements, 822 new buildings have been added to the tax duplicate since last year. Although Gary's population is reckoned between 55,000 and 75,000, there are but 6,342 taxpayers. The steel corporation is the largest landowner in the city. Rail valuation is large because of the big clearing yards of the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern railway, subsidiary of the steel corporation.

Gary.—An investigation by an official of the bureau of industrial housing and transportation of the department of labor into traction affairs of Gary and the Calumet region is believed to foreshadow a possible commandeering of local transportation facilities by the federal government. The new inquiry follows one made recently when the government made a preliminary survey into housing conditions of workers making munitions for the war. All regional traction lines have been unable to respond to the demand made on them for service. Conditions, it is said, are equally bad in Gary, Hammond, Indiana Harbor and East Chicago.

Hammond.—Indiana railroads are employing women in large number in their shops as crossing watchmen, section hands and in roundhouses. The Pan Handle at Logansport, employs them as wipers, grease knockers and airbrake repairers. In Lafayette the Monon employs them at its roundhouses to haul cinders and junk. Indiana is becoming so depleted of young men that women are serving as taxi drivers, and in a score of other occupations formerly filled almost exclusively by men.

Greenfield.—There is a war activity in progress in this county for the benefit of the Hancock county chapter of the American Red Cross that gives promise of being the most popular and effective local movement in Indiana. Its purpose is to establish a monthly income into the local Red Cross treasury to buy knitting yarn and material for hospital supplies. The plan is proving so successful that other counties are asking to use it.

Fort Wayne.—For the purpose of forming an organization to keep tab on men placed in deferred classes on their claims as farmers and to see that they produce results, a meeting was held here. All those who fail to meet the requirements will be placed in class 1. There are between 800 and 900 in this class in Allen county, all of whom were ordered by the county conscription board to attend the meeting.

Owensville.—Not in a long time has the employment of old men for farm labor been so general in this part of Gibson county. The military draft law has taken away many young farm laborers and their places are being filled by old men, who could not have received employment a few years ago under any circumstances. The other day two men more than sixty years old, who were looking for farm work, got places on farms without any difficulty.

Indianapolis.— Announcement has been made by the United States food administration that the Independent Order of Odd Fellows has called on the members of their local and subordinate lodges in Indiana to abstain from the use of wheat products until after the next harvest. The action, according to a statement made by Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, was in recognition of the situation described by the federal food administrator in April, when the seriousness of the world's wheat supply was presented as argument for greater restrictions

WHY UNCLE SAM CHOSE ROCKFORD.

"Dry Rockford, Ill., has the reputation of buying and consuming more groceries than any other city of like population in the United States," says Frank S. Regan. "When we quit drinking we all went to eating.

"Stores that used to rent for $50 per month now rent in best locations for $200 to $300 per month.

"Twenty thousand people came to Rockford before the army camp came here and they came from all over the country. The fact Rockford was dry was very often stated as the reason they came. Wet cities in this part of the state saw the handwriting on the wall and went dry themselves. The Nelson hotel which had a bar and was sore because some $16,000 revenue was cut off when we voted prohibition, instead of going 'busted' went 'full' of guests, saw several new hotels go up in Rockford and is now building a fireproof addition to double its capacity. Plans are being drawn for other and better hotels than all of them. Grocery stores had thousands of dollars on their books as bad debts and dead-beat accounts galore when we had saloons. Now they are selling for cash instead of credit and one grocery collected $11,000 worth of dead-beat accounts out of a total of $13,000 without the assistance of an attorney. Money rolled into the banks until they built a nice new bank building to house a brand-new national bank, and so it goes.

"Saloonkeepers have all settled down in other lines of business and are prospering in their new fields or are living off the increase of real estate values and rents.

"Every man and woman in America who has a son in Camp Grant is more than pleased their son is located in a dry town.

"And so is your Uncle Sam."

THE NATION PAYS THE PRICE.

I.

He was twenty-one; was 5 feet 11 inches tall; weighed 165; had scarcely known a sick day; was morally clean, physically perfect; did not know the taste of intoxicating liquors; was the joy of his mother, the hope of his father, the ideal of his friends.

He volunteered.

Uncle Sam received him with open arms and put him in the front line of battle. Today he fills an unknown grave.

II.

He was twenty-one; was 5 feet 11 inches; weighed 165; was morally unclean; was physically weak; was the habitue of the saloon; drank every day and was often drunk; was the sorrow of his parents; had no real friends.

He was drafted.

Uncle Sam marked his unsteady eye, depraved face, whisky breath, cigarette fingers, unsteady heart, the germs of immoral disease; said, "Stand aside, you are unfit."

And he is left at home to help breed another generation.—J. K. S. in American Issue.

A STORY WITH A MORAL FOR AMERICA.

Mr. Edwards, M. P., recently stated at an assembly of the Scottish Temperance league, Glasgow, that at a recruiting meeting he was approached by a young man, who asked whether government would look after the wives and children of those who enlisted? He was assured that government would. He enlisted, and was passed on in due course to the trenches, where, after months of good service, he was wounded, and then returned home on furlough. On his way back to the front he called at the House of Commons and asked for Mr. Edwards. "He refused to shake hands with me," said that gentleman, "and asked: 'What have you done for our homes? I left a happy home—I came back to find my wife a drunkard, my children neglected, my home broken up. You expect us to put our bodies between you and your enemies, but you will not put even a trench between the drink enemy and our homes.'"

PERILS OF BEER DRINKING.

It is difficult to find a beer drinker forty years of age with a normal liver, kidneys or heart. These vital organs, from the excessive burden that is thrown upon them, wear out prematurely. The beer drinker may have an abundance of flesh, but it is of inferior quality. Surgeons do not care to operate upon him, because the chances of recovery are minimized.

"Should the beer drinker be stricken down with pneumonia or some other febrile disease that taxes the heart and kidneys, he would have but three chances out of ten to make a recovery.—Dr. D. H. Kress in the Sunday School Times.

NO LOSS IN REVENUE.

The loss of liquor revenue by the enactment of a prohibition law by Newfoundland, making illegal the importation and sale of intoxicating liquor after December 31, 1916, has not resulted in a decrease in the revenues of that country. The revenue for the calendar year 1917, amounting to $4,442,476, was greater by $25,807 than that for 1916, when liquors were still being imported.

A Word of Precaution.

JUST wherein lies the reason for the use of vegetable preparations for infants and children?

Why are any but vegetable preparations unsafe for infants and children?

Why are Syrups, Cordials and Drops condemned by all Physicians and most laymen?

Why has the Government placed a ban on all preparations containing, among other poisonous drugs, Opium in its variously prepared forms and pleasing tastes, and under its innumerable names?

These are questions that every Mother will do well to inquire about.

Any Physician will recommend the keeping of Fletcher's Castoria in the house for the common ailments of infants and children.

The Ways of Ladies.

"A feller in town," related a neighbor who had been over to Tumlinville, "was cranking up a lady's Ford car and got kicked."

"That's the way with ladies," commented Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "Prob'ly the feller was winding it up as fast as he could but, of course, that didn't make no difference to the lady. Tuther day when my wife found me asleep on a bench in the shade of the smokehouse she landed on me like a catamount and threatened to fling b'ilin' water on me, just b'cuz I hadn't done something or nuther that she'd told me to do. Aw, them confounded ladies is all alike—they think all men are their stepsons."—Kansas City Star.

The Wail of the Injured.

Two brothers, Angus and Duncan, who worked a small farm, had the misfortune to lose by death their sister, who was their housekeeper. They tried to do the housework themselves for a time, but it wasn't a success. So one day Angus, the elder, said to his brother: "Duncan, we'll need to look aboot an' see if ye canna get a wife."

"Na, na," replied Duncan; "you are the oldest, Angus, an' the farm belongs to you."

"But you are likely to live longest, Duncan," continued Angus, "so you'd better be the ane to tak' a wife."

"Oh, ay!" said Duncan resignedly; "it's aye the same way here; whenever there's any thankless job to be done it's me that has to do it."

M. T. Bishop in Accident

At noon Monday, M. T. Bishop met with an accident which will confine him to the house for some time. With his grandson, Russell Hathaway, he was returning from the farm in a buggy. Just west of the Bishop home, George Baker, in an automobile, came down the hill from Main street and swung into the road to pass them. Mr. Bishop, who was driving, was taken by surprise and did not have a tight line on his horse, which shied to the right and rolled down the steep embankment at the south side of the road by the Buckingham ice house, dragging down the buggy and its occupants. The decline is very steep and the distance down about 10 feet.

Mr. Bishop was quite badly injured, his right collar bone being broken and the right side of his chest and body badly bruised. He was carried to his home, a few rods away, in an unconscious condition, and his injuries attended to by Drs. Sheffer and Shook. His bruised side is very painful, so much so that he is unable to move about, and he was unable to breathe freely for the first thirty-six hours. He is able to sit in an eary chair, propped up by pillows, and is as cheerful as the circumstances will permit him to be.

The accident is due, in part, to the fact that Baker did not sound his horn and Mr. Bishop was taken unawares.

W. S. S. Notes.

The Great War Savings Stamp drive is on for this week. Solicitors have been appointed and every home will be visited. This is not a Thrift Stamp sale but a War Saving Stamp Campaign and orders will be taken for the War Saving Stamps only.

Concord Township's quota for this week is $2,412.50 or $2.50 per Capita.

Some may not be able to buy their quota so there must be many others who must do much more than this.

A complete record will be kept of each family and will be given into the hands of the County Council of Defense for investigation of those who are able and do not buy.

Our boys have gone to fight in defense of our country and they must be equipped, clothed and fed even if our wealth has to be conscripted to do this.

Our Uncle Samuel must have the money and if he can not get it through our voluntary offering then he will get it by other means.

America expects everv man to do his duty.

J. C. Coons,
Publicity Chairman.
Joseph Hull, Chairman of Council of Defense.

Take the poultry house, for instance. The question whether or not you are going to have eggs next winter depends upon the condition of the chicken coop. If you don't get eggs, don't blame the hens. They will lay if you give them half a chance. But they can't lay in a cold, drafty shed. It takes all your feed to keep them warm. The time to build is right now before prices go any higher. Come in and talk over the building problem with us.

War Savings Stamps
Thrift Stamp Week
May 27th to June 3rd

Every mother who practices Thrift in her every-day living is helping the nation to Victory. By doing without those things not needed for simple living she is releasing labor and materials now urgently needed for supplying our soldiers.

Every loyal American mother should set an example of real patriotism for her children by regularly practicing the helpful habit of Thrift, by teaching the children to save, and to invest their savings in W. S. S.

War Savings Stamps cost $4.16 in May, $4.17 in June, etc., and will be worth $5.00 each on January 1st, 1923. U. S. Thrift Stamps cost 25c and are exchangeable for W. S. S.

Tell the postman to deliver War Savings Stamps regularly. It's the new, easy way to save. He will know that yours is a family of "true-blue" Americans.

The Junior Red Cross

The Spencerville Junior Red Cross has undertaken the making of 100 property bags, which will be sent to the hospital at Camp Meade, Md. They are being made at the request of Dr. Carey, who formerly resided here and who is stationed at that place.

Within the past school year, the Spencerville school was organized as a Junior Red Cross, the organization becoming effective when money aggregating 25c for each pupil was secured or a pledge made to do some systematic Red Cross work. A fund of $100 has been raised, which includes $22 made by the negro minstrels at the County Fair and $57 from the two plays, "Captain Anne of the Red Cross" and "Somewhere in France." They have already contributed the following: Pajama suits, 24; bed shirts, 6; complete layettes for Belgian relief work, 12.

Memorial day was observed at Spencerville on Sunday with appropriate services, all of which were well attended. Rev. Mumma delivered the memorial sermon at the Lutheran church in the morning. In the afternoon, the people reassembled and proceeded to White City cemetery. Here, wreaths of flowers were placed upon the graves of forty-two old soldiers. This was done by forty-two boys and girls, who were preceded about the cemetery by the drum corps. Following was the program:

Music.—"Song of the Flag."
Prayer.—Rev. Glenn Bryan.
Recitation.—Esther Henderson.
" Harold Vallieu.
" Gaylon Markle.
Song.—"America."
Address.—Rev. Glenn Bryan.
Song.—"Tenting on the Old Camp Ground."
Benediction.—Rev. A. K. Mumma.

One couple was Ray Wasson, second son of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Wasson, and Miss Gladys, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Watson, west of town; the other, Glenn Shaffer, of Marion, whose parents reside at Syracuse, and Miss Delphia, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilmot Coburn, of Coburntown. The former will stay for a while at the home of the bride's parents, and the latter will make their home at Marion, where the groom has employment.

Fined $1.00 and Costs

Auburn Star: Still another criminal case, developed by the whisky party at Spencerville last January, made its public appearance Monday, when Ralph Baker was summoned before Judge Link. Baker was implicated by the testimony of the others in the affair. He was charged with petit larceny in an indictment returned by the grand jury at the May term of court. He entered a plea of guilty upon arraignment. Judge Link fined Baker $1 and costs, a total of $11, and sentenced him to the state penal farm for sixty days. However, the latter sentence waf suspended. Baker paid the fine and costs and was released. Baker was among those who went along to the box car on the Wabash side track that eventful night and helped to carry away liquor that was in transit.

ZONE SYSTEM FOR ARMY'S PURCHASES

TERRITORY HAS BEEN ALLOTTED TO EACH OF THIRTEEN GENERAL SUPPLY DEPOTS.

ORDNANCE EQUIPMENT READY

Every Soldier Leaving for France Has Been Fully Outfitted—American Merchants Take Over the Interests of German Fur Men.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—A zone system for the apportionment of purchases throughout the United States and to facilitate distribution has been established by the quartermaster department. Territory has been allotted to each of 13 general supply depots. The general supply depot quartermasters are charged with the duty of ascertaining the manufacturing possibilities of their zones. On the basis of reports along this line forwarded to the acting quartermaster general, food and equipment for troops at the different camps will be purchased within the zone in which the camp is located.

Formerly nearly all of a particular class of supplies was purchased through a single general supply depot. Other articles were obtained through other supply depots. Manufacturers in sections distant from the particular supply depot buying their goods were at a disadvantage, and were unable to compete with rivals nearer the point. Under the new system most classes of supplies will be purchased through each of the 13 depots, and manufacturers will be able to transact their business through the depots nearest them.

Each general supply depot quartermaster besides ascertaining production facilities within his zone is instructed to recommend to the quartermaster general's office the employment of such producers as are in his judgment qualified to fulfill contracts. Each depot is expected to keep informed as to market conditions and spot goods located in that zone, and when shortages occur submit recommendations for purchase of articles which may be obtained within the zone.

Purchases are to be made after advertisement by open competitive bidding when time will permit. In emergency cases competition is desired whenever possible. The record of bids received and awards made will be open to public inspection.

The army ordnance department has thus far met every demand imposed by the new program for overseas shipment of American troops, according to a statement by the department. Despite the great acceleration in the sending of American forces to France, no infantryman goes aboard ship without a United States model 1917 rifle (modified Enfield), bayonet, belt, haversack, pack carrier, bandoleers, bayonet scabbard, and full mess equipment.

Tonnage is today a limiting factor in the shipment of ordnance material overseas, especially because of the present necessity of increasing the transport of infantry regiments.

Sufficient supplies of artillery—French 75-millimeters and 155-millimeters and American heavy railway artillery—are already in France to meet the present demand. Sufficient machine guns are also immediately available for American forces in France.

A Canadian order in council provides that no person, with the exception of manufacturers of flour, bakers, confectioners, wholesale or retail dealers, or persons living at a greater distance than two miles from a licensed dealer, shall hold or have in his possession or under his control more flour, made wholly or in part from wheat, than is sufficient for his ordinary requirements for a period not exceeding 15 days.

Anyone living at a distance greater than two miles and less than five miles from a licensed dealer may hold or control flour made wholly or in part from wheat up to an amount sufficient for his ordinary requirements for a period not exceeding 30 days. Anyone living more than five and less than ten miles from a licensed dealer may have sufficient for his ordinary requirements up to 60 days, while a person living more than ten miles from such a dealer may have sufficient for his ordinary requirements for a period up to 120 days.

Any wholesale or any retail dealer licensed by the Canadian food board may not hold flour made wholly or in part from wheat in excess of a quantity sufficient for his ordinary trade requirements for a period exceeding 60 days.

The regulation regarding sugar parallels this save in the last clause. Manufacturers, wholesalers, or retailers may not have more sugar than is required for a period exceeding 45 days.

The Swiss federal government has by decree fixed the maximum price at which farmers may sell cattle for slaughter as well as the prices at which various qualities of butchers' meat may be retailed. Farmers may demand no more than 23 cents per pound for first-class fat beef cattle. The price applies to cattle sold on the farm. If sold in a city or other distant market cost of transportation may be added.

With the exception of sirloin and fillet cuts, retailers may ask no more than 40 cents per pound for beef.

Arrangements are being completed by which the interests of German fur men, amounting to several millions of dollars, will be purchased by American merchants and the money thus paid turned into the treasury.

Before the war broke in Europe, according to a statement issued by the alien property custodian, the trade of American furriers was practically nothing but a collecting and shipping agency for the Germans. Almost every pelt taken by American trappers went to Leipzig before it could be sold. Although London was the world's market, three-quarters of the fur shipped to London from America, Russia, and even China, went to Leipzig for dressing and dyeing.

The Leipzig dressers and dyers were recognized as the best in the world. Each year after the fur was prepared and German merchants had fixed the price, Americans were allowed to purchase as much as three-fifths of the year's output for manufacture into garments, but in so doing they were forced to pay the original cost, expense of dressing and dyeing, a big profit to the Germans, and a 30 per cent duty, before the furs were returned to America.

The war deprived Germany of the chance to purchase fur in London, and limited the supply from America—now also entirely cut off.

According to the Leipzig correspondent of a Christiania newspaper, the Leipzig spring fair showed exhibits of many substitutes and surrogates which have been placed on the market in Germany. Descriptions of some of these have been received by the United States chamber of commerce:

A surrogate for pepper is offered for sale which, judged only by its appearance, seems almost the same as real pepper. The color, odor and taste have been surprisingly well imitated.

A tea is shown to which the name of "German tea" has been given. It is prepared from any one or a combination of a great variety of plants, from strawberry leaves to linden blossoms. It is said to taste very much like genuine tea, but even a half dozen cups will not produce the stimulation caused by a single cup of real tea.

There are any number of surrogates for marmalades. Most of them are prepared from garden vegetables instead of from fruits, with a minimum amount of sugar.

Substitute soap is offered for sale, which is said to have been prepared from the oil in berries and from pumice stone. It lacks, however, the one main characteristic of soap, that of working up into a rich, creamy lather; otherwise it is very good. Substitutes are also to be had for laundry blueing.

Substitute bicycle tires are sometimes made of two concentric iron rings with small springs between them. They are very serviceable on asphalt pavements, but are not exactly as noiseless nor as easy riding as genuine rubber tires.

A large number of articles offered for sale had been prepared largely or entirely from paper—coarse working clothes for men and women, blouses, aprons, and other fabrics. There were paper belts which seemed capable of driving heavy loads.

Many artificial and substitute leathers were noticed. Brass and copper articles were not seen, and attempts were made to place substitutes on the market in the form of plated wares.

A committee on public information representative in London says:

London has never heard of a baseball season before, but will get its chance this year when the American baseball league gets its schedule of games well underway. There are eight American and Canadian teams recruited from various organizations stationed in London, with games scheduled for each Saturday during the summer.

The thousands of American soldiers who may pass through London, or be invalided or stationed here, are in a fair way to be made to feel that England is the next best place to home and that English hearts are kept warm for them.

"Make England the Sammy's 'blighty,'" is the way the English press puts it in urging readers to entertain the American troops. "Blighty" is the war word for everything the soldier wants in intervals of his fighting work; the place where friends, recreation, and homelike comfort await him.

The Weekly Dispatch recently called for suggestions for a public entertainment to be offered American soldiers and an instant response made thousands of dollars available for amusements and entertainments. The idea that found greatest favor, however, was to throw open the homes of the nation to the Sammies.

An officer commanding an American squadron operating with the British fleet has reported on a late inspection and speaks in high terms of the present state of efficiency in which he finds both ships and men.

"Vessels show the most gratifying improvement in battery and fire control," he said. "Our ships are smart, spick and span, and have been recipients of many high compliments from British flag officers."

Prior to the war the treasury prepared approximately 150,000 checks annually for the payment of interest on registered bonds of all loans, the issue of these 150,000 checks being distributed through the year. In the May payment of interest on registered bonds of the second Liberty loan more than twice that number of checks were prepared.

More than 2,000,000 members of American fighting forces are now insured by the United States government.

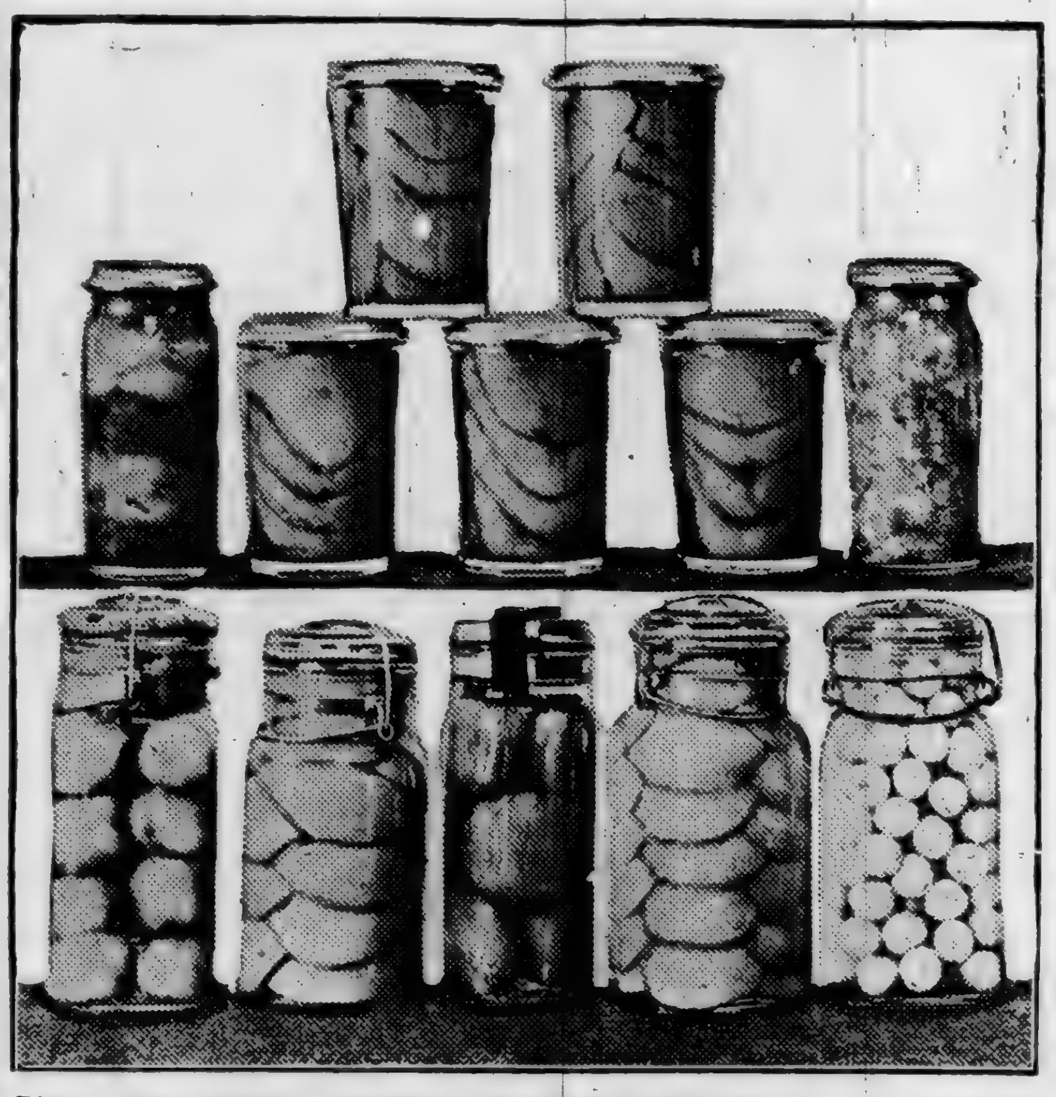
HOW TO SELL HOME-CANNED PRODUCTS.



These Home-Canned Tomatoes, Pimentoes, and Peppers Are Attractive Enough to Sell Themselves.

NEARBY MARKET IS USUALLY BEST

Canning Clubs Should Be Able to Guarantee Packs of Different Products.

LABELS ON TIN CONTAINERS

As Necessary to Establish Reputation for Reliability as to Have Products Put Up Attractively—Cater to Needs of Buyers.

Well-stocked pantry shelves found in so many American homes at the end of the canning season have not been enough in the way of food saving for many women and girls who last year, especially through their organized clubs, put up millions of jars and cans of fruits and vegetables in response to the world's need of food.

Although some of this surplus canned food, that the pantry shelves would not hold, was sold on local markets, and some of it was even shipped to nearby points, here and there the home canners found that it was hard to sell the surplus. One of the main difficulties, as pointed out by the bureau of markets, was that the home-canned products were not standardized, for many cases were found where well-selected, carefully packed standardized goods brought good prices to the home canner.

Best Markets.

Local or nearby markets for home-canned products are usually the best. The attractiveness of the pack and containers affects its selling qualities. Merchants or other buyers do not want a miscellaneous assortment of products, and it is better practice to put different products in boxes by themselves and not to mix containers of peaches and peppers, for example, in the same lot when offering them for sale. Containers should be graded as to size and quarts and pints kept separate. Labels are necessary on tin containers and help sell canned goods.

Where products are put up by members of canning clubs under organized supervision it is possible to guarantee the pack of the different products as to grade and weight of measure. This is a considerable aid in selling, since the buyer then knows exactly what he is buying.

Pooling Products.

In case the products are pooled for marketing, the different kinds of fruit or vegetables can be placed together in graded-sized containers, when, perhaps, the pack of any one individual might not be large enough to make up a quantity sufficient to attract buyers. It is as necessary to establish a reputation for reliability as to have products put up attractively. The marketing of home or club-canned products can be made successful if the canners will study the marketing problem and cater to the needs of buyers. When orders are secured in advance for products, home canners should endeavor to fill the orders on time and give the buyer the kind of products agreed upon.

Why Beekeepers Fail.

Failure to make a success of beekeeping almost always results from lack of study of the needs of the bees, combined with the failure to do things on time. Beekeeping is essentially an industry which requires studious care, and in consequence the proper development of this branch of agriculture necessitates to an unusual degree the dissemination of information of a rather detailed nature. While there are published bulletins and books which contain the needed information, these have not proved adequate.

It is quite possible for the American beekeeping industry to be developed so that the honey crop will be ten times what it is at present. Not only would such a development be valuable in an emergency such as the present crisis, but in normal times the beekeeping industry can provide a concentrated, nutritious food, almost universally liked, and assuredly an article of diet preferable to the inferior sirups and jams so commonly used.

850,000,000 QUARTS CANNED LAST YEAR

Girls' canning clubs in the United States put up a total of 14,640,187 containers of fruits and vegetables during 1917. Counting in the canning done by the organized women's clubs and through the home-demonstration agents, the total canned product is estimated at 850,000,000 quarts, with a value of about $140,000,000, and this does not include the products dried and salted for home use.

Big Wages for Spare Time.

Factory workers in an Ohio town, last year, earned money during spare time at the rate of 92 cents an hour. That would be $7.36 for an eight-hour day, $220.80 a month, $2,649.60 a year. That is a good deal more than a fair profit on idle hours.

What were they doing? Working in home gardens, growing vegetables that they and their families ate. The manufacturing concern for which they worked during regular hours kept an accurate record of the time the men spent working in the gardens and the value of the garden stuff grown.

This matter isn't news, particularly. It is nearly nine months old. But it does seem worth mentioning just now by way of calling the attention of the industrial workers of the nation to the fact that time spent working home gardens is not time thrown away, that the hour they spend morning or evening working the garden yields better returns than any hour they put in in the factory.

Care of Young Horses.

Give the weanlings and immature horses good care. The colts should be given an ample supply of grain and good roughage in order that they may mature into useful work horses. The saving of grain should be made with the idle mature horse and not with the colt. There are many economical rations that can be fed to both young and mature stock, depending on the local feeds available. Write to your state experiment station for information regarding the most economical rations to be fed in your state. Also write to the United States department of agriculture for Farmers' Bulletin 803, which gives information on the feeding and management of young horses.

Inexpensive Garden Tools.

The cultivation of a home garden requires very little expenditure in tools. A spade, a hoe, and a rake, representing a total cost of considerably less than $5, are all the bought tools necessary to be used. Everything else can be improvised. A garden line can be made with a piece of twine tied to two sharpened sticks that serve as stakes. A thin piece of board or a shingle can be made into a serviceable trowel. A good scratcher and weeder can be made by driving about three small nails through the end of a piece of lath. A heavier weeder can be made from a piece of hoop iron, with one end sharpened, bent into a loop.

FIGHT OR WORK, CROWDER'S ORDER

Ball Players, Bartenders, Golfers, Clerks, Gamblers, Must Find Useful Employment.

ACTORS ON EXEMPTED LIST

Sweeping Edict, Effective July 1, to Make Nation Efficient in War, Takes Registrants Out of the Deferred Class.

Bulletin.

Washington, May 23. — General Crowder's new "work-or-fight" regulations may require professional baseball players either to engage in some useful occupation or to join the army. Baseball players, as well as jockeys, professional golfers and other professional sportsmen, General Crowder said today, will be affected by the regulations if strictly enforced. General Crowder said he did not desire to make specific rulings at this time and would make rulings only when cases came to him from local boards after July 1.

Bulletin.

Washington, May 23.—Theatrical performers have been excepted from the new draft regulations at the direction of Secretary Baker, who is said to feel that the people cannot do without all amusement in war time and that other amusements could be dispensed with more readily.

THESE ARE HIT BY ORDER TO FIGHT OR WORK.

Idlers.
Gamblers.
Bucket shop employees.
Race track attendants.
Clairvoyants and the like.
Professional golfers.
Professional baseball players (probably).
Elevator operators at clubs and stores.
Club and hotel doormen.
Waiters in hotels and clubs.
Ushers in theaters.
Attendants at sports.
Persons in domestic service.
Clerks in stores.

Specially Exempt.

Actors.

Washington, May 23.—Provost Marshal General Crowder today announced that every man of draft age must work or fight after July 1. The order is under a drastic amendment to the selective service regulations. All draft registrants, besides idlers, in what are held to be nonuseful occupations, will be given an opportunity before local boards to choose a new job or join the army.

Gamblers, race track and bucket shop attendants and fortune tellers head the list, but those who will be reached by the new regulation also include waiters and bartenders, theater ushers and attendants, passenger elevator operators and other attendants of clubs, hotels, stores, etc., domestics and clerks in stores.

Deferred classification granted on account of dependents will be disregarded entirely in applying the rule. A man may be at the bottom of class 1, or even in class 4, but if he fails within the regulation and refuses to take useful employment he will be given a new number in class 1 that will send him into the military service forthwith. Local boards are authorized to use discretion only where they find that enforced change of employment would result in disproportionate hardship upon his dependents.

May Solve the Labor Problem.

The statement of the provost marshal general's office is as follows:

"Provost Marshal General Crowder today announced an amendment to the selective service regulations which deals with the great question of compelling men not engaged in a useful occupation immediately to apply themselves to some form of labor, contributing to the general good. The idler, too, will find himself confronted with the alternative of finding suitable employment or entering the army.

"This regulation provides that after July 1, any registrant who is found by a local board to be a habitual idler or not engaged in some useful occupation shall be summoned before the board, given a chance to explain and, in the absence of a satisfactory explanation, to be inducted into the military service of the United States.

"Any local board will be authorized to take action, whether it has an original jurisdiction of the registrant or not; in other words, any man loafing around a poolroom in Chicago may be held to answer to a Chicago board even though he may have registered in New York and lived there most of his life.

"The regulations which apply to idle registrants will be deemed to apply also to gamblers of all description and employees and attendants of bucket-shops and race tracks, fortune tellers, clairvoyants, palmists and the like, who for the purpose of the regulations shall be considered as idlers.

"The new regulation will also affect the following classes:

"(a) Persons engaged in the serving of food and drink, or either, in public places, including hotels and social clubs.

"(b) Passenger elevator operators and attendants, doormen, footmen and other attendants of clubs, hotels, stores, apartment houses, office buildings and bathhouses.

"(c) Persons, including ushers and other attendants, engaged and occupied in, and in connection with, games, sports and amusements, excepting actual performers in legitimate concerts, operas or theatrical performance.

"(d) Persons employed in domestic service.

"(e) Sales clerks and other clerks employed in stores and other mercantile establishments.

"Men who are engaged as above or who are idlers will not be permitted to seek relief because of the fact that they have drawn a later order number or because they have been placed in class II, III or IV on the grounds of dependency. The fact that he is not usefully employed will outweigh both of the above conditions.

"It is expected that the list of nonuseful occupations will be extended from time to time as necessity will require so as to include persons in other employments.

"Temporary absences from regular employment not to exceed one week, unless such temporary absences are habitual and frequent, shall not be considered as idleness. Regular vacations will not be considered as absences in this connection.

"The regulation further provides that where such a change of employment would compel the night employment of women under circumstances which a board might deem unsuitable for such employment of women the board may take such circumstances into consideration in making its decision."

General Crowder Explains Plan.

Explaining the new regulation and the necessity for it, General Crowder said:

"The war has so far disorganized the normal adjustment of industrial man power as to prevent the enormous industrial output, and national organization necessary to success.

"There is a popular demand for organization of man power, but no direct draft could be imposed at present.

"Steps to prohibit idleness and noneffective occupation will be welcomed by our people.

"We shall give the idlers and men not effectively employed the choice between military service and effective employment. Every man, in the draft age at least, must work or fight.

"This is not alone a war or military maneuver. It is a deadly contest of industries and mechanics.

Must Copy German Machine.

"Germany must not be thought of as merely possessing an army, we must think of her as being an army—an army in which every factory and loom in the empire is a recognized part in a complete machine running night and day at terrific speed. We must make of ourselves the same sort of effective machine.

"It is not enough to ask what would happen if every man in the nation turned his hand to effective work. We must make ourselves effective. We must organize for the future. We must make vast withdrawals for the army and immediately close up the ranks of industry behind the gap with an accelerating production of every useful thing in necessary measure. How is this to be done?

"The answer is plain. The first step toward the solution of the difficulty is to prohibit engagement by able-bodied men in the field of hurtful employment, idleness or ineffectual employment, and thus induce and persuade the vast wasted excess into useful fields.

"The very situation we are now considering, however, offers great possibilities in improvement of the draft as well as great possibilities for the composition of the labor situation by effective administration of the draft. Considering the selective service law, we see two principal causes of detriment of the call to military service—exemption and the order numbers assigned by lot.

Exemptions in Two Categories.

"The exemptions themselves fall into two conspicuous categories—dependency and industrial employment. One protects domestic relations, the other the economic interests of the nation. Between the two there is an inevitable hiatus, for it is demonstrably true that thousands, if not millions, of dependency exemptions have no effect of industrial protection whatever.

"One of the unanswerable criticisms of the draft has been that it takes men from the farms and from all useful employments and marches them past crowds of idlers and loafers to the army. The remedy is simple—to couple the industrial basis with other grounds for exemption and to require that any man pleading exemption on any ground shall also show that he is contributing effectively to the industrial welfare of the nation."

Your Taffeta Underskirt.

Taffeta has an unenviable reputation for splitting or cracking. True, the chiffon taffeta is trying hard to work up a better reputation with excellent results. But if your taffeta underskirt when you first get it is dipped in water and then hung up without wringing to dry, the silk will not crack so readily.

Tub Silk Blouses.

When it comes to the more substantial tailored blouses tub silks still lead, though there are many good linen tailored blouses in both the heavy and sheer weaves. The familiar Chinese and Japanese silks and some new effects in wash silk crepes are much used, as is the ever-popular crepe in wonderful lines of plain as well as in striped and fancy effects.

Charming soft turbans are made of brocade and fur.

Real filet is a great favorite, especially for brassieres.

"OVER THE TOP"

By An American Soldier Who Went

Arthur Guy Empey

Machine Gunner, Serving in France

Copyright 1917, by Arthur Guy Empey

EMPEY AND A COMRADE HAVE EXCITING EXPERIENCE WHILE ON LISTENING POST DUTY.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Chaplain distinguishes himself by rescuing wounded men under hot fire. With pick and shovel Empey has experience as a trench digger in No Man's Land. Much attention is required by wounded men from the corps of doctors and nurses. On listening post detail.

If a man is killed he is buried, and the responsibility of the government ceases, excepting for the fact that his people receive a pension. But if a man is wounded it takes three men from the firing line, the wounded man and two men to carry him to the rear to the advanced first-aid post. Here he is attended by a doctor, perhaps assisted by two R. A. M. C. men. Then he is put into a motor ambulance, manned by a crew of two or three. At the field hospital, where he generally goes under an anesthetic, either to have his wounds cleaned or to be operated on, he requires the services of about three to five persons. From this point another ambulance ride impresses more men in his service, and then at the ambulance train, another corps of doctors, R. A. M. C. men, Red Cross nurses and the train's crew. From the train he enters the base hospital or casualty clearing station, where a good-sized corps of doctors, nurses, etc., are kept busy. Another ambulance journey is next in order—this time to the hospital ship. He crosses the channel, arrives in Blighty—more ambulances and perhaps a ride for five hours on an English Red Cross train with its crew of Red Cross workers, and at last he reaches the hospital. Generally he stays from two to six months, or longer, in this hospital. From here he is sent to a convalescent home for six weeks.

If by wounds he is unfitted for further service, he is discharged, given a pension, or committed to a soldiers' home for the rest of his life—and still the expense piles up. When you realize that all the ambulances, trains and ships, not to mention the man power, used in transporting a wounded man, could be used for supplies, ammunition and re-enforcements for the troops at the front, it will not appear strange that from a strictly military standpoint, a dead man is sometimes better than a live one (if wounded).

Not long after the first digging party, our general decided, after a careful tour of inspection of the communication trenches, upon "an ideal spot," as he termed it, for a machine-gun emplacement; took his map, made a dot on it, and as he was wont, wrote "dig here," and the next night we dug.

There were twenty in the party, myself included. Armed with picks, shovels and empty sandbags we arrived at the "ideal spot" and started digging. The moon was very bright, but we did not care as we were well out of sight of the German lines.

We had gotten about three feet down, when the fellow next to me, after a mighty stroke with his pick, let go of the handle, and pinched his nose with his thumb and forefinger, at the same time letting out the explosion, "Gott strafe me pink, I'm bloody well gassed, not 'alf I ain't." I quickly turned in his direction with an inquiring look, at the same instant reaching for my gas bag. I soon found out what was ailing him. One whiff was enough and I lost no time in also pinching my nose. The stench was awful. The rest of the digging party dropped their picks and shovels and beat it for the weather side of that solitary pick. The officer came over and inquired why the work had suddenly ceased, holding our noses, we simply pointed in the direction of the smell. He went over to the pick, immediately clapped his hand over his nose, made an "about turn" and came back. Just then our captain came along and investigated, but after about a minute said we had better carry on with the digging, that he did not see why we should have stopped as the odor was very faint, but if necessary he would allow us our gas helmets while digging. He would stay and see the thing through, but he had to report back to brigade headquarters immediately. We wished that we were captains and also had a date at brigade headquarters. With our gas helmets on we again attacked that hole and uncovered the decomposed body of a German; the pick was sticking in his chest. One of the men fainted. I was that one. Upon this our lieutenant halted proceedings and sent word back to headquarters and word came back that after we filled in the hole we could knock off for the night. This was welcome tidings to us, because—

Next day the general changed the dot on his map and another emplacement was completed the following night.

The odor from the dug-up, decomposed human body has an effect which is hard to describe. It first produces a nauseating feeling, which, especially after eating, causes vomiting. This relieves you temporarily, but soon a weakening sensation follows, which leaves you limp as a dishrag. Your spirits are at their lowest ebb and you feel a sort of hopelessness and a mad desire to escape it all, to get to the open fields and the perfume of the flowers in Blighty. There is a sharp, prickling sensation in the nostrils, which reminds one of breathing coal gas through a radiator in the floor, and you want to sneeze, but cannot. This was the effect on me, surmounted by a vague horror of the awfulness of the thing and an ever-recurring reflection that, perhaps I, sooner or later, would be in such a state and be brought to light by the blow of a pick in the hands of some Tommy on a digging party.

Several times I have experienced this odor, but never could get used to it; the enervating sensation was always present. It made me hate war and wonder why such things were countenanced by civilization, and all the spice and glory of the conflict would disappear, leaving the grim reality. But after leaving the spot and filling your lungs with deep breaths of pure, fresh air, you forget and once again want to be "up and at them."

CHAPTER XV.

Listening Post.

It was six in the morning when we arrived at our rest billets, and we were allowed to sleep until noon; that is, if we wanted to go without our breakfast. For sixteen days we remained in rest billets, digging roads, drilling, and other fatigues, and then back into the front-line trench.

Entrance to a Dugout.

Nothing happened that night, but the next afternoon I found out that a bomber is general utility man in a section.

About five o'clock in the afternoon our lieutenant came down the trench and stopping in front of a bunch of us on the fire step, with a broad grin on his face, asked:

"Who is going to volunteer for listening post tonight? I need two men."

It is needless to say no one volunteered, because it is anything but a cushy job. I began to feel uncomfortable as I knew it was getting around for my turn. Sure enough, with another grin, he said:

"Empey, you and Wheeler are due, so come down into my dugout for instructions at six o'clock."

Just as he left and was going around a traverse, Fritz turned loose with a machine gun and the bullets ripped the sandbags right over his head. It gave me great pleasure to see him duck against the parapet. He was getting a taste of what we would get later out in front.

Then, of course, it began to rain. I knew it was the forerunner of a miserable night for us. Every time I had to go out in front, it just naturally rained. Old Jupiter Pluvius must have had it in for me.

At six we reported for instructions. They were simple and easy. All we had to do was to crawl out into No Man's Land, lie on our bellies with our ears to the ground and listen for the tap, tap of the German engineers or sappers who might be tunneling under No Man's Land to establish a minehead beneath our trench.

Of course, in our orders we were told not to be captured by German patrols or reconnoitering parties. Lots of breath is wasted on the western front giving silly cautions.

As soon as it was dark, Wheeler and I crawled to our post which was about halfway between the lines. It was raining bucketfuls, the ground was a sea of sticky mud and clung to us like glue.

We took turns in listening with our ears to the ground. I would listen for twenty minutes while Wheeler would be on the qui vive for German patrols.

We each wore a wristwatch, and believe me, neither one of us did over twenty minutes. The rain soaked us to the skin and our ears were full of mud.

Every few minutes a bullet would crack overhead or a machine gun would traverse back and forth.

Then all firing suddenly ceased. I whispered to Wheeler, "Keep your eye skinned, mate; most likely Fritz has a patrol out—that's why the Boches have stopped firing."

We were each armed with a rifle and bayonet and three Mills bombs to be used for defense only.

I had my ear to the ground. All of a sudden I heard faint, dull thuds. In a low but excited voice I whispered to Wheeler, "I think they are mining, listen."

He put his ear to the ground and in an unsteady voice spoke into my ear:

"Yank, that's a patrol and it's heading our way. For God's sake keep still."

I was as still as a mouse and was scared stiff.

Hardly breathing and with eyes trying to pierce the inky blackness, we waited. I would have given a thousand pounds to have been safely in my dugout.

Then we plainly heard footsteps and our hearts stood still.

A dark form suddenly loomed up in front of me; it looked as big as the Woolworth building. I could hear the blood rushing through my veins and it sounded as loud as Niagara falls.

Forms seemed to emerge from the darkness. There were seven of them in all. I tried to wish them away. I never wished harder in my life. They muttered a few words in German and melted into the blackness. I didn't stop wishing either.

All of a sudden we heard a stumble, a muddy splash, and a muttered "Donner und Blitzen." One of the Boches had tumbled into a shell hole. Neither of us laughed. At that time—it didn't strike us as funny.

About twenty minutes after the Germans had disappeared something from the rear grabbed me by the foot. I nearly fainted with fright. Then a welcome whisper in a cockney accent.

"I s'y, myte, we've come to relieve you."

Wheeler and I crawled back to our trench; we looked like wet hens and felt worse. After a swig of rum we were soon fast asleep on the fire step in our wet clothes.

The next morning I was as stiff as a poker and every joint ached like a bad tooth, but I was still alive, so it did not matter.

CHAPTER XVI.

Battery D 238.

The day after this I received the glad tidings that I would occupy the machine gunners' dugout right near the advanced artillery observation post. This dugout was a roomy affair, dry as tinder, and real cots in it. These cots had been made by the R. E.'s who had previously occupied the dugout. I was the first to enter and promptly made a signboard with my name and number on it and suspended it from the foot of the most comfortable cot therein.

In the trenches it is always "first come, first served," and this is lived up to by all.

Two R. F. A. men (Royal Field artillery) from the nearby observation post were allowed the privilege of stopping in this dugout when off duty.

One of these men, Bombardier Wilson by name, who belonged to Battery D 238, seemed to take a liking to me, and I returned this feeling.

In two days' time we were pretty chummy, and he told me how his battery in the early days of the war had put over a stunt on Old Pepper, and had gotten away with it.

I will endeavor to give the story as far as memory will permit in his own words:

Despite the excellent targets men are not allowed to shell Fritz, Empey relates in next installment.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 2

THE PROPHETIC OUTLINE OF THE INTERVAL BETWEEN CHRIST'S CRUCIFIXION AND HIS COMING AGAIN.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 13:1, 14:9.

GOLDEN TEXT—He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.—Mark 13:13.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Ephesians 2:1-10.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL — Matthew 23:1-25, 46; Luke 21:5-38; I Thess. 5:1-24; II Thess. 2.

JUNIOR AND INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Our best for Christ.—Mark 14:8-9.

The printed text (14:1-9) may profitably be used by the primary, junior and intermediate grades, but the adult classes will more profitably confine their study to chapter 13. In order to avoid confusion in this study, let it be clearly borne in mind that two matters are presented—the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman armies and the glorious return of the Lord. The two are sometimes so closely interwoven as to make the threads difficult to disentangle, but if we see the coloring in the graphic picture of the destruction of Jerusalem as adumbrating the revelation of the Son of God in glory, we shall have no serious trouble.

I. The Occasion of the Prophecy (vv. 1-4).

As Jesus was passing through the temple for the last time on his way to the Mount of Olives, where he gave this discourse, the disciples reminded him of the splendor of the building, to which he replied that not one stone should be left upon another. When seated upon the mount three disciples came privately with a threefold question, according to Matthew 24, requesting further information.

1. When shall these things be?
2. What shall be the sign of thy coming?
3. And of the end of the age?

That which follows is given in answer to these questions.

II. The Characteristics of the Age During the Absence of Christ (vv.5-23).

1. Appearance of deceivers (vv. 5, 6).

Since Jesus went back to heaven many false Christs from time to time have pressed their claims as being the Christ. As the age draws to a close these claims doubtless will increase.

2. Wars and strife among the nations (vv. 7, 8).

The history of the centuries since Christ is written in blood, and the river increases in volume as the age goes on toward its consummation. Jesus warns against making any particular war the sign of his coming. Many good people have seriously blundered in this respect because they did not heed this warning.

3. Earthquakes and famines (v. 8).

Though these calamities grow increasingly severe as the days lengthen, the intelligent, believing disciple is not surprised or alarmed, for these are the precursors of a new order, the birth pangs of a new age, the establishment of the Kingdom of Christ upon this earth. Let the child of God in this present darkness look up, for his redemption draweth nigh (Luke 21:28).

4. Universal evangelism (v. 10).

The gospel of the Kingdom, according to Matthew 24:14, shall be preached in all the world for a witness. This is not the Gospel of the grace of God which we now preach, but the new evangelism which shall be proclaimed by elect Israelites immediately preceding the coming of Christ to establish his Kingdom (see Rev. 7:4-10; Rom. 11:15).

III. The Lord's Glorious Return (vv. 24-27).

This is the superlative event, the one to which all prophecies have pointed, and all ages are moving with unfailing precision. It will usher in the golden age of which the wise and great of all ages have dreamed, and for which they longed. The coming of the Lord will put an end to earth's sorrows; wars and strife will not end until the kingdoms of this world become the Kingdom of our Lord and his Christ (Rev. 11:15). This event will be accompanied by great physical disturbances and Jesus will gather his elect from the ends of the earth.

IV. Applications of the Prophecy (vv. 28-37).

1. As these events multiply in the earth we know that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh (vv. 28, 29), as the putting forth of the leaves of the fig tree prove the approach of summer.

2. The Jewish race shall retain its integrity till the end (v. 30).

The perpetuity of Israel is the miracle of the ages.

3. Certainty of fulfillment (v. 31).

The unfailing guarantee is the words of Christ.

4. The time of Christ's coming unknown (v. 32).

In view of this it is utter folly to set the time. The devil keeps people from the truth of Christ's coming as long as possible. When he can no longer succeed in this, he then tries to get them to set the time.

5. The proper behavior in view of Christ's imminent coming (vv. 33-37).

It is watchfulness and prayer. The coming of the Lord is the grand incentive for watchfulness and earnest prayer.

RAILROAD CHIEFS OUSTED BY M'ADOO

Drastic Order Deposes Presidents of All Lines.

WILL NAME U. S. DIRECTORS

Appointments to Be Made From Among Operating Officials—Must Sever All Connections and Be Government Employees.

Washington, May 22.—By a sweeping order from Director General McAdoo every railroad president in the United States is relieved from active duty as executive manager of his respective road. A federal director will be appointed for each road, responsible only to the railroad administration.

In many cases the president of the road may be named federal director.

As another step in the reorganization of railroad management, the director general ordered the creation of two operating districts—the Allegheny region, consisting of the principal trunk lines east of Pittsburgh, excluding the New York Central, managed by C. H. Markham, now regional director for the South, and the Pocahontas district, consisting of the east and west trunk lines terminating at Hampton Roads.

Statement by McAdoo.

"In view of the direct responsibility for the operation of the railroads of the country placed upon Director General McAdoo by the act of congress, and by the proclamations of the president, he has been unable to escape the conclusion that it will be advisable to place in direct charge of each property for operating purposes a representative to be known as the federal manager, who will report to the regional director.

"As far as practicable this federal manager will be chosen from the operating officers of the particular property who are entirely familiar with its employees and its conditions.

"Except so far as may be necessary to meet the emergency conditions which compel the government to take control of the railroads, the federal manager of each railroad will endeavor to avail himself to the fullest extent of the advantages incident to the operations of the particular railroad as a unit and the preservation of its identity.

Seeks Best Results.

"This is believed to be of essential importance not only to secure the best results during the period of government control, but also to give the greatest degree of reassurance to the officers and employees that the railroad careers upon which they have entered will not be narrowed, but if anything, will be broadened, and to give the greatest possible reassurance to the stockholders that their just interests in the properties will be respected and that nothing will be needlessly done to have even the appearance of impairing their just rights."

THAT CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. Godden Tells How It May be Passed in Safety and Comfort.

Fremont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change—heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared."—Mrs. M. GODDEN, 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

Such annoying symptons as heat flashes, nervousnsss, backache, headache, irritability and "the blues," may be speedily overcome and the system restored to normal conditions by this famous root and herb remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complications present themselves write the Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for suggestions how to overcome them. The result of forty years experience is at your service and your letter held in strict confidence.

GROUND FROZEN AGES AGO

Scientific Explanations of Fact Which Has Puzzled Miners Who Have Worked in Alaska.

Miners and geologists familiar with conditions in Alaska are aware that in many places the ground in that country is permanently frozen, except on the surface, to a depth of 200 and even 300 feet. While this has been popularly attributed to long-continued low temperature in winter, the interesting theory has recently been advanced by a scientist that the condition is due to far colder weather that obtained in some previous age, and that protective vegetation on the surface has kept the frost in the ground permanently since then. It has been found that when moss has been cleared away for open-cut mining or farming, the upper level of the grounds frost seemed gradually to descend. If such is the case, it may show that present temperatures are not low enough to freeze the ground to the great depths cited above.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Buy W. S. S.

The first statewide War Savings Drive in Hoosierdom be-ins May 27th and ends June 3rd. During this week it is planned ell $7,500,000 in W. S. S.

At first glance it may seem that $7,500,000 is a whole lot of ney to expect to secure in War Savings in one week. But, let pause and consider how little $7,500,000 means to each of us en spread out over the entire state. It means $2.50 in W. S. S. r every person in the state. This is all—just $2.50 each.

Certainly we should be able to sell an average of $2.50 per in one week. We can and we will—if every person in iana does his or her duty.

Of course some will buy more than $2.50 worth—many will to in order to keep the average up—but, many will want to. nse, buying W. S. S. is Patriotic and, W. S. S. is the best stment the Government has ever offered.

NEWVILLE

Archie Cummins and family were over-Sunday guests of relatives at Cedarville.

Harvy Rank and family, of Butler, were Sunday guests of Mr. Laub and wife, of Orangeville.

Ben King and mother, of Auburn, were Newville visitors Saturday evening. Ben left Mohday of this week in answer to his country's call.

Mrs. Ina Traxler and little daughter returned Saturday from a two-week visit with relatives at Napoleon and Melbern, Ohio.

Homes are lonely where the old folks stay: the boys have answered to the call and all have gone away.

Frank Snellbaker and family, of Swanton, Ohio, were over-Sunday guests of Charles Harter and wife.

Ammy Wafford and wife, of Fort Wayne, and Mrs. Keeley and son, of Butler, were Sunday afternoon guests of Mrs. Jane Crum.

Elmer Stroh and wife, Ben Woodring and wife and Orla Woodring and family were Sunday guests of Oran Hook and wife, on the county farm.

John Gillingham and wife on Sunday attended the annual birthday party, which was held at the home of Frank Stone in the south end of the township.

Two more Newville boys leave for the training camp this week—Ray Harter and Walter Whiteherst; and also the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lee, whose given name we are unable to learn. Boys are getting pretty scarce around Newville.

Telephone Industry.

The telephone industry is furnishing a fine example of non-profiteering through increased business due to wartime conditions, according to E. A. Geauque, manager of the St. Joe Telephone company, just returned from the annual district meeting of the Ohio Independent Telephone association.

The war has added tens of thousands of new subscribers to the independent's system; but these new subscribers, instead of increasing profits, have served instead to increase the cost of telephone operation. In order to care for them, the companies have been compelled to pay from 100% to 600% more for needed equipment and materials than in ordinary times.

The necessity for higher telephone rates and approaching exhaustion of telephone facilities were among the things discussed at the meeting. Reports returned by the officers show that there are more than three times as many telephones in use in Ohio today than there were throughout the United States in 1895. Ohio's growth has been from 30,000 telephones in 1895 to 770,000 in 1918.

Many members reported that high prices for all classes of materials and the prevailing scarcity of competent labor had compelled them to abandon plans for new construction. Due to this condition, association officials fear that a general telephone shortage may soon be brought about, due to the increased demand for telephone service with development temporarily at a standstill.

A closer co-operation between the residents of our cities and the surrounding farms has been noticed by telephone men during the last few months, apparently the result of the government's conservation program. Farmers in certain localities have established regular telephone lists of residence customers, obtaining produce orders by long distance and forwarding the articles sold by parcel post.

Two Boys Injured

Two St. Joe boys—Ralph Brown and Stanley Koch—are nursing injuries, the first a sore head and the other a badly injured lower arm.

While at Auburn on Monday, Ralph visited the Y. M. C. A. and took a bath in the swimming pool. Just after he came out the water, he slipped on the tiled floor and fell, striking on the back of his head. He was rendered unconscious for a short time. No serious consequences followed.

Stanley's injuries are more serious, and were received Saturday night near Harlan while cranking an automobile. The thing kicked, spraining and rupturing the ligaments of the right wrist. He goes about with his arm in a sling, and will be laid up for a few weeks.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

When you compare the low prices of Ford cars with the prices of farm produce, farm stock and everything else on the market, the great value of the Ford car can be fairly estimated. The price for the Ford Touring Car is only $450 f. o. b. Detroit—the same as last year. It is the greatest value, not only among motor cars, but in the whole run of articles grown and manufactured. Think of a five-passenger motor car with the reputation for service, durability and economy that's behind the Ford car, selling for $450! We urge prospective purchasers to give their orders without delay.

Takes Her Own Life

Mrs. Della Peters, wife of Albert Peters, residing 4 miles west and 1 mile north of Spencerville, committed suicide last Friday afternoon by taking formaldehyde. Deceased was 38 years old.

Mrs. Peters had been depressed for some time, and had been heard express a wish that she were dead. In the forenoon of the day of the tragedy, she had one of these fits of depression and attempted to end her life with a razor. Reports differ as to whether Mr. Peters caught her in the act or came upon her immediately afterward. He secured the razor, and exacted a promise from his wife that she would do herself no further harm. Knowing that she worried over the absence of her father, Joseph Kester, who had previously made his home with her, Mr. Peters determined to go to Fort Wayne, where he was staying, and bring him back, thinking his presence would do his daughter good. He did so, arriving home shortly after noon.

When the two men reached the Peters home, Mrs. Peters was not within the house. The little 5-year-old daughter (the only child), who was playing outside, was asked; and she said that her mother was out in the barn sick. Mr. Peters and Mr. Kester discovered the woman's condition. They removed her to the house, administered simple antidotes and summoned medical aid. Drs. B. O. Shook, of St. Joe, and F. M. Hines, of Auburn, soon arrived and did all they could to save the unfortunate lady; but their efforts were in vain, and about 3 o'clock the end came.

Mrs. Peter's death is to be regretted, and is to be accounted for only by temporary aberration of mind. Her home was an ideal one and her domestic relations were pleasant. Funeral services were held Monday; interment was at Auburn.

A Sluggish Liver Needs Attention

An Inactive Liver Affects the Kidneys and Deranges the Stomach and Bowels.

Too much stress can not be placed on the necessity of keeping the liver in good condition; upon it the health of the body largely depends. When the liver becomes sluggish, the kidneys are overworked, the digestive fluids are not properly secreted and a languid, bilious, nervous or sick headachy condition results. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body. Constipation, bloating, dizziness, belching, pain or soreness in the right side, impaired vision and, in fact, most diseases have their origin in an inactive liver. An inactive liver is easily corrected if taken in time, but the only way to doctor is to get at the cause. Glando Tonic is a liver remedy that has a splendid record for renewing activity, removing the poisons and building up the system. For bilious attacks, it can not be beaten. Mothers who are nursing a baby should take Glando Tonic to keep the bowels well regulated. This will keep baby's bowels in a good condition. Glando Tonic is a three-in-one treatment that brings results. A trial will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials will be furnished upon request. Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be obtained by sending 50c direct to the Grand-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JUNE 6 1918 NO. 23

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

ELLIS ISLAND, N. Y., May 18.
DEAR PARENTS:—

This has been a fine day, and a large number of visitors were here calling on the overseas wounded.

The flower gardens are blooming here, especially tulips, and make a wonderful, picturesque view. In the center of the lawn on island No. 1, there is a star made of tulips. It measures 20 feet from tip to tip, and contains about 2,000 plants. The grass is mowed by a gasoline mower.

A few immigrants are still received at the immigration station, and it is interesting to see the routine a foreigner is put through before he is left to stay in the United States.

Last Friday evening, 200 girls and women came here from New York to see the show (Mrs. George Gould night); and a dance followed, the navy orchestra furnishing the music. It occurs every Friday evening now; but, believe me, after running about these islands all day, a fellow does not feel like dancing. Everyone workr, and it is like one of our captains said: His policy is to treat the men fine, feed them well and give them plenty of liberty, but see that each man is doing his work and doing it right. A good policy.

It is doubtful if I get a furlough in June. There are three fellows who have had a furlough of seven days; and they, in order to get it, had to have their folks telegraph them that they were wanted at home at once. But I hope that mine is not turned down, as I have been planning on it for months.

There is a big garden in Central park, where there are all kinds of garden vegetables planted; and it is funny to stand around and hear some one from the city asking what this is, pointing to a radish sprig or a bean, etc.

The other day, I was sent to Willett Parker hospital, at 105th street and Avenue A, with a culture tube to be analyzed. I rode on the elevated down, and then walked back through the tenement district. Of all the sights you ever heard of, I saw there—dirt, filth, etc.; and you ought to see how some of them live. It's terrible. The army is a heaven compared to living in that district.

Five more German spies with diseases have put under guard here in the immigration building, and on one of them was found a map of Ellis island and plans for blowing up the three islands. There are five detectives here now trying to find out how an immigrant procured a pass to get into New York. One of our men is suspicioned. It is stated that he was given $200 for the pass; and if it is proven on him, he will be sentenced before a firing squad on Governor's island. Everything has been exciting around here since he was suspicioned. Everybody liked him before. His home is at Hammond, Ind., and he was a collector before joining the army. He is a German by birth, and a good looking fellow 26 years old. Kusselman is his name.

Hoping that you are all well and that I may be able to see you soon, I am, as ever, your son,

PAUL CURIE.

Young Boy Drowned

John, the 8-year-old son of Glenn Henderson, superintendent of the Woodburn schools, was drowned on Friday in Delta lake at Lakeside, where he, with his parents, was visiting at the home of his uncle, Orange W. Barrett. While playing in the water with a number of other boys, he waded out beyond his depth. He was not missed until his mother came in search of him. His body was found under a foot bridge over the lake. He had been in the water over an hour, and all efforts to resuscitate him were in vain.

Funeral services were held at the Mission church, Woodburn, Sunday; interment at the White City cemetery, Spencerville.

The boy was a grandson of John Henderson, Sr., of Spencerville.

THE SLACKER'S FATE

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said:
"This is my own, my native land!"
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burned
As home his footsteps he hath turned
From wandering in a foreign strand.

If such there breathe, go, mark him well;
For him no minstrel rapture swell;
High though his titles, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim;
Despite these titles, power and pelf,
The wretch, concentrated all in self,
Living, shall forfeit rich renown,
And, doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust from which he sprung,
Unwept, unhonored and unsung.

Subscription Price Will Be Advanced

THE NEWS very reluctantly is obliged to do what nearly all other similar publications are and have been doing—advance its subscription price. This will occasion no great surprise among its readers, who are aware of the great increase in the cost of doing business. Everything that the printer uses is higher. This is especially true of print paper, which has been the subject of congressional investigation. The general rising costs have caught newspaper publishers all along the line. For months, we have been repeatedly asked if the subscription price was still $1.00; and so we know that our forced increase, as previously stated, will occasion no great surprise. We have refrained from taking this action as long as possible, and held the paper at $1.00 per annum until compelled to make an advance.

Beginning July 1, our subscription price will be $1.25 per year—strictly in advance. That our readers may not think we are making this advance without due notice, the new rate, though in effect on July 1, will be waived for all who pay their subscriptions during July. All arrearages must, of course, be paid at time of renewal. If you settle your subscription at any time before Aug. 1, the rate will be $1.00, as heretofore. After that date, all accounts will be figured at $1.25 per year, dating from July 1. A special effort will be put forth to make the paper better than ever before, and we confidently ask for the continued support of our big family of readers.

Advertising rates also will be increased July 1. This is rendered necessary for the same reason that subscription is advanced. The new scale of prices will be made known on application.

Remember, all payments on subscriptions received during the month of July will be at the old rate, $1.00 per year. This applies to new subscribers and to renewals. All accounts unpaid at the end of that time will be left for collection. We have been lenient—too lenient—and a few are indebted to us for subscriptions. They must settle, either voluntarily or forcibly. We hope for no trouble.

ON JUNE 5, every young man that had become of age within the past year registered, thereby becoming subject to military duty. If he did not, a term of imprisonment awaits him and he is branded as a slacker. The country has a right to commander the services of these young men, and they would be unworthy of the name of Americans if they did not respond willingly to their country's call. But, during the recent Red Cross drive, there were persons who set these same young men a poor example of loyalty: possessing an abundance, they refused to give or gave in a niggardly spirit. Can the army be kept free from slackers when there are slackers at home? Should the young man be condemned for not registering when the puny-souled money grabber can button up his pocket book and go unpunished? Can the soldier be expected cheerfully to venture his life for a land that permits those at home to refuse to venture a few dollars? There is but one answer: gold excuses disloyalty and is worth more than red-blooded manhood. Is it fair to the noble, self-sacrificing women who wear the Red Cross that such a condition exists; that notwithstanding all these heroines are doing and enduring, certain creatures that walk on two legs and have nothing of the porcine in their appearance can claim to be men?

GRACE LUSK has been convicted of murder. Twelve silly grangers of Waukesha county, Wisconsin, were so foolish as not to believe that the sanctity of marriage is an obsolete idea; that the woman who gilds her sin by terming it "soul mating" and her partner in sin as her "affinity" is so far in advance of the age that she should be retired to a prison until the world catches up with her; that she is not a martyr and her victim the wrong doer. Just the same, her conviction may cause some other female sinner to pause before she kills the woman who stands between her and the object of her unholy love. The verdict is a rebuke to those lachrymose females who surrounded Miss Lusk during the trial and wept in unison with her over her fancied wrongs. Murder is murder, no matter which sex commits it; and it is refreshing to find a jury that has the courage and good sense to convict a murdress. One more duty remains for the authorities to perform—to see that Grace Lusk's paramour follows her to prison.

THE government, through the fuel adminstration, advises everybody to lay in a coal supply for the coming winter; and the foresighted man will act upon this advice, as the famine of last season promises to be repeated. It is also urged that all persons settle their coal bills, for no one is going to handle coal if he does not get paid for it. Upon the observance of these recommendations may bepend St. Joe's coal supply next winter. Better heed them.

POOR Mr. Red Cress Slacker, a few dollars would have saved you from the contempt of decent people: you pay a high price for becoming notorious. You can't afford it.

The American Flag

The opinion of one man is not always reliable, for he may be mistaken; but when hundreds of people agree upon a single point and no one differs from them, there is no doubt but they are right. Everyone says that the play, "The American Flag," given at Widney opera house on Thursday and Friday evenings of last week, was great; and what everyone says must be true. THE NEWS adds the weight of its testimony to that of those who pronounce the show great. A newspaper sometimes labors under a disadvantage: it is expected to say something good about everything of a local nature; and this bunkum it is forced to use lessens the weight of any words it may employ in paying a merited compliment. But the printer declares, without any reservation whatsoever, that "The American Flag" is the best amateur dramatic effort he ever witnessed—better, too, than the work of many a professional troupe.

The efforts of the ladies in the cast—Mesdames Esther Bowman and Lena Meek and Miss Katherine Kinsey—could not have been bettered very much, was nearly perfect; and the two elder ladies will not be jealous, we know, when we say that the honors belong to Miss Kinsey—not because she did any better than the others, but because of her youth and inexperience, being but a school girl.

Derwood Ridgway had the heavy male part, that of a brutal German officer; but the part was not so heavy that he did not carry it successfully. He looked the typical German, too, and played the role well. We felt sorry for Derwood when "Dixie" (Mrs. Meek) slapped his mouth, but did not have a bit of sympathy for "Kommandant Wolff;" and when "June" (Miss Kinsey) laid it over him with a riding whip, everyone thought he was just getting what was coming to him.

As no circus is complete without a clown, so no St. Joe amateur dramatics is complete without Sam Mumaw. Sam is good in any funny part; and his depiction of the "honest Israelite" who got mixed up with the war zone was one of the features of the entertainment.

Merritt Maxwell deserves special notice, and so George Wilmot, Ray Reasoner and Ray D. Herrick, who had minor parts.

The entertainment was for the benefit of the Red Cross. The gross receipts were $102.90.

The uniforms were loaned by the Hicksville fire department, for which the management desire to return thanks publicly.

A Word to Coal Buyers.

The Government through the fuel administration has advised everybody to lay in their coal as much as possible during the spring and summer months. The dealers also are urged to lay in their supply now.

The reason for this is, the government will need the coal as soon as cold weather sets in more than now and the car supply will be short, therefore they ask domestic consumers to buy now. This we are doing and we hope to continue doing. But we must have our coal bills paid promptly as most of this coal is paid for before we unload it and it takes money to buy coal.

We ask you to give this your attention us we will have to insist that all back bills are paid at once as coal is CASH with us. We have kept St. Joe in coal during the worst coal famine the country has ever known and we will try to keep on doing so, but we must have your co-operation, we mean PAY UP.

OUR AIR FIGHTERS PLAY A FAIR GAME

AVIATOR F. P. MAGOUN RELATES AN INSTANCE OF THEIR REAL SPORTSMANSHIP.

ONE FLYER'S LUCKY ESCAPE

American Infantryman Has Advantage Over the German in His Ammunition Equipment—Finger Prints of German Alien Females to Be Taken.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—A committee on public information representative in London says:

There are no better sportsmen in the world than the allied airmen, and American aviators now fighting in Europe always play a fair game, as they learn it from the allies. F. P. Magoun, a former Harvard student, now a member of the Royal air force, recently wounded, tells how the lives of German observers escaping from balloons have been spared.

"We caught three Hun balloons above the allied grounds in a mist, which prevented their gunners seeing us," said he. "It was a cinch. You should have seen them hustle out their parachutes and abandon the balloons. As they came falling down through the air we circled about closely but, of course, didn't open fire, as that's against the rules of the game. As soon as they touched ground they took cover like rabbits."

Magoun is the only American in his squadron, having joined in February of last year. He has bagged five German planes. While carrying bombs for low attack in the recent offensive he received a bullet through his left arm, but managed to return to his own lines. Magoun tells of a companion in his squadron who had one of the luckiest escapes during the war. He was put out of action 1,000 feet in the air when a bullet perforated his gasoline tank. He was rendered unconscious by the fumes and his machine took a nose dive to earth, but he escaped without a scratch.

A section of the Royal air force operating in the Ypres salient has lost its only American member, who had been with the squadron only ten days when he went on a bombing raid at low elevation. He was hit by a machine-gun bullet and his plane fell in flames. He was taken prisoner.

The efforts of newspapers to promote good feeling between the people of England and the thousands of Americans received official backing when Sir Randolf Baker, member of parliament, offered to take charge of the American troops welfare department of the British government. His plans contemplate a continuous program of healthful recreation in every American rest camp and training camp in England. Special London theatrical companies will be sent out. An organization known as "Sammy's Blighty league" is being formed.

The American infantryman in the expeditionary forces carries 200 rounds of ammunition in the pockets of his light canvas webb belt and his bandoleers. The German soldier has only 120 rounds, and 30 of these are in his knapsack. To secure them at a critical moment he must lose valuable time.

The American webb belts, according to the war department, are far superior to the German leather bandoleers. They are not affected by prolonged rains nor torrid weather. The manufacture of these belts is one of the most intricate of the operations in the textile field. United States army belts are made almost entirely of cotton.

The exact weight of the 220 rounds carried by the American soldier in France is 12 pounds. With the Springfield rifle 28 aimed shots can be fired each minute. Firing from the hip 40 shots can be fired a minute. The new United States model 1917 (modified Enfield) does even better.

The registration of German alien females, to begin Monday, June 17, and end Wednesday, June 26, will be conducted in cities or municipalities having 5,000 population or over by the police officials. In communities having a population of less than 5,000 the registration will be handled by postmasters.

In general the plan of registration is the same as that followed in the registration in February of German alien males. Each person who must register will be required to register her finger prints. This method of identification is also used in the military and naval services of the United States.

Boy scout organizations are active in locating black walnut trees. Black walnut lumber is needed by the war department for use in making airplane propellers and gunstocks.

Enough heavy Browning machine guns for instruction purposes have been shipped to every National Guard training camp and National army cantonment in the country where troops are in training. Heavy Brownings for overseas training have been shipped.

Light Browning rifles sufficient in number to equip the machine-gun units of more than four army divisions have been manufactured, and overseas shipment of one half has begun. The other half of the output goes to army divisions in this country.

At every training camp in the country plans of the commission on training camp activities have been carried out to provide athletic facilities for the men. Baseball heads the list in popularity, and full equipment has been placed in the camps. More than 70,000 baseballs and 3,000 bats have been sent. At Camp Lewis, Washington, there are 16 baseball fields in use. Practically every company in each camp division throughout the country has its team and there are company, battalion, regimental and interregimental leagues.

Every form of track athletics occupies the attention of men training at the camps. As many as 800 men have taken part in divisional contests, and track meets have been witnessed by more than 20,000 spectators.

Where facilities permit, instruction in swimming is given. Men are first given land instruction and then sent into the water. Tennis courts have been built in every camp, one having 40 courts, and the sport is rapidly gaining in popularity. Through the generosity of golf clubs located near the camps, the demand for golf courses is partly being met. Polo matches are frequently held, and competition for places on the teams is keen.

There is a list of 137 occupations where the demand for men in the war department constantly exceeds the supply.

A pressing need exists in the army for men experienced in handling mules, and before all future needs are met a recruiting campaign may become necessary. No difficulty has been experienced in getting men who can buy and handle horses, but blacksmiths are scarce.

There is a constant demand for butchers, and cooks are greatly needed. In several technical branches, particularly the engineers, men for the higher positions are plentiful, but the workers for the ranks are scarce. Experienced mechanics, especially those familiar with automobiles, are always in demand.

More interpreters than can be used have applied for positions with the war department, and applications for commissions as army chaplains are also in excess of the need. The excess totals thousands in each case. Clerks for general work are plentiful, but there is demand for specialists. At present there is a surplus of dentists and pharmacists.

Deliveries of the 8,000 motortrucks recently ordered by the motor transport service of the war department are to be made between August 1 and December 1. These trucks, known as "Class B Standards," will have a capacity of from three to five tons, and will be distributed as needed through the various branches of the army. Ten thousand of these class B standardized trucks have previously been ordered and are now in process of manufacture and delivery.

Under a new agreement the army will handle all mail for the expeditionary forces after it leaves United States ports. The post office department will deliver the mail to military authorities at the port of embarkation in this country and receive it from them at a port in France for dispatch to the United States. The domestic money-order service to the troops will for the present at least, continue under the direction of the post office department in France.

The first Porto Rican laborers to reach the United States under government auspices will be at work upon government contracts within a month.

The employment service of the department of labor has already found employment for at least 100,000 of these men as common laborers on construction work at Norfolk, Newport News, Baltimore and vicinity. Arrangements are now being made by the department of labor to provide proper housing for these men.

Women between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-five who have had a high school education or its equivalent will be eligible for admission to the army school of nursing, arrangements for which were recently made by the war department. It is intended to start several schools in selected military hospitals. Unless otherwise specified, applications should be sent directly to the army school of nursing, office of the surgeon general of the army, Washington, D. C.

"Keeping Our Fighters Fit—For War and After," is the title of an official book issued by the commission on training camp activities, describing the athletics, mass singing, social life and other recreations of men in army and navy camps. The book tells of the theaters, the work of the Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus and other organizations associated with the commission in welfare work, and gives details of life in the camps.

The two picric acid plants to be built at Little Rock, Ark., and Brunswick, Ga., contracts for which have been completed by the war department, will cost approximately $7,000,000.

Men of selective service age who leave the United States to evade military duty will have to stand trial on charges of violations of the selective service act when they return to the country, according to the department of justice, even though they do not return until after the war.

The department has at hand information from which complete lists may be prepared of all men who have left the country to avoid service, says a recent statement authorized by the attorney general.

State Happenings

Indianapolis.—Full support of the thrashermen of the state to the government in its prosecution of the war, and especially in its campaign for increased production and conservation of wheat, was pledged in resolutions returned before a meeting of more than five hundred thrashermen and farmers held in the statehouse. Every means possible will be employed, according to the resolution, to prepare machinery for the thrashing in July and to save all through the year in every way possible. A denial was made that the meeting was called for the purpose of "fixing a price of 10 cents a bushel" for thrashing the wheat crop.

Indianapolis.—Charles B. Riley, secretary of the Indiana Grain Dealers' association, has received the following message from Evansville: "If the present weather continues we will be ready to cut wheat down in this section of the state right around and before the 10th of June." Mr. Riley says that in traveling over the state observing the growing crops, he never saw as good a prospect for wheat as at the present moment. The crop is large, the wheat well advanced and universally in fine condition, and from the present outlook new wheat flour from Indiana wheat may be had before the first of July.

Gary.—Higher prices for iron and steel are regarded as probable by local officers of the United States Steel corporation and other steel plants in this region. They believe the federal government will allow the raises on July 1, following the action of the railroad administration in increasing freight rates and the wages of railway employees. Sharp increases in the freight rates on iron ore and coke coal will levy the biggest toll on the steel industry in most places, it is thought. Steel mill workers in this locality also received a 15 per cent increase in wages recently, which will add to the expense of the companies.

Indianapolis.—Women of American birth whose husbands are enemy aliens must register during the period of registration for German alien women, beginning June 17. Alien women who were married to Americans before April 6, 1917, will not be required to register. The two points are emphasized in instructions sent out to postmasters and police chiefs in Indiana by Mark Storen, United States marshal. In towns of more than 5,000 population the registration will be in the charge of the police chiefs, while in the smaller towns and in rural communities, postmasters will have charge.

Newcastle.—Hope that Catherine Winters, daughter of Wr. W. A. Winters, who disappeared from Newcastle on March 20, 1913, may still be alive and eventually returned to her father, were revived when a report was received through the local officers of the Elks lodge that the Elks lodge at Los Angeles, Cal., had located a girl fourteen years old who had been kidnapped in Indiana five years ago. Doctor Winters was asked to get into communication with the Los Angeles lodge at once. Few details were given. Doctor Winters immediately wired for photographs of the girl and full particulars.

Winchester—Miss Nancy Ferhring, age twenty, living four miles southeast of here, has set the pace for the girls of Indiana in the way of doing a man's work. This spring she has planted 14 acres in corn, sowed 17 acres in oats and has done the chores on her mother's farm. Her father died a few years ago and since that time the young woman has managed the farm until this year. Being unable to hire help she is now doing the actual farming herself.

Delphi—Carroll county, it is said, has the best crop prospect it has had in all its history. The report of James Stockton, assessor of Burlington township, which is typical of the whole county, says there are 1,150 acres of rye against 500 acres last year. The wheat acreage is one-third greater than last year, and it is estimated that for every 100 bushels of wheat produced in the county in 1917 there will be 250 to 300 bushels in 1918.

New Albany.—Hundreds of school boys of this city are volunteering to help to save the strawberry crop in this district. Joseph H. Kraft, probation officer, to whom the growers appealed for assistance in securing pickers, stated that 500 boys were at work in the berry fields. The estimated value of the strawberry crop of this section this season is $300,000.

Greensburg—Only one-third of the corn has been planted in Decatur county, according to a survey just completed by County Agent Paul Brown, although 95 per cent of the plowing is over. Decatur county farmers this season will plant 60,000 acres in corn and, as the county average is about 40 bushels to the acre, a crop of 2,250,000 bushels is expected.

Petersburg—With the receding of White river, bottom farmers in Pike county are again replanting their corn crops. Much of the wheat and oats ruined by the high water will be plowed under and put in corn. About one-third of the wheat crop in the White river bottoms escaped damage. Much cane will be planted in the bottoms and a number of cane mills will be made ready for making sorghum molasses. Hill wheat is in good condition and oats has never looked better. Alfalfa will soon be ready to cut.

Lafayette—Fifteen or more counties in Indiana now have organizations of men registered for military service in the war against Germany and Austria, but who have received deferred classification, according to a compilation made by Purdue university's extension department here. Credit for originating the plan is given to Warrick county. Counties organized include Warrick, Vanderburg, Posey, Gibson, Spencer, Monroe, Jennings, Lawrence, Fayette, Jay, Adams, Wells, Huntington and the city of Evansville. In all places where the men have joined what disloyal utterances there had been are reported to have ceased; Liberty loan, Red Cross and other money raising campaigns, as well as food production and conservation plans are handled more thoroughly than in the past, and other war steps are accomplished quickly. In addition to the counties where the men have formed associations, at least twenty others are considering a similar step. District and county military draft boards are becoming active in aiding the organization work.

Indianapolis.—The following were the nominees chosen at the recent Republican state convention held in this city: Secretary of state, William A. Roach of Delphi; auditor of state, Otto L. Klauss of Evansville; treasurer of state, Uz McMurtrie of Marion; attorney general, Ele Stansbury of Williamsport; clerk of supreme and appellate courts, Patrick J. Lynch of Newcastle; state superintendent of public instruction, Linnaeus N. Hines of Crawfordsville; state geologist, Lewis F. Bourke of Bloomington; judge of supreme court, First district, B. M. Willoughby of Vincennes; judge of supreme court, Fourth district, Howard L. Townsend of Fort Wayne; judges of appellate court, First district, Charles F. Remy of Indianapolis, Solon A. Enloe of Danville; judges of appellate court, Second district, A. L. Nichols of Winchester, Willis C. McMahon of Crown Point.

Fort Wayne.—The "war loafer" ordinance, which was passed by the city council on May 14, has been ordered enforced rigidly by Police Chief Abbott. The enforcement of the measure was put up to the men on the beats with the instructions to get results and get them immediately. Several young men, who have been making their headquarters in the corridors of the courthouse, received the choice of going to work or leaving town. A dozen or more lost no time in leaving town. Loafers will be fined not to exceed $100 and costs or imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed six months. The judge has the right of suspending sentence on representation that two reputable citizens agree to see that the loafer gets work at once and reports to the court every week.

Columbus.—Five farmers' homes in the southwestern part of Bartholomew county were raided and more than 600 pounds of hoarded wheat flour were confiscated. The action was taken by John W. Thompson, the local federal food administrator. According to information gathered by Mr. Thompson, the men had taken wheat to the Stone Head mill in Brown county, where it was ground. No substitutes were mixed with the ground product, it is alleged, as the United States food rules provide.

Indianapolis.—Three thousand drafted men will be sent to Indianapolis this summer by the war department to be trained in the trade schools which have been established by the Indianapolis chamber of commerce with the assistance of the vocational division of the public schools. The war department notified the chamber of commerce that it had accepted the proposal and terms of the chamber with regard to the continuance of the present trade school and the establishment of new departments.

Lafayette—Indiana farmers have gone to the front again in another food production campaign which is to increase the contracted tomato acreage from the 30,000 of last year 50,000 this season. The acreage will be approximately 52,000, reports from the members of the Indiana Canners' association to the horticulture department of Purdue university here show. This amount was obtained by a concerted effort of the canners throughout the state and the patriotic attitude of the tomato growers.

Indianapolis.—In an order which applies to every interurban electric road in the state the Indiana public service commission authorized an increase of passenger fares to a basis of 2½ cents a mile. The old rate was two cents a mile. The higher fare order will go into effect June 30 and is specifically said to be granted as a war-relief measure and will be effective at the pleasure of the commission.

Kokomo.—The chamber of commerce is trying to locate a federal labor board in this city. As Kokomo has become an important war production center and already has a federal inspector of production, it is believed that the war department will approve the latest proposal. The chief object will be to stabalize the labor market. Much trouble has been experienced by foreign agents inducing workmen to leave the city.

Huntington.—To save hundreds of bushels of wheat and oats during the thrashing season through the exercise of extra care for separators and in the operation of the machines, a committee appointed by the county council of defense, and working with F. A. Loew, county agricultural agent, will call a meeting of thrashermen and captains of thrashing rings in this county. It is probable that experts will be obtained to put them in prime condition before thrashing begins.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 9

JESUS FACES BETRAYAL AND DENIAL.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:10-72.

GOLDEN TEXT—Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation.—Mark 14:38

DEVOTIONAL READING—John 15:1-17

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matthew 26:20-29; Luke 22:17-20; John 13:1-35.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus and his disciples.—Mark 14:12-26.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus betrayed and denied.

I. Judas' Bargain With the Chief Priests (vv. 10, 11).

This black crime was committed immediately following the beautiful act of devotion by Mary. The motive actuating Judas was avarice. This awful depth of infamy was not reached at a bound. Because he did not master this besetting sin at the beginning, he was conquered by it.

II. The Last Passover (vv. 12-25).

1. The preparation (vv. 12-16).

In reply to the disciples' inquiry as to where they should prepare the Passover for him, Jesus told them to go into the city where they would meet a man bearing a pitcher of water, whom they should follow. In the house to which they were thus led would be found a guest chamber—a large upper room—where they could make ready the Passover. This is an example of Christ's superhuman knowledge. He not only knew that the disciples would meet this man, but he knew that Judas had bargained for his betrayal.

2. The betrayal announced (vv. 17-21).

The betrayal was to be by one of the disciples who was eating with Jesus. This betrayal had been predicted, though such prediction did not interfere with the free act of Judas in the betrayal. It was because of this act of treachery being freely committed by Judas that Jesus pronounced upon him the awful doom—"Good were it for that man if he had never been born."

3. The bread and the cup instituted (vv. 22-25).

III. The Disciples' Cowardice Foretold (vv. 26-31).

In spite of their cowardly turning from the Saviour, he assures them that after his resurrection he would go before them into Galilee. Peter protested against such act of disloyalty by the disciples, and assured the Lord that though all the rest should forsake him, yet he would not. The Lord showed him how little he knew even of his own best resolve, telling him that on that very night he would deny him thrice. All the disciples said the same thing.

IV. The Agony in Gethsemane (vv. 33-42).

The clear vision of the coming anguish of the Cross, accentuated by the utter failure of the disciples to understand or believe, brought upon him an indescribable anguish of soil, so he took Peter, James, and John and went apart to pray. The cup of agony was not mere death, but the sacrificial death for sin, under the weight of the world's guilt.

1. The first prayer (vv. 35-38).

Notwithstanding the darkness of the hour, he prayed in faith accompanied with a willingness to obey. When he came and found the three sleeping instead of praying, he commanded them to watch and pray so as to be fortified against temptation.

V. The Betrayal and Arrest of Jesus (vv. 43-52).

1. The sign to the mob (vv. 43-47).

With the basest of hypocrisy Judas pointed out Jesus to the mob by a kiss, the sign of love.

2. Jesus forsaken by all (vv. 48-52).

At the sight of the Master's betrayal and arrest, one of his disciples attempted to defend him by resorting to the sword; but seeing that Jesus made no attempt at resistance, they all fled. Their courage failed them in the hour of trial. How little man knows of his weaknesses until the crucial hour.

VI. Jesus Before the Sanhedrin (vv 53-65).

1. Contradictory testimony of false witnesses (vv. 53-59).

High Priest's Questions: (vv. 60-65).

(1) "What is it that these witness against thee?" To this Jesus was silent, showing that no evidence had yet been given worthy of answer.

(2) "Art thou the Christ?" To this he definitely replied: "I am" and quotes a Scripture passage which they recognize as referring to the Messiah. This claim they answer with buffeting and the most shameful treatment.

VII. Peter Denies Lord (vv. 66-72).

Though Peter loves Jesus, yet in the hour of supreme trial he fails. Grievous as his sin is, it is not like that of Judas. His failure was due to

1. Boasting self-defense (vv. 29-31).
2. Lack of watchfulness (v. 37).
3. Neglect of prayer (v. 38).
4. Service in the energy of the flesh (v. 47).
5. Following Jesus afar off (v. 54).
6. Seek comfort among the Lord's enemies (v. 67; compart Luke 22:55).
7. Open denial (vv. 68-72).

His backsliding really began when he shrank from the Cross.

THIS WEAK, NERVOUS MOTHER

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was very weak, always tired, my back ached, and I felt sickly most of the time. I went to a doctor and he said I had nervous indigestion, which added to my weak condition kept me worrying most of the time—and he said if I could not stop that, I could not get well. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my husband wanted me to try it. I took it for a week and felt a little better. I kept it up for three months, and I feel fine and can eat anything now without distress or nervousness."—Mrs. J. Worthline, 2842 North Taylor St., Philadelphia Pa.

The majority of mothers nowadays overdo, there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, nervous condition with headaches, backache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develop. It is at such periods in life that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore a normal healthy condition, as it did to Mrs. Worthline.

HAD ILLUSTRATION IN MIND

Remembering It, Man Was Quite Willing to Agree That Good Things May Be Overdone.

Speaking at a political gathering, Representative C. Cantrill of Kentucky referred to the danger of overdoing things, and happily recalled the following story:

Recently a serious-minded man was conversing with a friend who looked rather lightly on the subject in hand.

"Don't you know, my dear man," said the serious one, "that sometimes a virtue can be exaggerated until it becomes a vice?"

"I certainly do," readily admitted the other. "Aces, for instance."

"Aces!" responded the serious one. "I don't quite understand."

"It's just this way," smilingly explained the second. "Four of them are a blessing greatly to be admired, while five of them create all kinds of dissension."—Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

Confused.

General Leonard Wood said at a Washington luncheon:

"There are so many rewards for bravery and devotion on the other side that a poor soldier naturally gets confused among them.

"There's the V. C. or Victoria Cross the M. M. or Medaille Militaire, the D. S. O. or Distinguished Service Order, the C. G. or Croix de Gurre, and so on almost indefinitely.

"A doughboy had a grudge against his captain, who was a bit of a martinet. Well, in the Y. M. C. A. ane night a waitress said to the doughboy:

"'Did you know they'd given your old captain the C. G?'

"The doughboy laughed aloud.

"'Serve him darn well right," he said. 'How many days?'"

The average man is usually too brilliant or too stupid to become famous.

WEAK KIDNEYS MEAN A WEAK BODY

When you're fifty, your body begins to creak a little at the hinges. Motion is more slow and deliberate. "Not so young as I used to be" is a frequent and unwelcome thought. You Can Now Eat Your Favorite Food Without Any Fear

Kramer Says: "Eatonic" Rids Weak Stomachs of Acids, Gas, Heartburn, Food Repeating and Stomach Miseries

What miserable feelings are caused by an upset stomach! That dull, heavy, "bloated" sensation that follows a full meal, robs good living of half its pleasures. Is there any way out for you sufferers with stomach weakness?

Yes; H. L. Kramer, the man who originated Cascarets, has found a sure, quick, relief for indigestion, dyspepsia, "sour stomach," heart-burn, formation of painful gases, "bloating," etc., etc.

He calls his stomach relief EATONIC, and it certainly is making a wonderful record. Countless thousands of people who formerly approached their meals with dread, now eat their fill of their favorite foods without fear of the after-effects.

Mr. Kramer says: "My EATONIC tablets are the solution of the age-old problem of indigestion and all forms of stomach misery.

"EATONIC neutralizes the acids, that form the painful gases, "sweetens" the stomach, and gives the gastric juice a chance to do its work as it should.

"To promote appetite and aid digestion, take EATONIC tablets—one or two after each meal. They are perfectly harmless. Eat them just like candy.

"For distress after eating; sour, "gassy," acid stomach, vertigo, nausea and belching, and that wretched, puffed-up, "lumpy" feeling, after over-eating; there is nothing to compare with EATONIC Tablets."

All druggists sell EATONIC — 50c for a large box. Watch out for imitations. The genuine bears the name EATONIC on each tablet—guaranteed to do all that is claimed; or if your druggists don't carry EATONIC—send to Eatonic Remedy Co., Chicago, Ill.

Had a Grievance.

During vacation Charlie was invited to a birthday party by Lucy, one of his little mates. Forgetting the date, he went the day after. His mother dressed him up in his best clothes and started him off. When he rang the bell, Lucy's mother came to the door, and she said: "Why, Charlie, why didn't you come to Lucy's party yesterday?"

"I forgot it and thought it was today."

Going into the dining room, she came out with an orange and some candy, and said: "You must go home now. I am expecting company."

When he got home he looked so disconsolate his mother said: "Why did you come home so soon? Are you sick?"

"No. Lucy's mother didn't treat me with expect."

Gilded Chicken Feet.

It may be because of war economies and it may be "something else again," as Abe said to Mawrus, but it is a fact nevertheless that new and unusual fields are being invaded to furnish milady's headgear. At the same time splendid opportunities are offered to earnest nature students. One of the most novel skypiece ornaments seen here is gilded chicken feet. One woman appeared on Broadway the other day in a bonnet trimmed with English walnuts cracked open to show the kernels, while another woman wore a merry widow of single alligator skin garnished with a single gray squirrel. New York women seem to have lots of new millinery thoughts these days.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

PROUD WOLVES.

"Ah," said Daddy Wolf, "I heard something today which made my old wolf heart feel very happy."

"Tell me about it," said Mother Wolf. "I would like to be happy too."

"Aren't you happy?" asked Daddy Wolf in a most worried tone of voice. That is, Mother Wolf knew his voice sounded worried, though we might have said it sounded quite wild and ferocious.

"Oh, yes, to be sure I'm happy, my dear," said Mother Wolf.

"Then why did you say that you weren't happy?" asked Daddy Wolf.

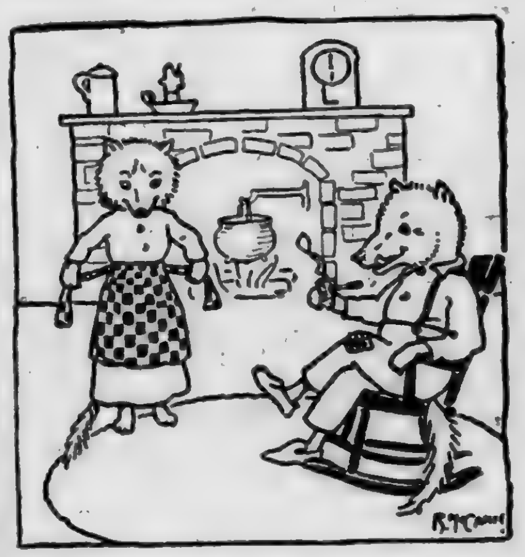
"My dear, my dear," said Mother Wolf, "you mustn't get so nervous and worried. I am very, very happy with such a dear and devoted husband."

"That is good," said Daddy Wolf, "and those words make me feel better. But why did you ask such a thing as to be told something to make you happy?"

"Well," said Mother Wolf, "I wasn't being as careful of the words I used as I might have been. You see, Daddy Wolf, you said that you had just heard something which had made you very happy, and so I said I would like to be happy too. I didn't get so excited because you said you had just been made happy. And certainly I have as much of a right to worry as you have."

"True, true," said Daddy Wolf, smiling. "We were both foolish in the way we used certain words. Stubborn little words as they were! They gave the wrong meaning and were glad of it!

"Of course, I see it all now. You knew I was happy," continued Daddy Wolf, "and I knew you were—but I got a little excited—foolish of me to be sure. You were simply anxious to hear the joke or the nice thing that had given another happy happening to the day."



She Got Up to Busy Herself About the Supper.

"Yes, another happy happening," said Mother Wolf, who was eager to hear what Daddy Wolf had to say. "Tell me, my dear, tell me all about it."

"I was listening to some men talking. They were walking through the woods and as I was sleepy and had fed well I didn't want to bother them—I was feeling contented and sleepy.

"The first man was talking of how expensive food was these days and how much they all had to spend for what they ate. He said that he tried to do all he could to keep the wolf from the door!"

"Whatever did he mean by that?" asked Mother Wolf. "Do tell me. That was a very strange speech for anyone to make, it seems to me. And we don't go around to people's doors. Too absurd. Well, continue, Daddy Wolf."

"Of course I had to listen to everything else they said so I could find out what they meant."

"And did you find out, Daddy Wolf?" asked Mother Wolf.

"I did indeed," he answered.

"Goodie," exclaimed Mother Wolf. "Let's hear it."

"He meant," continued Daddy Wolf, "that he tried to keep the wolf from the door—not in reality—but in make-believe."

"I don't understand," said Mother Wolf.

"Patience, dear mother, I will explain. He meant that he wanted to keep hunger from the door and he wanted to keep his family and himself from being too poor to buy good things to eat."

"So he didn't mean that we went around to people's doorsteps and rang the doorbells?" asked Mrs. Wolf.

"No," said Daddy Wolf, "he seemed to speak in that way as if everyone knew what such an expression meant. And it made me so especially happy because it showed what a fine reputation we have for a good appetite."

"You don't think it means that they think we're poor?" asked Mother Wolf doubtfully.

"Oh, no, my dear, I'm sure about it. We are always hungry and so are people who can't get enough to eat. But they can't always afford to eat—and we just have wonderful healthy wolf appetites.

"It shows the world thinks we're good and strong, yes, good and strong. It's a fine sign to have a good appetite—that is if one is a wolf."

"It's splendid to have such a world-wide reputation for health," said Mother Wolf, as she got up to busy herself at once about the supper, for Daddy Wolf was smacking his lips!

PRESIDENT ASKS PEOPLE TO SAVE

Requested to Buy Only Things Necessary to Health and Efficiency.

THRIFT PLEDGE ALSO ASKED

All Citizens Must Be Economically Adjusted to War Conditions If Nation Is to Play Its Part In Conflict.

Washington, D. C.—To save materials and labor for necessary war purposes, President Wilson appealed to Americans "to buy only those things which are essential to the individual health and efficiency," and to volunteer on or before June 28, National Thrift day, to invest systematically in War Savings and Thrift Stamps, or other government securities.

"This war is one of nations—not of armies," said the president, "and all of our 100,000,000 people must be economically and industrially adjusted to war conditions if this nation is to play its full part in the conflict.

Pledge Is Sought.

"The problem before us is not primarily a financial problem, but rather a problem of increased production of war essentials and the saving of the materials and the labor necessary for the support and equipment of our army and navy. Thoughtless expenditure of money for nonessentials uses up the labor of men, the products of the farm, mines, and factories, and overburdens transportation, all of which must be used to the utmost and at their best for war purposes.

"The great results which we seek can be obtained only by the participation of young and old in a national thrift movement. I therefore urge that our people everywhere pledge themselves, as suggested by the secretary of the treasury, to the practice of thrift; to serve the government to their utmost in increasing production in all fields necessary to the winning of the war; to conserve food and fuel and useful materials of every kind; to devote their labor only to the most necessary tasks, and to buy only those things which are essential to individual health and efficiency.

"Buy More U. S. Securities."

"The securities issued by the treasury department are, so many of them, within the reach of every one that the door of opportunity in this matter is wide open to all of us.

"I appeal to all who now own either Liberty bonds or War Savings stamps to continue to practice economy and thrift and to appeal to all who do not own government securities to do likewise and purchase them to the extent of their means. The man who buys government securities transfers the purchasing power of his money to the United States government until after this war, and to that same degree does not buy in competition with the government.

"I earnestly appeal to every man, woman and child to pledge themselves on or before June 28 to save constantly and to buy as regularly as possible the securities of the government.

"The 28th of June ends this special period of enlistment in the great volunteer army of production and saving here at home. May there be none unenlisted on that day."

FIND POTASH IN COLORARO

Richest Vein Ever Discovered in United States Uncovered by a Trapper.

Longmont, Colo.—What geologists say is the richest vein of potash ever uncovered in the United States has just been found in the foothills a few miles from this city. The strata was discovered by a trapper. It crops out of a rocky fault in the hills, is four feet thick at the surface and can be traced for almost half a mile. The depth of the vein has not ben determined. An assay shows the substance to run 95-100 of one per cent potash.

IS LATEST FAD WITH GIRLS

Sweetheart Monument at Camp Devens Is Rising by Leaps and Bounds.

Camp Devens, Mass.—The "sweetheart monument" at this cantonment is rising by leaps and bounds. Every girl who has a sweetheart among the troops here is supposed to add a "Rock of Love" to the monument. As the girls pass the cantonment they select a good-sized stone and carry it to the monument site, where they heave it onto the pile. It is expected that before the war ends a tremendous monument of "Love" will be raised here.

His Habit.

"That barber is a surly old fellow. Often he won't speak to me when I meet him on the street."

"That's only the force of habit. He's so used to cutting old acquaintances."

The Universal Excuse.

"How did you come to put anything so compromising as that down in black and white?"

"I didn't. My mother-in-law wrote it in my letter when I wasn't looking."

The Farmer's Share

Live stock is marketed from farmer to consumer at a lower cost than almost any other farm product.

The United States Department of agriculture reported in 1916 that the farmer gets for his cattle "approximately two-thirds to three-fourths" of the final retail price paid by the consumer for the resulting beef.

Under normal conditions, the farmer's share of retail prices of various farm products is approximately as follows:

Butter	71 per cent
CATTLE	66⅔ to 75 per cent
Eggs	65 per cent
Potatoes	55 per cent
Poultry	45 per cent
Fruits	35 per cent

The difference between farmer's price and retail price represents the necessary expenses of packing, freight and wholesale and retail distribution.

Swift & Company not only performs the manufacturing operations of preparing cattle for market in its well-equipped packing plants, but it pays the freight on meat to all parts of the United States, operates 500 branch distributing houses, and in most cases even delivers to the retail butcher. All this is done at an expense of less than 2 cents per pound, and at a profit of only about ¼ of a cent per pound of beef.

Large volume of business and expert management, make possible this indispensable service to the live-stock raiser and to the consumer, and make possible the larger proportion of retail prices received by farmers.

Visit Sons in Army

Will Curie and wife left a week ago Sunday for the East and arrived home the following Friday evening, during which time they visited their two sons in the army and relatives in Baltimore. They first stopped at Washington, D. C., where Elgin Curie is stationed. He is at Camp Foote, training for the engineers corps. He is just being inoculated into the army by being inoculated against disease and is "carrying arms" as a young soldier soldier should. In other words, he has been vaccinated and otherwise rendered immune against infectious diseases, and has two sore arms Otherwise, he is feeling well. They next stopped at Baltimore Here they visited Mr. and Mrs. John Skilling, the latter of whom is a sister of Mr. Curie. Then they proceeded to Ellis Island, New York city, where their son, Paul, is connected with the hospital service. Paul is as happy as a Sammy who drawn a bead on Kaiser Bill and is about to press the trigger of his gun—Army life agrees with him, as is proven by an increase of 18 pounds in weight since leaving St Joe. Mr. and Mrs. Curie enjoyed the trip very much.

Honor the Soldier Dead

Memorial day was observed at St. Joe in a fitting manner; and at the same time that flowers were placed on the graves of old soldiers, a like tribute was paid to deceased members of the Knights of Pythias and of the Odd Fellows, the two fraternal orders joining the observance of the day. The placing of the flowers was entrusted to a committee of little girls, one for each grave. At a signal given by a firing squad from the fire department, each one placed a floral wreath upon the grave entrusted to her. The program as given in last week's NEWS was carried out.

Take the poultry house, for instance. The question whether or not you are going to have eggs next winter depends upon the condition of the chicken coop. If you don't get eggs, don't blame the hens. It is a sad fact that some men dishonor Memorial day by getting drunk and lying around like swine, instead of honoring the day with their presence and help. This looks horrible to the public, when we think that nearly all the young manhood from 16 years old and upward have sacrificed their homes and all that they love next to God and their country, and some have gone overseas to do their bit. Some have already given their lives and others are wounded; and all this for their country—for even the drunken hulk that dares to pollute Memorial day by sucking the jug and tipping the bottle. It seems almost unbelievable, but it is a fact that Memorial day was kept in just that way by a couple or more in the little town of Newville. Indiana is beautifully dry, but the drought has not struck the little old town on the banks of the St. Joe river. Some ornery good-for-nothing finds a way to keep the town wet, so that those who choose to do so may disgrace themselves on the nation's great funeral day, and also at other times. Such men should be made go and share the hardships of the boys in the service. Old or young, let them try the hard work in the training camp or in the trenches, where the boys are making sacrifices for us, and where they are going to win liberty or die. If we have a dry state, why isn't it dry? Why is a man allowed twelve bottles of beer or one gallon of whiskey? How can we have a dry state under those circumstances? Why is not our law enforced? One can not report a man drunk unless one is close enough to smell his breath, and that is closer than any respectable person wants to go.

Out of No Man's Land

By
HARRY IRVING GREENE

Father:

This wonderful letter that I am writing you—a miracle letter. I was hurt, badly, but I am going to get well. It happened like this—you know I am not allowed to name place or date.

No Man's Land! We were raiding it by night, three of us—scouting, prowling. It was as dark as the dungeons of inferno, but often they sent up signal shells—roseate, bursting things that bathed all that evil land in a blood-red light. When their glare flared over us we had to stand as we were caught, hand or foot upraised—moveless objects in the red glow until the light snuffed out and all was dark once more.

We reached the German entanglements and began cutting them with our oiled clippers. We were careful, very careful, but we were not careful enough. They heard us. Over came two bombs.

The three of us went down in a row. Jack and Tom never knew what hit them. I was hurt too badly to be able to get up.

I lay there—all night—groaning—calling for help. Twenty feet away I could hear the boches in their trench laughing at me, cursing me.

Morning! My last. I could endure it no more. I was dying—bleeding. I said my last prayer.

And then!

Since the dawn of time I do not believe the world has seen a more glorious thing. From the hill tops our artillery laid down a box barrage fire and under it, heads raised like emperors and shoulders squared, came six men, stretcher bearers. As though they had been on parade they came forth in broad daylight into the very teeth of the enemy and picked up what was left of Jack, Tom and me.

As though we had been their own brothers they bore us back, swiftly, gently. Then do you know what those Huns did?

Opened fire on us—the dead, the bearers of the dead and a man who lay quivering at the threshold of death.

Two of the six bearers went down. The other four brought them back along with what was left of Jack, Tom and me.

And when I awoke in the hospital after the operation, deathly sick but back from the nightmare-land and with the sunlight upon me, whom do you think I saw bending over me, the red cross upon her sleeve, babbling, laughing, crying, kissing me?

JANE!

And I had never known that she had come over! Had never got her letter.

And we are here together and I am going to get well. An hour ago she held out her hand, and upon one finger was still the little ring I gave her before I left. I am going to have a stone set in it—you know what that means Though somewhat disfigured I am still in the ring.

And so is Jane. JIM.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

Officers of the J. P. Michael Company of Indianapolis signed admissions as having violated the food regulations knowingly, and were penalized in the sum of $3,000 which was distributed among the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and K. of C. equally. Upon receipt of their signed admissions, Dr. Barnard in addition to the penalty named above, revoked the firm's license as wholesalers and jobbers and permitted it to continue business on a suspension of the revocation.

E. A. Carman, a grocer of Lafayette, sold pancake flour as a wheat flour substitute and retailed flour at an excessive price, with the result that he was forced to suspend business for a week beginning May 13. The action was taken on the recommendation of the Tippecanoe county food administrator.

An investigation of prices for wheat flour substitutes is being made by Carl Simms, chairman of the Milling Division, at the direction of the Washington authorities. Millers will be required to report prices they are paying for cereals and the prices they are charging for the products thereof. Herbert Hoover, federal food administrator, in a special wire to Dr. Barnard, says: "Corn meal should be selling at the [illegible] door at not to exceed 25 per cent. less than wheat flour and white corn flour at from 10 to 15 per cent. below wheat flour." He holds there is no justification for the present high priced levels in this commodity in many sections and promises "summary action" where higher figure obtains.

No justification exists for an increased price of bread due to the high price of substitutes, Mr. Hoover asserts. He says the price tendency for corn meal and corn flour is and has been downward and that dealers who have been proposing to raise the price of bread must furnish a more sufficient reason or be liable to charges of profiteering.

The practice of shipping ice to communities, where adequate facilities for supplying the local demand already exist, is frowned on by the food administration as being wasteful of shipping facilities, storage and of the man power required for duplicated delivery service. The practice is said to obtain in Princeton, Martinsville and other communities where the food administrator will order it discontinued.

Offers of thrift stamp bonuses or any other combination for stimulating the sale of wheat flour, wheat products or sugar are taboo. The federal food administration announces that no variation or modification of the stringent regulations which provide for limited rations in both these staples, will be countenanced.

Go Over the Top

Spencer and Concord townships went over the top in the top in the recent War savings stamp drive. Spencer's quota was $1,862 50, and she raised $2,045 98, or $183.48 to the good. Concord's assessment, $2,412 50; amount raised, $2,976 17; excess, $563.67.

Red Cross Department

ELECTION OF OFFICERS

The time is very near at hand for the election of officers for the local chapter. The time and place will be announced in this department next week. By all means, let it be an election and not a reinstatement. It is true that the St. Joe branch has been an unusual success during the past year under the present leadership; but this is not a one-person war, and we firmly contend that the surest way to set the brakes on any organization is to keep, or endeavor to keep, one person or set of persons indefinitely at the head of the same. By the loyal support that the members have given to each movement, we know that there are other leaders in our territory who will also give their best efforts, their time and their money. Leaders, of course, there must be to any great undertaking, but they should be individuals who subordinate personal ambition to the good of the cause. Fortunately, our Red Cross leadership has been of the sort that inspired good fellowship and co-operation all along the line; and that tells the story of our success. Let us shift to new leaders—men or women whose brains are not fagged by too much planning during the past year. Then let us put our shoulders to the wheel and push.

We must have more sewing machines for the work room. Will not some one lend us a machine for two or three weeks?

Trees Hurt.

Dr. H. S. Jackson, plant pathologist of the agricultural experiment station at Lafayette, was called by wire to St. Joe last Friday, to inspect the Leighty orchard, and the decision of Mr. Jackson on the condition of the trees is that they are suffering from winter killing. To just what extent the damage is can not be determined until later on. An effort is being made to restore the trees to their usual vigorous condition.

WAR TALKS

By UNCLE DAN

Number Six

Billie and Jimmie Will Take Military Training.

"I am mighty sorry, Uncle Dan, that this is your last night with us. Can't you stay longer? We boys are having a peach of a time," said Billie.

"Well, if you get more out of it in the way of pleasure than I," said Uncle Dan, "you are going some."

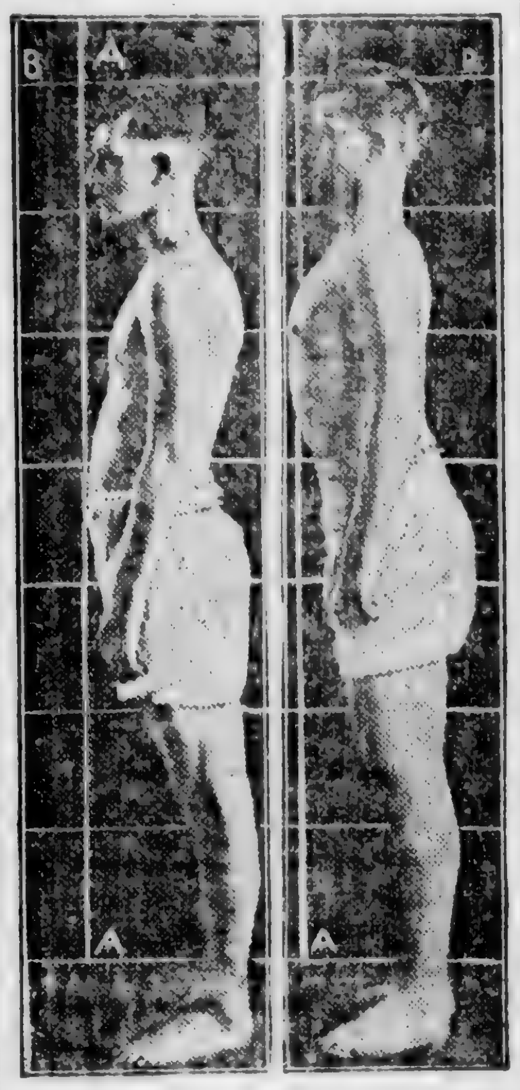
"Billie, I have been talking seriously with your father and mother about sending you to a military academy and they asked me to talk with you about it."

"Whoopee!" Billie screamed, like a wild Indian.

"Now, hold your horses," said Uncle Dan, "and listen to me. You know I sent my boy, Howard, to one of these schools for a year when he was about your age. He was narrow chested, stoop shouldered, rather loose jointed; he had the big head and needed discipline and physical development. He was growing fast and I wanted him to be strong physically."

"Say, Uncle Dan," said Billie, "I believe your description of Howard fits me pretty well, eh?"

"Well," said Uncle Dan, "to be frank I think it does; you need the same thing. Howard did not like it at first. I am told for a few weeks he had 'rough sledding,' but after he found that the only way was to obey orders, he caught the spirit of the institution and liked it. We did not see him for about six months, then he came home for a few days. We were astonished at his appearance. He had gained about 20 pounds in weight, his muscles were as hard as nails, he stood as straight as an arrow, he was courteous, considerate and manly. His awkwardness had disappeared. The change was wonderful and it was all to the good. Here is a photograph showing 'before and after taking,' and I am sure no patent medicine advertisement could beat it.



Note the result of six months of military training. Compare lines A-A and B-B in cut.

"Well, mother and I were delighted. That was ten years ago, and Howard says the year he spent at the military academy was the best year of his life.

"Now," said Uncle Dan, with great earnestness, "when such training does so much good, makes better citizens and at the same time fits a man to defend his country, why should not Uncle Sam furnish this training at the government's expense? The government has the right to call anyone to serve in case of war, and without training, a man is worth nothing as a soldier. Uncle Sam has splendid new training camps that will soon be available for the purpose, therefore, here is double reason why the Chamberlain bill for compulsory military training should be passed at once, so that every boy physically fit may have this training and not leave it for his parents to pay for. On account of the expense, not one boy in 50 can take the training now. I am glad that you can do so. These big crops and big prices, I find, make the farmers rather 'cocky,' and that the best is demanded by them."

Billie was up with the lark the next morning, more excited and enthusiastic than ever. He had a plan. He knew Jimmie owned a colt worth $100; that he would make almost another $100 on his potatoes if they turned out well, and that he had from his previous savings, bought a $100 Liberty bond. Billie's plan was to have Jimmie cash in and go with him. He was disappointed to find that Jimmie would still lack about $300 of having enough to see him through. His lip quivering, he said: "I'm mighty sorry to leave Jimmie."

Uncle Dan was silent a moment or two, then he asked Billie to go down to the orchard and get him some apples to eat on the train. While he was gone, it was arranged that Uncle Dan and Mr. and Mrs. Graham would advance the money necessary so that Jimmie could go. When Billie returned he was told about it. He ran to the 'phone and called Jimmie, saying: "Come on over, run just as fast as you can, I've got the greatest news you ever heard of."

DYNAMIC RED CROSS MONEY

By FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior.

OUT of the $100,000,000 given last June by the American people to the Red Cross, nearly one-half ($45,000,000) has gone to help the refugees, the orphaned children, the repatriates and wounded of the French, Belgian, Italian, Serbian, Roumanian and other peoples.

The Red Cross has spent more than $30,000,000 in France alone in the establishment of canteens for the poilus, the reconstruction of devasted districts, the care of homeless children, the housing of refugees, the sending of food, clothes and supplies to the sorely burdened civilian population. More than $2,000,000 has been spent in fighting tuberculosis, one of the worst of war's by-products; $1,149,000 has been expended for the shelter of war orphans. $2,709,736 has been appropriated for the reconstruction of villages and general relief work in the devasted areas.

In Italy a great work of relief was organized after the Austro-German drive of last fall, and the thousands of refugees that came pouring over the Po and the Piave were aided by a business-like and far-reaching supply and canteen service, improvised out of the existing organization. More than $3,000,000 was thus spent for Italy.

American funds will soon make the plain of Monastir fertile once more through the importation of seeds and agricultural implements. In this section of Serbia more than fifty thousand refugees have been on the verge of starvation for nearly two years.

It should be a source of daily pride to every American that our own Red Cross is adding new glories to the American Name in the Mother Continent. Our full support is essential if its present mighty work of succor and human brotherhood is to be continued on an ever increasing scale.

The New Power in the Ukraine

By GIDEON HOB
Of The Vigilantes

The suspicion that the newly elected Republic of the Ukraine is merely a mask for actual German control and exploitation of that country is borne out by many facts coming to light. It is only what one might expect, judging by our knowledge of German methods as revealed in the last few years—methods which, as we now realize, have been religiously followed by generations of Germans in their set purpose of pillaging the world.

Among the most powerful and incessantly active organizations for carrying out these schemes of the robber Teutons have been the German steamship companies with their agencies all over the world. Their malign intrigues have been unscrupulous, tireless and backed by unlimited means placed at their disposal by Berlin. That all European nations have known of these plots, or at least have suffered from them, is now beyond question. That we in America have been the foolish dupes of these cunning thieves, many people are still too simple to credit.

A forceful presentation of the case against the German steamship companies, and the whole German system of espionage, propaganda and deliberate intrigue is made by Theodore Kahn of Lemberg. Mr. Kahn shows that the German steamship organization has been from its very beginning a part of the German military machine.

"It has shaped itself," he says, "in the different countries and conspired slowly and for some decades in silence and secrecy, employing for its purpose in every country the most monumental intriguers of a particularly heinous type. The offices of the German steamship companies were centers of the German espionage system. The agents of the German lines . . . were drilled and directed from a military establishment controlled by an irresponsible government.

"Their meshes of imperial propaganda and subsidies spread to all countries. Many of the dupes of their activities regarded the news set afloat by them as gospel truth. The agencies of these companies were an important part of the German spy system, whose activities were classified under various heads; military, naval, diplomatic, commercial and agents provacateurs. In the offices of Balin and Heinecken nearly every plot for German expansion has been hatched. . . .

"Many of the different patriotic national religious and commercial societies, naval leagues, leagues of Truth, bowling clubs, singing societies, etc., throughout Galicia, Bukowina and European Russia, have been secret offices of the German Steamship companies where propaganda was carried on under the protection of national law with the intention to influence lawmakers and rulers. . . .

"An important factor in the league of these societies were the many Austrian army officers who have been stationed in the border towns of Galicia and the Bukowina. The greater part of Austrian army officers are burdened with heavy debts. Many of the garrisons situated on the borders of Austria and Russia have been "Strafgarnisonen" (punishment garrisons) where officers whose pay has been confiscated have been sent. Therefore it is not surprising that they have been easily influenced by the sound of gold. They have secretly acted as agents for the German steamship companies. These army officers as well as officials of the Austrian government, professors, school teachers, etc., worked and intrigued together wherever they could."

The activities of these devotees and servants of kaiserism have been many and varied, but always with the one end in view.

"It was the task of these votaries to prepare calmly and methodically the population for any plan hatched in the war ministry, to influence and slacken any vigilance directed against German interests, to safeguard German monopolies in foreign countries, to sign 'Authoritative Opinions' when needed. Their activities included—to start and maintain the necessary crusade whenever required by their paymasters, to arouse enthusiasm for war in one country, to preach peace and good faith in another; to weave new intrigues, to place interpellation in foreign parliaments, to see to publication of memorandums, to address applications and petitions to the authorities, to invent slanderous and malicious tales, to circulate and hold discussions in public, to foster strikes, to inflame through publications and newspapers the public mind. And through this system they bamboozled the public in a direction desired, placing a perpetual screen before the people and reality."

It is interesting to note in connection with Germany's wail for freedom of the seas, that since German confederation no foreign vessels have been admitted to German ports except under vexatious restrictions, and that German steamship companies have always prevented the working of other lines in continental Europe, so far as they could. Third-class passengers, for instance, were not allowed to pass through Germany if they wished to sail by non-German lines.

One of the favorite plans of Germanizing European countries is simply to make life unbearable for non-German races under German rule, to force them to emigrate, and then to plant German colonists in their abandoned provinces. Besides the 28,000,000 Ukrainians in Russia there are some 4,000,000 Ukrainians living under Austrian rule, where they are known as Ruthenians.

"With the help of the Austrian government, German settlers have penetrated to the different Slav provinces, and 250,000 German peasants reside in Galicia. This colonization has been carried on for years methodically and noiselessly. German colonists are now firmly established as far east as Bosnia, where there are 54 different German colonies. German settlers received from the government in Bosnia lands almost free, loans without interest, gratuitous seed and wood, and subsidies for building houses. These facts are known to but few even in Austria, although this colonization always had a very important political significance. The settling of Germans in Hungary where they are known as 'Schwabs,' was started by Empress Maria Theresa in 1764. She sent 40,000 German peasants to Hungary, colonizing them near the Roumanian borders. Today these settlers in Hungary have increased to almost 1,000,000."

The many thousand Ruthenians in Canada and the United States, from the provinces of Austria, are wholly in sympathy with the allies and entirely emancipated from any allegiance to the former German tyrants. That their fellow Slavs in the Ukraine have any sympathy with the kaiser and his methods is not to be believed. As a matter of fact the president of the new Republic of Ukrainia, Michael Krushevsky of Lemberg, was a member of the German general staff.

THE DAY

By JULIET WILBOR TOMPKINS of the Vigilantes.

It will come some day—do you realize it? On some one glorious day the enemy will cry, "Kamerad!" in good earnest, and there will be peace.

Picture that day. The crowds in the streets are going about their business, the Red Cross rooms are humming with work, the thousand war activities are grinding at full speed, every mother and father is facing the morning with a heart braced for loss, every loyal citizen is at his post of service; and suddenly the news!

The crowded avenues turn white; all up and down their length they have blossomed white with the open newspapers that have magically sprung into every one's outstretched hands. Everybody in the long, stopped stream of humanity holds a newspaper or reads his neighbor's; everybody knows everybody, shares with everybody; strange hands clasp, strange eyes, meeting, overflow; and there is just one first thought, not triumph, nor democracy, but —"Those boys—those good boys—they can come home!" And the second thought will be, "We've done it! We've put it through!"

And then, standing there, they begin to sing, the men with bared heads; they send up such a song as the skies have never heard since time was—"Glory, glory, hallelujah!"—"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!" The melting pot is a slow process—that song will melt all into blood brothers at the first chord. Oh, how they will sing, those standing men and women! And then with one impulse they will surge into the churches, into the cathedrals—for when man has been granted the supreme boon, he must fall on his knees, whether he knows God or not. And no one who rises up from that silence will ever lose its mighty vibration.

That day is not a vision; it is coming as surely as tomorrow. Then will you have it tomorrow? Or will you put it off for four more bleeding years? It is in your hands. Every effort, every dollar, you give to service, shortens the waiting. If all gave all they could, the day could not hold back another hour. When you buy the things you most want, you are not conscious of sacrifice in paying the sum demanded. Fix your eyes on the day—the day when the avenues will suddenly blossom white with the news of peace—and you will want that with so burning an urgency that you will come running with its price.

HATS OFF TO THIS MOTHER!

By HERMANN HAGEDORN of the Vigilantes.

Regimental Sergt. Maj. William B. Jenkins, Three Hundred and Fourth field artillery, is dead at Camp Upton, but his soul is marching on. It is a question indeed whether in death he may not do more to defeat the Germans than he could ever have done in life. For his death has brought from his mother an utterance of stirring patriotism that is sure to rouse to greater effort the defenders of America abroad and at home.

Sergeant Major Jenkins came from Holladay, Tenn., and it is from there that his mother, Mrs. M. E. Jenkins, writes as follows to Maj. J. D. Whitman:

"Allow me as one who has lived until I am now an old woman to express to you my thanks and appreciation for your many courtesies to me as mother of Sergt. Maj. William B. Jenkins. I had hoped my boy would get his chance in France, but it was not to be, so I am as submissive to his death as if he had died in the trenches in Europe. Please accept my thanks for all your kindness and to any of his comrades that were with him in his sickness. With a sad heart I dictate these lines, but with a quickening pulse and an accelerated being I look forward to the day when victory shall come to the brave boys who are giving their lives for our beloved land. I shall ever love a soldier boy. May God's blessing be on you."

CITY MEN AS FARM HELPERS

The Service That Some City Men Rendered Last Year in Saving the Potato Crop Can Be Duplicated Now in Grain Fields, on Truck Farms, and Elsewhere.

PEOPLE IN TOWN TO HELP FARMER

Farm Labor Shortage Such That Heroic Measures Are Necessary to Save Crops.

CLUB CO-OPERATION IS NEED

Opportunity for City Men to Repay to Nation a Part of Debt They Owe the Farm—What Clarence Ousley Has to Say.

Suppose you close your store next Tuesday—lock it up and go away all day—how much will you lose? Something, certainly. But suppose, tomorrow morning, you display placards over every counter telling your customers that the store will not be open Tuesday, that the entire sales force is going to put in the day fighting for the freedom of America, and ask them to buy on Monday what they need for Tuesday. How much would you lose then, even if your competitor on the next corner should keep open all day and hustle for business? A little, possibly. But don't you think it would be bread upon the water, that would return to you, and after not so many days, at that? Don't you believe that, for every customer of yours who went to trade with your competitor during the day you were closed, three of his would come to trade with you within the week?

Must Fight in Furrows.

Urban people have got to do some fighting for freedom in the furrows this spring, summer and fall. They have got to help the country win the war by helping the farmer produce food—which means that they will be helping themselves most of all.

With the exception of a few mining and manufacturing centers, the villages, towns and cities of 100,000 or less are mainly dependent for their success on the prosperity of the farming communities around them. They have good times or hard times in proportion as the farming operations in their trade territory succeed or fail. In normal times, even, sensible self-interest prompts the business man to encourage and aid the farmer. Now, in the stress of war, the prompting to help the farmer comes hardly less from good business judgment than from patriotic impulse.

Here is the situation: The farmers will need additional labor to help cultivate and harvest the crops they have planted. This situation cannot be met by legislation. The task imposed upon the Israelites by Pharaoh, to make bricks without straw, was an easy job compared with the task of making labor by law. In large measure, the needed labor must come from the people in towns whose business does not have to be kept humming every minute.

Men Who Were Farm Boys.

You know, a very large proportion of business men have been farm boys. Just make a mental canvass of the men in your block or your building. You remember when they came in green from the country, sunburned and hard as hickory. The fact that they are now among the best business men in town does not prove that they couldn't still do good farmwork. Why, not so long ago, when Bill Brown rushed in to get a few balls of binder twine, and to put a little extra money in the bank and chaffed you about the ease of your job and how soft you were, you probably boasted that you could still shock wheat or walk between the plow handles with the best of them. Of course you could—and of course you can. Maybe you can't hold it as long as some of them, but you can do it as well. All right. The time has come for you to do it. You never made a boast that you couldn't back up, did you?

If your town falls down on this matter, the country will suffer—a little. It will not suffer a great deal, because most of the towns are not going to fall down on it. But if your town falls down on this matter, your town will suffer more than a little. You know what happens to trade when the farmers all around are short on crops and have barely enough money to scrimp by with.

Commercial Clubs Should Act.

Take the matter up at the next meeting of the commercial club or board of trade. Or, better still, call a special meeting. You have influence enough to do it or have it done. Here is what Clarence Ousley, assistant secretary of agriculture of the United States, says about it:

"To render this assistance to the farmer and to the nation, the local commercial club or business men's association should appoint a labor representative or a small and active committee on farm labor. This labor representative or committee should make a canvass of the business men, clerks and others in the town who have had farm experience and who are willing to close or leave their places of business on certain days or afternoons, or for long periods, and go out on the neighboring farms to help. This labor representative or committee should either get in touch with the farmers themselves or with an agent representing the farmers, such as the master of the Grange, the president of the union, the manager of the co-operative creamery or store, or the county agricultural agent, and ascertain just how many men each farmer can use to advantage during good weather and particularly during certain rush periods in planting, cultivating, or harvesting. With this information on the farm labor needs and the number of workers available, the committee can assign the men who have volunteered to help in this emergency to the various farms in the neighborhood."

FARM AND CITY MAN

Spend five minutes thinking over what you owe to the farm.

Very likely it gave you the stamina and strength of character that has made you a success in the business world. Certainly, it has given those things to some of the men upon whom you rely for maintaining that success.

In one way or another, directly or indirectly, it gives you a large part, probably the bulk, of your business.

Without its contribution of food, neither your home nor your business house could continue in existence.

That is what the farm means and has meant to most city men. You will know best just what it means to you.

Now, having thought it over, remember that the farm is in such dire need of labor as it has never known before.

And get ready to do what you can toward repaying the debt you owe the farm—not repaying it so much to the farm, either, as paying it to your country in a genuinely patriotic service.

Farm Labor Problem.

The farm labor problem is one that affects not the farmer alone.

It is a problem that affects the city man and in the solution of which the city man must help.

Study the problem as it applies to the farming communities on which you and your business depend for the largest measure of success.

Write to the department of agriculture, Washington, D. C., for a copy of "The Farm Labor Problem—Manpower Sufficient if Properly Mobilized by Co-operation and Community Action."

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

LABOR WAKING UP TO THE ADVANTAGES OF PROHIBITION.

Speaking of the marked benefits that have come to wage earners from statewide prohibition, Mr. Clint C. Houston, editor of the Denver Labor Bulletin says:

"Since the saloons were closed the money which went to the brewing and liquor interests, now goes to the families. The saloon, which was once heralded as 'the poor man's club' is now known to have been his worst enemy. I do not believe that 15 per cent of the wage-earners of Colorado would ever again vote to re-establish the saloon. In fact, a census which I caused to be made of three building trades unions, one each in Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, shows that when the beer amendment was up for adoption in 1916, only about 5 per cent in these three communities voted for it.

"If the wage-earners throughout the nation can be made to realize what a drain upon their incomes is removed by the passing of the saloon and how their own self-respect and the respect of others is enhanced thereby, they will not only assist in the elimination of the saloon from the various states yet licensing the liquor traffic, but will give support to the national prohibition amendment."

SALOONKEEPER NOT TREATED FAIRLY

A farmer told me that soon after he moved from the country into a little town a man came to him and wanted him to sign a petition for a saloon in his town, and he said, "No I won't sign it," and the man said, "Why?" He said, "Because they don't treat the saloonkeeper fairly." Now this applicant for a license had had many objections made to signing a petition, but never had one of this kind been made before, and so he said, "What do you mean by that?" Here is the explanation: "You think that your saloon will help the town, don't you?" "Yes, sir." "You think that it will bring business and improved trade, don't you?" "Yes, sir." "Well, now, if that saloon will do what you say it will do, if it will bring trade and improve business, and help the town, they ought to give you a bounty for starting that saloon to help the town and not make you pay a big tax for helping the town with the saloon." Can you answer the logic of that man's argument?—William Jennings Bryan.

"FOOD WILL WIN THE WAR."

When the senate's committee on agriculture was investigating the subject of foodstuffs, the liquor men denied that they consumed as much as the prohibitionists said they did. They declared that they used only one per cent of the grain.

All right, let's take them at their word.

One per cent of the grain will feed one per cent of the people. This means 1,000,000 people, because there are 100,000,000 of us in this country.

We shall probably send 1,000,000 soldiers to France.

This means that the liquor men will have been wasting enough foodstuffs to feed every last man who goes to the trenches!

If food will win the war—as Hoover says—then the liquor men have a fearful responsibility resting upon them when they deliberately waste the food which would give life and strength to our soldiers.

But what about the man whose vote gives the liquor men the right to do this? Every vote for the drys will help save the soldiers at the front.—"Strengthen America" Campaign Committee.

DR. IRVING FISHER ON MODERATE DRINKING.

"The present movement for prohibition is making it clear that moderate drinking is a fallacy. Alcohol is always a narcotic. It paralyzes the brake on the heart beat. The judgment is made incapable of detecting the camouflage. It has been scientifically shown that the typesettter who takes one glass of beer is, to that extent, one-glass-of-beer drunk. . . . The men and women who advocate moderation are responsible for much heavy drinking. The stamp of approval in the drawing-room makes alcohol a desirable commodity among the working class. . . . Alcohol consumes 5½ per cent of the total food values of the United States and 13 per cent of our breadstuffs. It conscripts fuel, transportation—the little neck of the bottle—and man-power. . . . If prohibition is good for wartime, it is better for peace, for that is a longer time. There is then time to establish for the nation the good habits formed in time of war."

MUST HAVE BOYS OR CLOSE UP.

What is your raw material, saloons? American boys. Say, I would not give one boy for all the saloons this side of h——. And they have to have 2,000,000 boys every generation. And then you tell me you are a man when you will vote for an institution like that. What do you want to do, pay taxes in money or in boys?—Billy Sunday.

"There is something more in patriotism than that which is measured by a court. That sort of patriotism is not worth having."—W. J. Bryan.

WESTERN CANADA'S CROPS

Got an Excellent Start. Big Yields Now Assured.

Never in the history of Western Canada did the seed enter the ground under more favorable conditions. The weather during the month of April was perfect for seeding operations, and from early morning until late at night the seeders were at work, and every acre that could be profitably sown was placed under requisition. Farmers entered heart and soul into the campaign of greater production. There was the time and the opportunity for careful preparation, and as a consequence with favorable weather from now on there will be a vastly increased yield. They realized it was a duty they owed to humanity to produce all that they could on the land, not only this year but next as well. In addition to the patriotic aspect, they are aware that the more they produce the greater will be their own return in dollars and cents.

In many districts wheat seeding was completed by the 1st of May, after which date oats and barley on larger acreages than usual were planted.

As has been said, favorable weather conditions made possible excellent seed-bed preparation, and the seed has gone into the ground in unusually good shape. The available moisture in the soil has been added to by rains, which have not been so heavy, however, as to interfere long with the work in the fields. The grain is germinating readily, and on many fields the young green blades of the cereal are already showing.

An optimistic feeling prevails among farmers that Western Canada will reap a record harvest. If the season from now on is as favorable as it has begun, these hopes should be realized. Mr. J. D. McGregor of the Federal Food Board, who is also an old and successful farmer in Western Canada, asserted a few days ago at Calgary that crop conditions throughout the Prairie Provinces were excellent. "Speaking generally," he said, "the crops have never gone into the ground in better shape than this year, and with an even break of luck as far as the weather is concerned, there should be an enormous crop." His present duties in connection with the Food Control Board, taking him in all parts of the West, Mr. McGregor has exceptional opportunities of observing conditions all over the country.—Advertisement.

Medicine for the Boche.

The Woolwich arsenal film was evidently planned by a competent organizer. It gives an extremely comprehensive picture of the work carried out under war conditions, and is of special interest from the way in which it shows the whole of a complicated and lengthy process, as, for instance, the making of a 15-pounder cartridge from the time when the molten brass is run from the molds until the final polishing of the finished case. Perhaps the predominating impression on the mind of the present writer was the magnificent work which is being done by women of all ages in preparing medicine for the Boche.—London Globe.

Heals Running Sores and Conquers Piles.

Also Stops Itching of Eczema as Soon as Applied.

"I feel it my duty to write you a letter of thanks for your wonderful Peterson's Ointment. I had a running sore on my left leg for one year. I began to use Peterson's Ointment three weeks ago and now it is healed."—A. C. Gilbrath, 703 Reed St., Erie, Pa.

I'd rather get a letter like that, says Peterson, than have John D. Rockefeller give me a thousand dollars. It does me a lot of good to be able to be of use to my fellow men.

For years I have been selling through druggists a large box of PETERSON'S OINTMENT for a trifle. The healing power of this ointment is marvelous. Eczema goes in a few days. Old sores heal up like magic; piles that other remedies do not seem to even relieve are speedily conquered. Pimples and nasty blackheads disappear in a week. 30 cents a box.

Artificial Gems.

Nearly all artificial gems—that is to say, stones that are really made by artificial means—are compounds of alum crystallized under special conditions. The metallic salts that are added during fusion determine whether the stones produced shall be sapphires, rubies, oriental topazes, amethysts or emeralds.

"OVER THE TOP"

By An American Soldier Who Went

Arthur Guy Empey

Machine Gunner, Serving in France

Copyright 1917, by Arthur Guy Empey

EMPEY GIVES A DESCRIPTION OF THE WORK ON OBSERVATION POST DUTY.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Chaplain distinguishes himself by rescuing wounded men under hot fire. With pick and shovel Empey has experience as a trench digger in No Man's Land. Exciting experience on listening post detail.

"I came out with the first expeditionary force, and, like all the rest, thought we would have the enemy licked in jig time, and be able to eat Christmas dinner at home. Well, so far, I have eaten two Christmas dinners in the trenches, and am liable to eat two more, the way things are pointing. That is, if Fritz don't drop a 'whizz-bang' on me, and send me to Blighty. Sometimes I wish I would get hit, because it's no great picnic out here, and twenty-two months of it makes you fed up.

"It's fairly cushy now compared to what it used to be, although I admit this trench is a trifle rough. Now, we send over five shells to their one. We are getting our own back, but in the early days it was different. Then you had to take everything without reply. In fact, we would get twenty shells in return for every one we sent over. Fritz seemed to enjoy it, but we British didn't; we were the sufferers. Just one casualty after another. Sometimes whole platoons would disappear, especially when a 'Jack Johnson' plunked into their middle. It got so bad that a fellow, when writing home, wouldn't ask for any cigarettes to be sent out, because he was afraid he wouldn't be there to receive them.

"After the drive to Paris was turned back, trench warfare started. Our general grabbed a map, drew a pencil across it, and said, 'Dig here.' Then he went back to his tea, and Tommy armed himself with a pick and shovel and started digging. He's been digging ever since.

"Of course we dug those trenches at night, but it was hot work, what with the rifle and machine-gun fire. The stretcher bearers worked harder than the diggers.

"Those trenches, bloomin' ditches, I call them, were nightmares. They were only about five feet deep, and you used to get the backache from bending down. It wasn't exactly safe to stand upright, either, because as soon as your napper showed over the top a bullet would bounce off it, or else come so close it would make your hair stand.

"We used to fill sandbags and stick them on top of the parapet to make it higher, but no use; they would be there about an hour and then Fritz would turn loose and blow them to bits. My neck used to be sore from ducking shells and bullets.

"Where my battery was stationed a hasty trench had been dug, which the boys nicknamed 'Suicide ditch,' and, believe me, Yank, this was the original 'Suicide ditch.' All the others are imitations.

"When a fellow went into that trench it was an even gamble that he would come out on a stretcher. At one time a Scotch battalion held it, and when they heard the betting was even money that they'd come out on stretchers, they grabbed all the bets in sight. Like a lot of bally idiots, several of the battery men fell for their game, and put up real money. The 'Jocks' suffered a lot of casualties, and the prospects looked bright for the battery men to collect some easy money. So when the battalion was relieved the gamblers lined up. Several 'Jocks' got their money for emerging safely, but the ones who clicked it weren't there to pay. The artillerymen had never thought it out that way. Those Scotties were bound to be sure winners, no matter how the wind blew. So take a tip from me, never bet with a Scottie, 'cause you'll lose money.

"At one part of our trench where a communication trench joined the front line a Tommy had stuck up a wooden signpost with three hands or arms on it. One of the hands, pointing to the German lines, read, 'To Berlin;' the one pointing down the communication trench read, 'To Blighty,' while the other said, 'Suicide Ditch, Change Here for Stretchers.'

"Farther down from this guide post the trench ran through an old orchard. On the edge of this orchard our battery had constructed an advanced observation post. The trees screened it from the enemy airmen and the roof was turfed. It wasn't cushy like ours, no timber or concrete re-enforcements, just walls of sandbags. From it a splendid view of the German lines could be obtained. This post wasn't exactly safe. It was a hot corner, shells plunking all around, and the bullets cutting leaves off the trees. Many a time when relieving the signaler at the 'phone, I had to crawl on my belly like a worm to keep from being hit.

"It was an observation post sure enough. That's all the use it was. Just observe all day, but never a message back for our battery to open up. You see, at this point of the line there were strict orders not to fire a shell, unless specially ordered to do so from brigade headquarters. Blime me, if anyone disobeyed that command, our general—yes, it was Old Pepper—would have court-martialed the whole expeditionary force. Nobody went out of their way to disobey Old Pepper in those days, because he couldn't be called a parson; he was more like a pirate. If at any time the devil should feel lonely and sigh for a proper mate, Old Pepper would get the first call. Facing the Germans wasn't half bad compared with an interview with that old firebrand.

"If a company or battalion should give way a few yards against a superior force of Boches, Old Pepper would send for the commanding officer. In about half an hour the officer would come back with his face the color of a brick, and in a few hours what was left of his command would be holding their original position.

"I have seen an officer who wouldn't say d——n for a thousand quid spend five minutes with the old boy, and when he returned the flow of language from his lips would make a navvy blush for shame.

One of the Big Guns Barking.

"What I am going to tell you is how two of us put it over on the old scamp, and got away with it. It was a risky thing, too, because Old Pepper wouldn't have been exactly mild with us if he had got next to the game.

"Me and my mate, a lad named Harry Cassell, a bombardier in D 238 battery, or lance corporal, as you call it in the infantry, used to relieve the telephonists. We would do two hours on and four off. I would be on duty in the advanced observation post, while he would be at the other end of the wire in the battery dugout signaling station. We were supposed to send through orders for the battery to fire when ordered to do so by the observation officer in the advanced post. But very few messages were sent. It was only in case of an actual attack that we would get a chance to earn our 'two and six' a day. You see, Old Pepper had issued orders not to fire except when the orders came from him. And with Old Pepper orders is orders, and made to obey.

"The Germans must have known about these orders, for even in the day their transports and troops used to expose themselves as if they were on parade. This sure got up our nose, sitting there day after day, with fine targets in front of us but unable to send over a shell. We heartily cussed Old Pepper, his orders, the government, the people at home, and everything in general. But the Boches didn't mind cussing, and got very careless. Blime me, they were bally insulting. Used to, when using a certain road, throw their caps into the air as a taunt at our helplessness.

"Cassell had been a telegrapher in civil life and joined up when war was declared. As for me, I knew Morse, learned it at the signalers' school back in 1910. With an officer in the observation post, we could not carry on the kind of conversation that's usual between two mates, so we used the Morse code. To send, one of us would tap the transmitter with his finger nails, and the one on the other end would get it through the receiver. Many an hour was whiled away in this manner passing compliments back and forth.

"In the observation post the officer used to sit for hours with a powerful pair of field glasses to his eyes. Through a cleverly concealed loophole he would scan the ground behind the German trenches, looking for targets and finding many. This officer, Captain A—— by name, had a habit of talking out loud to himself. Sometimes he would vent his opinion, same as a common private does when he's wrought up. Once upon a time the captain had been on Old Pepper's staff, so he could cuss and blind in the most approved style. Got to be sort of a habit with him.

"About six thousand yards from us, behind the German lines, was a road in plain view of our post. For the last three days Fritz had brought companies of troops down this road in broad daylight. They were never shelled. Whenever this happened the captain would froth at the mouth and let out a volume of Old Pepper's religion which used to make me love him.

"Every battery has a range chart on which distinctive landmarks are noted, with the range for each. These landmarks are called targets, and are numbered. On our battery's chart, that road was called 'Target 17, Range 6000, 8 degrees 30 minutes left.' D 238 battery consisted of four '4.5' howitzers, and fired a 35-pound H. E. shell. As you know, H. E. means 'high explosive.' I don't like bumming up my own battery, but we had a record in the division for direct hits, and our boys were just pining away for a chance to exhibit their skill in the eyes of Fritz.

"On the afternoon of the fourth day of Fritz' contemptuous use of the road mentioned the captain and I were at our posts as usual. Fritz was strafeing us pretty rough, just like he's doing now. The shells were playing leapfrog all through that orchard.

"I was carrying on a conversation in our 'tap' code with Cassell at the other end. It ran something like this:

"'Say, Cassell, how would you like to be in the saloon bar of the King's Arms down Rye lane with a bottle of Bass in front of you, and that blonde barmaid waiting to fill 'em up again?'

The next installment relates how two artillerymen "put one over" on Old Pepper.

Use for Clothespins.

Clothespins make an excellent plaything for babies. They can be used for babies or soldiers, or to make fences, trees, log houses and many other interesting things. Playthings that can be taken apart and put together again are good to have; also blocks with which the child can build all kinds of objects—engines that he can push along the floor, balls to bounce and throw, doll carriages, washing sets, etc. Dolls with clothes that button and unbutton and come off may be used to teach the children how to dress and undress themselves.

Helping the Meat and Milk Supply

(Special Information Service, United States Department of Agriculture.)

SAFEGUARDING CANNED MEATS

These Meat Products Are Canned Under Unusual War-Time Precautions.

RULES MADE FOR PACKING HOUSES

Summary of What War Has Done for Benefit of Consumers of Animal Products.

DOWNFALL OF SLACKER CAN

Government Has Refused to Tolerate Use of Tin for Canning Air—Poisonous Disinfectants Are Also Forbidden.

While the various governmental agencies have always taken more than ordinary percautions to safeguard consumers against any evils that might result from canned meats, contingencies arising out of the present state of war have resulted in even more perfect protection for soldiers and civilian alike.

An old evil in the canning industry was what has recently been called the "slacker can." It was not able to survive the state of war. The partly filled can, like other slackers, had to go. The mere bringing of cans up to the low net-content weight printed on their labels is no longer all that is required. The can must be filled. The war brought a shortage of tin and the government refused to tolerate the use of tin for canning air.

Poisonous Disinfectants Forbidden.

Extraordinary precautions are being taken also in other particulars. A recent regulatory announcement from the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, forbids the keeping of such odorless poisons as bichloride of mercury in packing houses and directs that hot water containing approximately 1 per cent of salsoda (sodium carbonate) shall be used for disinfecting all instruments.

The bureau has supplied all stations with special thermometers for making temperature tests of meats, and inspectors are instructed to closely supervise the handling of all meats and products of a kind prepared customarily to be eaten without cooking and which contain any muscle tissue. The inspectors are instructed also to see that all meats which are not rendered into lard or tallow and which are utilized for food purposes shall be sterilized by heating so that all portions of the meat are brought to a temperature of 170 degrees Fahrenheit and maintained at this temperature for not less than 30 minutes.

Different Cooking Methods.

The bureau of animal industry does not specify the cooking necessary to insure that all parts of the meat are heated to the minimum temperature. That was regarded as impracticable on account of the fact that different methods of cooking are used in different packing establishments for various weights of products. The inspectors are instructed to apply good judgment to each individual case, to make the necessary test, to determine the facts and to be guided accordingly.

Making Meat by Dipping Ticks.

In the campaign to "help the nation's meat and milk supply," a million and a quarter head of cattle in 275 counties of the Southern states are making fortnightly pilgrimages to the dipping vats. There are 23,000 of these vats in active operation—enough, if the Huns were attempting an invasion of America by way of the gulf, to make a solid concrete barrier from New Orleans to Pensacola. Operating the vats are 1,565 federal, state and county employees—enough to place a guard every 330 feet along that barrier; enough, if armed with machine guns, to hold it against any ordinary attack.

That is the United States army of invasion in tick territory, the army of extermination of the cattle fever tick. As a result of this year's campaign, 100,000 more square miles of territory will be freed from the tick and an almost incalculable quantity of meat and milk added to the national production. The campaign needs, of course, the co-operation of every person who owns cattle in infested territory. There are left only a very few men who try to hold out against tick-eradication methods.

OUR BOYS "OVER THERE."

In a very little while now there will be a million American boys on the firing line in France and Flanders.

Already there are some millions of British and French boys on that line—boys who have been there, some of them, for four years, offering their lives in defense of your home quite as much as of their own, warding off the atrocities of the Boche brutes from your loved ones, though they have not been quite able to ward them off from their own mothers and sisters.

All of those boys, ours and others, will remain there, and the cry "They shall not pass!" will be made good—so long as the flow of American meats across the ocean is ample and uninterrupted.

The requirement of us at home is a very simple requirement.

It does not limit us in any way to a meatless diet. It leaves us large choice of very excellent meats.

But it does demand that we eat less of beef, no canned beef, and not too much of any meat that is at all suitable for overseas.

Of course, none of us would deliberately fail to do that little bit for the men who are sacrificing for us their treasure of youth and hope and love. No American worthy the name exalts his belly above the sacred things of home and country.

Only some of us might be thoughtless.

Therefore take thought.

Fine Barns Not Needed.

As they trekked down the lane fron the barn to the pasture "Pied" may have tossed her horns and sung to "Bossie," "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls." But that dream, built up for dairy cows by a lot of elaborate designers of fine barns, is dissipated by experts of the United States department of agriculture in a bulletin entitled "The Four Essential Factors in the Production of Milk of Low Bacterial Count." It gives the results of a series of experiments in which milk of low bacterial count was produced in an experimental barn under conditions similar to those on the average low-grade farm. The three essential factors were found to be: Sterilized utensils, clean cows, small-top pails. A fourth factor necessary to keep the count low is holding the milk at a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit or lower. All of these factors, it is pointed out, may be operative in an ordinary barn just as much as in the "marble hall" type.

Watch Stock for Fly Injury.

To prevent fly pests of live stock from causing serious injury, the stock should be carefully watched and when the presence of maggots is discovered in wounds or in soiled wool, appropriate remedy should be applied. Chloroform is the best remedy to kill maggots in wounds. As the wound is cleansed some effective fly repellent such as pine tar should be smeared over the wound and about its edges.

Benefit to Stock Raisers.

There are many advantages to be gained when the stock raisers of one community raise the same brand. Better prices may be secured from the sale of a uniform product and suitable breeding stock can be secured near home.

"It is but trite to say that Anatole Uppitykack displays affinities with Aristophanes, Pumpendingle, Sloop and Epicurius," vouchsafed the semi-learned bore. SPENCERVILLE ST. JOE

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

Ice problems will be referred to county food administrators when presented to Dr. Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator. Dr. Barnard is recommending the appointment of representative committees of citizens who shall have authority to determine upon a fair price for ice, which finding shall be binding. Other food problems will be handled in a similar manner, where practical.

Miss Mable Wellman, head of the home economics department of Indiana university will organize college women of the state for the furtherance of the food administration's program of production, conservation and substitution.

Lawrenceburg and Aurora grocers have adopted the cash and carry system of merchandising, which according to figures compiled by the food administration serves to effect a saving of from 2 to 10 per cent. to consumers.

The food administration is claiming priority for food production over all other purposes to which it is proposed to put the use of tillable land. This ruling by Dr. Barnard came in connection with the possible destruction of hundreds of acres of growing wheat and other food crops by the removal of a gas pipe line from Greentown to Hammond.

There is no foundation for the terrorism that has been created in some sections of the state by the alleged introduction of ground glass into bread and other foodstuffs. The food administration asks all patriotic people to be careful of their statements and report promptly to the proper authorities all circumstances that suggest such attempts at poisoning. Up to this time, Dr. Barnard believes the cases of this kind have been deliberately for the purpose of terrorizing people and prevent their consuming perishables that are perfectly safe.

The food administration has accepted the tender of 320 sacks of 98 pounds each of Kansas hard wheat flour from the West Baden Springs Hotel company. This is in line with the appeal of the food administration for voluntary contributions of flour from private holdings, which will serve to release an equivalent amount of flour at seaboard, for export to the hungry people of Europe.

Bring-in-the-Wheat week was very satisfactorily observed, it being estimated that 2,000,000 of bushels—a surprising quantity—was brought to the mills. The food administration has directed county food administrators to report all wheat still in storage. Steps will be taken to requisition all except barely enough for seeding, if the surplus is not in trade channels by May 1.

Manufacturers of soft drinks and confections who have started business since January 1 will not be supplied with sugar. Older establishments must agree to restrict themselves to 80 per cent. of last year's requirements. Individuals must conform to the three pounds per person per month ration. This is to guarantee a sugar supply for the canning and preserving season. The food administration announces a card system of distribution in many communities. Mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts of soldiers are asked to desist from further use of sugar in confections sent to camp and cantonment.

A Sluggish Liver Needs Attention

An Inactive Liver Affects the Kidneys and Deranges the Stomach and Bowels.

Too much stress can not be placed on the necessity of keeping the liver in good condition; upon it the health of the body largely depends. When the liver becomes sluggish, the kidneys are overworked, the digestive fluids are not properly secreted and a languid, bilious, nervous or sick headachy condition results. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body. Constipation, bloating, dizziness, belching, pain or soreness in the right side, impaired vision and, in fact, most diseases have their origin in an inactive liver. An inactive liver is easily corrected if taken in time, but the only way to doctor is to get at the cause. Glando Tonic is a liver remedy that has a splendid record for renewing activity, removing the poisons and building up the system. For bilious attacks, it can not be beaten. Mothers who are nursing a baby should take Glando Tonic to keep the bowels well regulated. This will keep baby's bowels in a good condition. Glando Tonic is a three-in-one treatment that brings results. A trial will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials will be furnished upon request. Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be obtained by sending 50c direct to the Grand-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

VOL. XXXII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JUNE 13 1918 NO. 24

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

Corpus Christi, Tex., June 2.

Dear Parents and All:—

Well, as I haven't received a letter from any of you this week, I thought I would write again anyhow. There's nothing new or interesting, and it's too hot to do anything. There's a 25-mile wind blowing, though, if one keeps in the shade. I have bought a pair of sun glasses to keep from squinting so much. Where there is no back ground and hot sun and water, I wear them, although my eyes are better than when I worked inside so much; also my general health is perfect and I feel great all the time.

In a few days, I will send some photos of our last hike to Camp Thirsty, on Flowery Bluff sand hills. At one time, this was a famous resort for wealthy northerners. Since war was declared, it has had to close up on account of no business; but tourists are spending a lot of money about the city on golf links, races, automobiles, launches, yachts, etc. The hotels are filled up all the time. But they are doing their bit. Go through the parks and hotels, and one sees women knitting, etc.; and all for us soldier boys. They have a large Red Cross here, too. Seems to be very busy.

Holmes and myself are out here to the Soldiers' Sea Shore club. He is the fellow that was home on a vacation and wrote to you. He reports old Indiana all there. He is a Blue lodge man and takes the Chapter degrees next week, here The club building was a hotel. It was leased by the people and remodeled for the use of the soldiers. There are dancing, bathing, pool, billiards, cards, bowling and roller skating—for soldier boys only. It is run on the same principle as the Y. M. C. A. It is certainly a fine place—built about 500 yards out into the bay. The Red Cross acts as chaperones for the ladies at Tuesday and Friday night dances. This is a very good system—no rough necks allowed.

I got the St. Joe News today. Did you get the anniversary number of The Sapper? I sent it about a week ago. If you did not, I will send another copy.

I received a very nice letter from Rev. Lineberry. I must answer it today.

Well, they are still talking of moving from here. I have begun to think I shall never see France.

I recently came back from a forty-eight hours' pass to San Antonio. Got the Shrine and am now a full fledged Noble. Believe me, the "hot sands to Mecca" certainly put the edge on one's nervous system. The degrees started at 2 p. m. and finished at 12. I was the only soldier from this camp to receive this distinguished honor. This shows what the South does for soldiers—free for us, $75 for civilians; at my death, mother gets $500; dues paid as long as I am in the army.

Your son,
Merritt A. Hull.

"The American Creed."

"I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed, a democracy in a republic, a sovereign nation of many sovereign states, a perfect union, one and inseperable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes. I therefore, believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies."

Subscription Price Will Be Advanced

The News very reluctantly is obliged to do what nearly all other similar publications are and have been doing—advance its subscription price. This will occasion no great surprise among its readers, who are aware of the great increase in the cost of doing business. Everything that the printer uses is higher. This is especially true of print paper, which has been the subject of congressional investigation. The general rising costs have caught newspaper publishers all along the line. For months, we have been repeatedly asked if the subscription price was still $1.00; and so we know that our forced increase, as previously stated, will occasion no great surprise. We have refrained from taking this action as long as possible, and held the paper at $1.00 per annum until compelled to make an advance.

Beginning July 1, our subscription price will be $1.25 per year—strictly in advance. That our readers may not think we are making this advance without due notice, the new rate, though in effect on July 1, will be waived for all who pay their subscriptions during July. All arreasages must, of course, be paid at time of renewal. If you settle your subscription at any time before Aug. 1, the rate will be $1.00, as heretofore. After that date, all accounts will be figured at $1.25 per year, dating from July 1. A special effort will be put forth to make the paper better than ever before, and we confidently ask for the continued support of our big family of readers.

Advertising rates also will be increased July 1. This is rendered necessary for the same reason that subscription is advanced. The new scale of prices will be made known on application.

Remember, all payments on subscriptions received during the month of July will be at the old rate, $1.00 per year. This applies to new subscribers and to renewals. All accounts unpaid at the end of that time will be left for collection. We have been lenient—too lenient—and a few are indebted to us for subscriptions. They must settle, either voluntarily or forcibly. We hope for no trouble.

BRAINSTORM

Swindlers, claiming to be government income tax agents, are at work in the country. They are selling a farmer's account book, and seek to increase their sales by representing themselves as being United States officers. The News warns its readers against these conscienceless scoundrels. The individual who is solicited to buy a book by one of them should report him to the authorities. Impersonating a revenue officer is punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 and imprisonment for not to exceed three years.

Beginning with the next issue of this paper, the editorial column ("Brainstorm") will be dropped for a few weeks. In its place, there will appear a short serial story, which was written for the News right here in St. Joe. It is entitled "The Girl With Thirteen Daddies." It is not, strictly speaking, a humorous story, yet it abounds with humor from start to finish. The purpose of the tale is illustrate the power of love. Thirteen rough men take pity on an abandoned waif, and their affection for her betters them—brings out the latent good that is in them. We hesitated before publishing it, and concluded to do so only after submitting the manuscript to J. M. Life, of Auburn, who is an authority on literary matters. He pronounced it splendid and advised us by all means to publish it. Read it and, before it is ended, you will have learned to love the "little lady," Mrs. Dal, Judge, Deacon, Calamity and Peddler. Read it because it was written at home.

Hicksville News: We have been wondering for some time if the St. Joe News man was really trying to start a newspaper fight with us. However, he goes at things in such a crazy manner that up to date we have not been able to get a line on his ravings. "Bug house."

Too bad! Too bad! The editor of the Hicksville News is obsessed by a delusion that we sought to start a quarrel with him. We never sought to do anything of the kind. On the contrary, we tried to do him good: animated by a high regard for him and moved by a missionary spirit, we strove to turn him from the unholy practice of advertising near beer in one column of his paper and advocating prohibition in another, from pointing boys heavenward on Sunday and cigarette-ward on a week day. Our intentions were pure, but their results were tragic: we pricked the misguided man's conscience until his mind became so perturbed that he shrieked, "Bug house!" We will chasten him no more, lest he become so mentally unbalanced that the Sunday school loses the hebdomadal benediction of his presence and the Berghoff Brewing company and Smudge & Punk lose a good advertising medium. Too bad! Too bad!

Will Prevent the Selling of Spoiled Eggs

The authorities have taken steps to prevent the selling of bad eggs by the adoption of stringent regulations. The egg and poultry division of the United States food administration has ruled that all wholesale dealers in poultry and eggs must be licensed. This requires all retail and country grocers and all hucksters who buy eggs from farmers for sale to shippers or commission men also to secure a license. Such dealers should write to the license division of the law department of the United States food administration, Washington, D. C., immediately. By an agreement between the United States department of agriculture and the food administration, which has been adopted as a regulation in Indiana, all dealers must candle eggs. The case, when shipped, must contain a signed certificate bearing the license number of the shipper and giving the name of the candler and the date when the eggs were candled. Wholesale egg dealers are not permitted to buy eggs from unlicensed dealers, nor will case eggs be allowed to be shipped unless the case contains the certificate. These will be furnished by the secretary of the Indiana Egg Dealers association. The sale of bad eggs, whether by dealers or by farmers, is a violation of the pure food laws of Indiana and is punishable by a fine. The foregoing regulations will go into effect on June 15. The law relative to the candling of eggs is no new one; but, like many others, is one that has fallen into disuse because it has not been enforced. This article is printed by us at the request of H. E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana. It will serve as a warning to those who knowingly or carelessly sell spoiled eggs. Honest people are not affected by the new ruling.

To Register The Babies

Next to be registered are the babies, which includes all children under 6 years. This will be done under the direction of the children's bureau of the department of labor. The object is to save the lives of 100,000 little ones annually, and the move should have the hearty support of all parents.

All babies under 6 years of age are to be registered next week, beginning Tuesday. The registration includes certain data about each child for the information of the authorities: Date of birth, height, weight, etc. This work will be done by the local physicians and no charge is made.

This movement is no experiment. The United States intends is doing what France and England have done; and, in the latter country, the death rate among children has been greatly lessened. This important work is under the direction of Mrs. Monte L. Green, of Garrett; and the following ladies have charge of the work in their respective townships:

Spencer.—Mrs. Anna Henderson.
Newville.—Mrs Ross Abel.
Concord.—Mrs. Lora Leighty.

H. L. Dunkle in St. Joe

H. L. Dunkle and family were in town Tuesday morning on the way to Butler. They also stopped when going home. The same afternoon, the editor of the News stopped at the Dunkle home, a mile west of New Haven, on the Lincoln highway. With him were Mesdames Belle Barney, Mattie Bowman, DeLora Curie and Lora Leighty, and the party was returning from Fort Wayne. They were unanimous in their admiration of the Dunkle home. Mr. Dunkle, who had just returned, showed them about the premises. The house is a model of convenience and finish. The ground is given up to small fruit and vegetables. Callouses on Hi's hands attest to honest toil and his complexion to healthful out-door life.

Picture of Paul Perry

Each week, the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette prints the pictures of boys who are doing service in France; and, last Sunday, the familiar face of Paul Perry, a St. Joe boy, appeared. Paul is among those who are engaged in actual warfare. He is connected with the artillery branch of the service, and is in the observatory corps. His duty is to count the big shells that explode, whether from friend or foe. He likes army life.

Mart Tustison returned Wednesday morning from Fort Sill, Okl., where he had been to visit his grandson, Gray Woodcox. He reports that Gray and the other St. Joe boys are doing well and expect soon to be moved, probably to France.

A Word to Coal Buyers.

The Government through the fuel administration has advised everybody to lay in their coal as much as possible during the spring and summer months. The dealers also are urged to lay in their supply now.

The reason for this is, the government will need the coal as soon as cold weather sets in more than now and the car supply will be short, therefore they ask domestic consummers to buy now. This we are doing and we hope to continue doing. But we must have our coal bills paid promptly as most of this coal is paid for before we unload it and it takes money to buy coal.

We ask you to give this your attention us we will have to insist that all back bills are paid at once as coal is CASH with us. We have kept St. Joe in coal during the worst coal famine the country has ever known and we will try to keep on doing so, but we must have your co-operation, we mean PAY UP.

Let every citizen do his duty—We are doing ours.

BROWNING GUN FOR AIRCRAFT IS O. K.

RATE OF FIRE SYNCHRONIZED WITH REVOLUTIONS OF THE TRACTOR PROPELLER.

BASEBALL CAPTURES LONDON

American Army and Navy Teams Draw Big Crowds—British Officers in U. S. Give Instruction in Gas Defense.

The Browning machine gun has successfully undergone a test to determine its value for use with aircraft. This is one of three types of machine guns with which the rate of fire can be so synchronized with the revolutions of the propeller of a tractor airplane that the gun can be fired by the pilot of a combat plane through the revolving blades.

Airplane propellers revolve at from 800 to 2,000 revolutions per minute. The machine gun is connected with the airplane engine by a mechanical or hydraulic device, and impulses from the crank shaft are transmitted to the machine gun. The rate of fire of the machine gun is constant and its fire is synchronized with the revolving propeller blades by "wasting" a certain percentage of the impulses it receives from the airplane engine and by having the remaining impulses trip or pull the trigger so that the gun fires just at the fraction of the second when the propeller blades are clear of the line of fire.

The pilot operates the gun by means of a lever which controls the circuit and allows the impulses to trip the trigger.

"As the latest wonder of the world London has taken to baseball," says a committee on public information representative in London. "The English never before had much use for our great game. They called it an exaggerated form of rounders and wondered what the noise was all about, but the American and Canadian soldiers in England have been educating them.

"A regular league of eight teams has started a summer schedule, and the English public is learning what it has missed. Big crowds witness the game which is played every Saturday, and the sport bids fair to become widely popular. Here is the way Thomas Burke, the short-story writer, reports a game in the London Star of May 27.

"'Last week I discovered baseball. The match between the Army and Navy teams was my first glimpse of a pastime that has captivated a continent, and I can well understand its appeal to a modern temperament. Believe me, it's good goods. And the crowd! I had heard and read much of baseball fans and their method of rooting, but my conceptions were nothing near the real thing. The grandstands, crowded with army and navy fans, bristling with megaphones and tossing hats and demoniac faces, would have made a superb subject for a lithograph by Sir Frank Bragwyn.

"'The game got hold of me before the first pitched ball. The players in their hybrid costumes and huge gloves, the catcher in his gas mask, and the movements of the teams as they practiced runs shook me with excitement. Then the game began and the rooting began. In past years I have attended various football matches in mining districts where the players came in for a certain amount of ragging, but they were church services compared with the furious abuse and hazing handed to any unfortunate who failed to play ball.

"'There was, for example, an explosive, reverberating "A-h-h-h-h-h" which I have been practicing in my back yard ever since, but without once catching its true quality. You should have heard Admiral Sims, as college yell leader, when the Navy made a home-run hit, with his "Atta boy; oh, atta-way to play ball," and when they got an error he sure handed the Navy theirs.

"'Yes; I've got it. From now on I'm a fan. I'm going to see every baseball match played anywhere near London. I shall never be able to watch with excitement a cricket or football match after this; it'd be like a tortoise race. Come along with me to the next match and join me in rooting and in killing the umpire.'"

In March and April the secretary of agriculture, on recommendation of the office of public roads and rural engineering, approved 212 state road-building projects involving more than 2,500 miles of highways under the federal aid road act. The estimated cost of these improvements to the states is about $15,000,000. The federal aid allowed is more than $5,000,000.

Bottlers of soft drinks in the United States may save approximately 50,000 tons of sugar annually by using other sweetening materials, according to investigations by specialists of the bureau of chemistry, United States department of agriculture. The bureau of chemistry is preparing to furnish bottlers with sweetening formulas that will allow the actual sugar content in soft drinks to be cut to 50 per cent or less and at the same time will preserve the customary taste of the beverages. Starch sugar, starch sirup, maltose sirup and honey are the substitutes used.

The army ordnance department has negotiated approximately 12,000 contracts since this country entered the war, involving within $175,000,000 of the total funds directly available for the department for the present fiscal year—$3,383,286,045. Additional contracts totaling $1,503,703,741 have been entered into on the authority of congress pending appropriation of an amount aggregating $1,671,466,750.

The magnitude of the task of the ordnance department financially is evidenced by the disbursement recently in a single day of more than $25,000,000 on ordinary contract vouchers. Disbursements for the month of April, 1918, ran to $356,884,863, an interesting amount as compared with the $5,059,284 disbursed by the ordnance department in April, 1917. These disbursements were made at the ordnance office in Washington. Amounts disbursed at government arsenals are not included.

One check recently drawn by the ordnance disbursing officer for ordnance material was for $18,750,000. One requisition made recently by this same officer on the treasury was for $169,000,000. This is the largest single requisition ever made by any United States disbursing officer.

Prior to two months ago, before the ordnance department established its 11 district offices which zoned the country to expedite payments to contractors and relieve the strain upon the main office in Washington, the disbursing officer at Washington signed from 500 to 3,000 checks a day.

Because of the instruction of gas officers who have been at the various camps for the last six months, the troops which are going forward to France are well posted on methods of combating gas attacks, says a statement authorized by the war department. A group of British gas officers has been in this country since last summer. One of these men has been at each of the training camps, advising and assisting the division gas officer.

All the men going overseas are supplied with gas helmets. Under the division gas officers and their assistants, the men are drilled in the use of masks, taught how to detect the presence of gas, and given actual experience with different sorts of gases. Mimic gas shells and cloud attacks, used often at night in connection with high explosives, help to make the training realistic.

The United States has been able to build on the experience of the British and French, to whom gas attacks were unknown when they entered the war. No American troops have been sent to the front without practical experience in defending themselves against gas.

The training of instructors in gas defense includes a course of about one month. Most of the gas officers are commissioned first lieutenants.

One of the interesting developments of the war, according to a statement authorized by the war department, is the rapid expansion of the various bureaus of the war department. At the outbreak of the war there were less than 3,000 employees on duty. The number now is approximately 25,000, an increase of 800 per cent. While this represents a tremendous expansion, the increase in the army itself has been more than 1,500 per cent.

Only four out of every 100 officers in the service were in the army at the time the war began.

The gas defense service is now manufacturing about 5,000 horse gas masks per day. These are being sent to France, and it is expected that within a short time every horse connected with the American expeditionary forces will be equipped with the new masks.

The gas defense service has a completely equipped factory for the manufacture of the masks. In less than three weeks a building was selected and the factory was producing masks. The introduction of riveting machinery has done away with the heavy hand sewing of the frame which supports the masks on the faces of the horses. The masks are so constructed that no metal or chemically impregnated parts can chafe the horse.

In Bavaria the monthly meat ration has been cut 20 per cent—from 1,000 to 800 grams—according to German newspapers. The monthly meat ration in Saxony has been reduced from 800 to 700 grams. Public officials are reported in the Prussian press as discussing the possibility of a further reduction of the bread ration in Prussia.

A Munich paper reports that from the beginning of the war to March 1, 1918, Bavarian hog stocks have decreased from 2,106,312 to 766,391 head. The Danish hog census shows a decrease from 1,651,000 hogs July 12, 1917, to 789,000 December 5, 1917, or a decrease of one-third the number at the beginning of the war.

The restriction on the importation of crude rubber has been followed by restrictions on importation of four commodities possessing some of the characteristics of rubber, and capable under some circumstances of being used as substitutes for natural rubber.

Acting on a suggetsion of General Pershing an order has been issued increasing each regiment's band from 28 to 50 members. Band leaders having had more than five years' military experience as band leaders will be made first lieutenants; those with less than five years' experience will be made second lieutenants.

Beside enlarging the bands a bugle and drum corps will be added to each regiment. Each corps will include the company buglers of its regiment, and not more than 13 drummers.

PLANT DISEASES AT MARKETS

This Excellent Food Has Been Converted Into Waste by Disease Germs Whose Ravages Could Have Been Prevented.

MEASURES TAKEN TO PREVENT LOSS

Inspectors Detect Diseased Vegetables and Fruit Arriving at Destination.

COUNTY AGENT IS NOTIFIED

Selling Value of Inferior Product Is Decreased When Arriving on Market—Steps Taken to Combat Various Disorders.

To check the loss from plant diseases in shipments—which also means a loss of time, labor, material, and transportation—the food products inspectors of the bureau of markets stationed in most of the large receiving centers now keep close watch for plant diseases on fruits and vegetables arriving on the markets.

Bad Product Not Wanted.

Diseased fruits and vegetables are not wanted in the markets any more than on the farm, and when carlot shipments arrive showing evidence of plant diseases their selling value is decreased even if none of the produce must be thrown away. Sometimes, in the case of very perishable crops, like berries or lettuce, there are serious losses of food because the shipments carried plant diseases when loaded. While no shipper would knowingly load badly infected fruits or vegetables, such produce may reach the markets in poor condition because the disease was present when loaded and developed in transit. This is especially true where shipments are made without providing proper ventilation or refrigeration.

Steps to Combat Disease.

Whenever shipments of produce suffering from plant diseases arrive the inspectors immediately notify the shipper, and through the pathologists of the department of agriculture the county agent in the locality where the diseased shipment originated is instructed to take steps to combat the disease.

Although the inspection service has been in operation only a few months as a part of the general inspection work of the department in certifying to shippers the condition of carlot shipments as they arrive at markets, already it has resulted in the detection of diseases in many shipments, and has aided growers and plant pathologists of the department in controlling the outbreaks of diseases and preventing their spreading to other sections of the country.

Shortage of Harvest Labor.

Of all the agricultural labor problems confronting the farmers of the country at this time, probably the most serious is that of getting enough help to harvest the wheat crop. In normal times there was a shifting population of from 30,000 to 50,000 men who followed the harvest season from the South to the North of the wheat belt. Floating labor is no longer available to any such great extent, and the matter of harvest labor, always a problem, is now a more serious one. Mr. E. E. Frizell, the department of agriculture's farm help specialist for Kansas, recently wrote: "After full and complete investigation, I am free to say that the farmers of Kansas will not be able to save the wheat crop unless they can get help from some of the surrounding states." What is true of Kansas is probably true of most of the other wheat states. The department of agriculture and the department of labor, with fairly adequate funds available, are using their best efforts to solve the problem, which they undoubtedly will do. But the city people of the states involved, by proper organization and co-operation, can help a great deal. If they care at all for more wheat bread and less war bread during the next 12 months, they will help a great deal. If their patriotism is at all manifest, not to say militant, they will help a great deal. For the nation to mature a wheat crop and then fail to harvest it would be exactly as bad policy as for the government to mobilize and train an army and then poison it.

PLANT FOOD DISEASES

You know something of how the United States department of Agriculture protects America's 100,000,000 consumers against diseased animal products.

Do you know that the department is just as vigilant in protecting the same consumers against diseased vegetable products?

That, anyhow, is true.

But do not be too conceited over what the department is doing for you.

The department is interested in the consumer as an individual—in his personal welfare, in seeing that he has good, wholesome foods.

But it is also interested in the population en masse—in seeing that everybody gets ENOUGH food.

Diseased vegetable products, of course, are not good for the individual. But there is another element. When vegetables are allowed to become diseased, in transit or otherwise, and have to be thrown away, the total supply of available food is reduced by just that much, and somebody has to do some more scrimping.

Those are the two reasons why the United States department of agriculture devotes a good deal of attention to protecting vegetable foods against diseases found at markets.

To Aid Man Power.

Prof. G. I. Christie, assistant to Secretary of Agriculture Houston, recently pointed out some striking illustrations of how the available labor supply could be used to much better advantage if supplemented by machinery; of how some labor is not fully utilized because machinery is not used. On one farm in the corn belt he saw two strong men, each with a team of horses and a single moldboard plow, following each other around the field. On an adjoining farm a seventeen-year-old boy, driving four horses to a two-furrow plow, was doing as much and better work. On one farm two men with two horses to a wagon were spreading manure with forks. On an adjoining farm one man with three horses to a manure spreader was accomplishing a larger amount of work in a more efficient way. For lack of proper machinery the labor of one of the men plowing and one of the men scattering manure was thrown away. Professor Christie points out that during the rest of the season farmers can handle their work with a materially reduced number of men if they avail themselves of such things as the double cutaway harrow, wide cutter bar of mower and binder, sheaf carrier on the grain harvester, tractor, haying tools, milking machine.

Your County Agent.

Do not forget that there is a sort of deputy secretary of agriculture who is always ready to help you with your poultry problems. He is the farm demonstrator for the United States department of agriculture. He is commonly known as "the county agent." If there are young people in your household he would no doubt like to enroll them in the clubs for poultry raising which are carried on in most of the states. He is a good man to get in touch with—and to keep in touch with.

Thorough cultivation in the garden is of much greater value than artificial watering.

Indiana News Tersely Told

Washington, D. C.—Pensions have been granted the following Indianians: Andrew J. Lampert, Shelburn, $20; Roy Fred Green, Indianapolis, $12. Pensions of $25 have been granted Emiline Ashby, Lyles; Eliza Wiseman, Batesville; Anna M. Rehder, Valparaiso; Mary E. Moran, Indianapolis; Mary E. Gray, Indianapolis; Helen M. Fowler, Crown Point; Elizabeth C. Fry, Muncie; Elizabeth Casebeer, Orland; Eliza J. Cooksey, Greensburg; Carrie Carpenter, Fort Wayne; Mary C. Brittain, Harlan; Barbara Bender, South Bend; Margaret Alyes, Milan; Mary F. Alford, Loogootee; Mary Cox, Hillisburg; Catherine C. Dyer, Elkhart; Susannah Harbough, Hudson; Sarah E. Mote, Kokomo; Albina Purdy, Lowell; Lurania Rorer, Argos; Mary A. Totsorch, Ambia; Elizabeth Wintrowd, Converse; Hester A. Walmer, Bourbon, and Amanda Seery, Richmond.

Indianapolis.—A call for approximately 2,000 draft army men to be assigned to expert mechanical instruction in the war schools at Indianapolis and Purdue university was received by Maj. Robert C. Baltzell, state conscription agent. The men are to prepare for service both at the front and behind the lines in mechanical capacities. These men are ordered to entrain in Indianapolis June 15. They will report to Capt. J. Delbey Crawfis, who is in charge of the vocational training school here. It is understood this contingent is to be quartered at the Indiana School for the Deaf. Of the call made on Indiana 1,489 drafted men have an opportunity to volunteer to local boards throughout the state for induction, under which they will receive free government training in Indianapolis. The remaining men of the 2,000 will be sent to Purdue university for training in auto mechanics.

Greencastle.—Eighty-eight students, members of the senior class at De Pauw university here, received bachelor degrees at the annual commence exercises here recently. The class was one of the smallest in recent years. Only 26 men received degrees, and of that number ten are in some branch of military service and were unable to be present when the diplomas were distributed. Many of the other members of the class are planning to enter at once some line of war work. A number of the chemistry students have volunteered their services to the government and others will take up industrial and actual war research work.

Huntington.—Owners of thrashing rigs and captains of thrashing rings, who held a mass meeting here, adopted resolutions pledging every effort to save grain, especially wheat, during the thrashing season. Separators will be repaired, tight ladders will be furnished for hauling sheaves, tight wagons will be used to haul loose grain and dropcloths will be used under the separators wherever possible. Further conservation of food will be accomplished by asking the women to cook only plain food, and to confine the quantity furnished to as nearly enough for the meals as possible.

Jeffersonville.—Although there is smut in some of the Clark county wheat, all reports at present are of a glowing character as to the general condition of the crop. S. E. Bolly, manager of the Charlestown Milling company expects an average of 22 bushels, which would be more than 50 per cent above the normal average the county and even better still compared with last year, which was subnormal. The acreage this year is also larger than the acreage harvested in 1917. Several fields of 20 acres or more will show yields of 40 bushels, Mr. Bolly says.

Boonville.—Harvest of wheat is expected to begin in this part of southern Indiana in a few days, as the grain is ripening rapidly. Millers are preparing to receive wheat as early as July 1. Never before has there been such prospect for a banner wheat crop. All other crops are doing well. The recent rains have made a good season for the setting of tomatoes and tobacco. The tomatoes are being raised for the B. F. Shaver Canning company, which has over 2,000 acres under contract here.

Frankfort.—"The farmers of Clinton county have planted fully 100 per cent more wheat than the average in years gone by," said a member of the county food administration. "The wheat outlook in this county is certainly fine," he added, "and the season this year will be from one to two weeks earlier than usual. The wheat will practically all be cut by the last of this month. Corn is flourishing and the oats crop promises to be a bumper."

Greensburg.—Trashermen in this county have adopted the following prices for this season: Oats, 6 cents a bushel; wheat, 9 cents; barley, 7 cents, and rye, 10 cents.

Fort Wayne.—That those attending the school who have become twenty-one years old since June 5 last year may register for the military draft in their home towns, Concordia college closed four days ahead of schedule. The commencement exercises have been canceled.

Fort Wayne.—The greatest grain crop in the history of Allen county will be harvested this season. The wheat average is larger than in former years, and the yield will be 20 per cent above the yield of a normal season, it is estimated. An early harvest is predicted.

Lafayette.—Loose smut will cause a big loss in the wheat crop of Indiana this year, especially in the southern part of the state, it was brought out at the meeting of district leaders in the coming campaign for the 1819 crop at Purdue university. The loss in Shelby county alone will be 11 per cent of the crop, County Agent Russell G. East reported. This means more than 100,000 bushels. Work will be started soon in southern Indiana locating the best fields of wheat to be used as seed. Six field agents from the Purdue extension department, working with county agents, will go over every county in the state and assist in locating the best wheat fields—those that are free from smut, scab or other diseases. Efforts will be made then to have the owner sell this wheat as seed or have the elevator to which he sells it resell it in the same community for seed. Better methods of cultivation and fertilization will be urged.

Washington, D. C.—The food administration grain corporation has written to Senator Watson that it does not regard as feasible the plan suggested by the Indiana Grain Dealers' association, the Indiana Corn Growers' association and others, to permit farmers an extra rate on wheat which they might store after the harvest. It was the contention of the Indiana wheat men that when the harvest is over, wheat will be dumped on the market in such quantities that the elevators and mills will be unable to handle the crop. The grain corporation, replying to a letter written by Ernest Thornburg of Shelbyville, declared that the depleted elevators and mills would be able to absorb all of the early offerings and that the railroad situation would be so much improved after that that all of the wheat could be handled.

Indianapolis.—Indiana's allotment of anthracite coal for next winter is 284,110 tons, only 40 per cent of the supply shipped to the state for use in the winter of 1916-1917, according to a message received by officials of the state fuel administration. The information was given by a committee at Philadelphia that has been investigating the anthracite situation. During the winter of 1916-1917, Indiana consumers used 710,274 tons of anthracite coal. The state fuel administration officials had expected a big cut in the tonnage allotted to the state, but the 60 per cent decrease as announced by the committee came as a surprise. The use of anthracite coal in Indiana next winter will be confined to individual consumers, none of the supply being available for industrial plants in the state.

Indianapolis. — Stanley Wyckoff county food administrator, said that he had been preparing to send a certain large group of cars of grain from Indianapolis to the Eastern seaboard, under orders from the United States Grain corporation, but that a telegram was received stopping the shipment of this grain, and saying that it was to be held here for the present. Mr. Wyskoff said nothing in the telegram indicated that the recent activities of German U-boats in the Atlantic, near American shores, had anything to do with the cancelling of the shipping orders for the grain, but that such probably was the case.

Petersburg.—The wheat harvest in Pike county will begin in a few days and there are prospects for a big wheat crop. Some fields will make from 30 to 40 bushels to the acre. One-half the river bottom wheat was drowned out by high waters. Clover is looking good, and the oats crop is promising. Fred Alexander has made his first cutting of alfalfa and the crop yielded almost two tons to the acre. Hundreds of acres of alfalfa are being cut and the crop is in better shap than at any time since it began growing in Pike county.

Michigan City.—Arthur P. Snyder, John C. Miller, Earle C. Calvert and Theodore Last, councilmen, and Alexander Spychalski, city clerk, filed a petition in superior court in this city asking Judge H. L. Crumpacker to call a sesson of the grand jury to investigate alleged misconduct on the part of certain city officials. These four councilmen recently voted for a resolution demanding the resignation of M. J. Kenefick, city attorney, but it was defeated, Mayor F. C. Miller casting the deciding vote.

Indianapolis.—All counties of the state have reported quotas reached in the Red Cross campaign, with subscriptions aggregating $2,566,000. Few of the counties have made complete reports, it was announced at state headquarters, and Charles F. Coffin, Indiana war-fund manager, says he is confident that the total subscription will reach $2,700,000. In some of the counties war-fund managers were active in an effort to swell the fund to a particular goal.

Gary.—The American Coal and Supply company, having its headquarters at Chicago, has been barred from selling fuel in Gary, Hammond, Whiting, East Chicago, Indiana Harbor and other northern Indiana places by order of W. S. Fuer, federal fuel administrator for Lake county. He alleges violation of government orders.

Indianapolis.—Long lines of people viewed the body of Charles Warren Fairbanks, former vice president, as it lay in state in the capitol rotunda. The funeral services followed: Governor Goodrich, former Governors Ralston and Durbin, J. B. Keating, J. N. Carey and V. T. Malott of Indianapolis, George B. Dockwood of Washington, and A. T. Hert of Louisville were the pallbearers. Bishop McDowell of Washington conducted the services, assisted by Rev. P. L. Frick, President Grose of De Pauw university and President Hofman of Ohio Wesleyan. There was no music.

AN AMERICAN SOLDIER WHO WENT ☆ ☆

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

MACHINE GUNNER, SERVING IN FRANCE

©1917 BY ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

TWO ARTILLERYMEN "PUT ONE OVER" ON OLD PEPPER, REGIMENTAL COMMANDER.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Chaplain distinguishes himself by rescuing wounded men under hot fire. With pick and shovel Empey has experience as a trench digger in No Man's Land. Exciting experience on listening post detail. Exciting work on observation post duty.

"Cassell had a fancy for that particular blonde. The answer came back in the shape of a volley of cusses. I changed the subject.

"After a while our talk veered round to the way the Boches had been exposing themselves on the road down on the chart as Target 17. What he said about those Boches would never have passed the reichstag, though I believe it would have gone through our censor easily enough.

"The bursting shells were making such a din that I packed up talking and took to watching the captain. He was fidgeting around on an old sandbag with the glass to his eye. Occasionally he would let out a grunt, and make some remark I couldn't hear on account of the noise, but I guessed what it was all right. Fritz was getting fresh again on that road.

"Cassell had been sending in the 'tap code' to me, but I was fed up and didn't bother with it. Then he sent O. S., and I was all attention, for this was a call used between us which meant that something important was on. I was all ears in an instant. Then Cassell turned loose.

"'You blankety blank dud, I have been trying to raise you for fifteen minutes. What's the matter, are you asleep?' (Just as if anyone could have slept in that infernal racket!) 'Never mind framing a nasty answer. Just listen.'

"'Are you game for putting something over on the Boches and Old Pepper all in one?'

"I answered that I was game enough when it came to putting it over the Boches, but confessed that I had a weakening of the spine, even at the mention of Old Pepper's name.

"He came back with, 'It's so absurdly easy and simple that there is no chance of the old heathen rumbling it. Anyway, if we're caught, I'll take the blame.'

"Under these condition I told him to spit out his scheme. It was so daring and simple that it took my breath away. This is what he proposed:

"If the Boches should use that road again, to send by the tap system the target and range. I had previously told him about our captain talking out loud as if he were sending through orders. Well, if this happened, I was to send the dope to Cassell and he would transmit it to the battery commander as officially coming through the observation post. Then the battery would open up. Afterwards, during the investigation, Cassell would swear he received it direct. They would have to relieve him, because it was impossible from his post in the battery dugout to know that the road was being used at that time by the Germans. And also it was impossible for him to give the target, range and degrees. You know a battery chart is not passed around among the men like a newspaper from Blighty. From him the investigation would go to the observation post, and the observing officer could truthfully swear that I had not sent the message by 'phone, and that no orders to fire had been issued by him. The investigators would then be up in the air; we would be safe, the Boches would receive a good bashing, and we would get our own back on Old Pepper. It was too good to be true. I gleefully fell in with the scheme, and told Cassell I was his meat.

"Then I waited with beating heart and watched the captain like a hawk.

"He was beginning to fidget again and was drumming on the sandbags with his feet. At last, turning to me, he said:

"'Wilson, this army is a blankety blank washout. What's the use of having artillery if it is not allowed to fire? The government at home ought to be hanged with some of their red tape. It's through them that we have no shells.'

"I answered, 'Yes, sir,' and started sending this opinion over the wire to Cassell, but the captain interrupted me with:

"'Keep those infernal fingers still. What's the matter, getting the nerves? When I'm talking to you, pay attention.'

"My heart sank. Supposing he had rumbled that tapping, then all would be up with our plan. I stopped drumming with my fingers and said:

"'Beg your pardon, sir, just a habit with me.'

"'And a d——d silly one, too,' he answered, turning to his glasses again, and I knew I was safe. He had not tumbled to the meaning of that tapping.

"All at once, without turning round, he exclaimed:

"'Well, of all the nerve I've ever run across, this takes the cake. Those —— —— Boches are using that road again. Blind my eyes, this time it is a whole brigade of them, transports and all. What a pretty target for our '4.5's.' The beggars know that we won't fire. A d——d shame, I call it. Oh, just for a chance to turn D 238 loose on them.'

"I was trembling with excitement. From repeated stolen glances at the captain's range chart, that road with its range was burned into my mind.

"Over the wire I tapped, 'D 238 battery, Target 17, Range 6000, 3 degrees 30 minutes, left, salvo, fire.' Cassell O. K.'d my message, and with the receiver pressed against my ear, I waited and listened. In a couple of minutes very faintly over the wire came the voice of our battery commander issuing the order: 'D 238 battery. Salvo! Fire!'

"Then a roar through the receiver as the four guns belched forth, a screaming and whistling overhead, and the shells were on their way.

"The captain jumped as if he were shot, and let out a great big expressive d——n, and eagerly turned his glasses in the direction of the German road. I also strained my eyes watching that target. Four black clouds of dust rose up right in the middle of the German column. Four direct hits—another record for D 238.

"The shells kept on whistling overhead, and I had counted twenty-four of them when the firing suddenly ceased. When the smoke and dust clouds lifted the destruction on that road was awful. Overturned limbers and guns, wagons smashed up, troops fleeing in all directions. The road and roadside were spotted all over with little field gray dots, the toll of our guns.

"The captain, in his excitement, had slipped off the sandbag, and was on his knees in the mud, the glass still at his eye. He was muttering to himself and slapping his thigh with his disengaged hand. At every slap a big round juicy cuss word would escape from his lips followed by:

"'Good! Fine! Marvelous! Pretty Work! Direct hits all.'

"Then he turned to me and shouted:

"'Wilson, what do you think of it? Did you ever see the like of it in your life? D——n fine work, I call it.'

"Pretty soon a look of wonder stole over his face and he exclaimed:

"'But who in h—l gave them the order to fire. Range and everything correct, too. I know I didn't. Wilson, did I give you any order for the battery to open up? Of course I didn't, did I?'

"I answered very emphatically, 'No, sir, you gave no command. Nothing went through this post. I am absolutely certain on that point, sir.'

"'Of course nothing went through,' he replied. Then his face fell, and he muttered out loud:

"'But, by Jove, wait till Old Pepper gets wind of this. There'll be fur flying.'

Just then Bombardier Cassell cut in on the wire:

"'General's compliments to Captain A——. He directs that officer and signaler report at the double to brigade headquarters as soon as relieved. Relief now on the way.'

"In an undertone to me, 'Keep a brass front, Wilson, and for God's sake, stick.' I answered with, 'Rely on me, mate,' but I was trembling all over.

"I gave the general's message to the captain, and started packing up.

"The relief arrived, and as we left the post the captain said:

"'Now for the fireworks, and I know they'll be good and plenty.' They were.

"When we arrived at the gun pits the battery commander, the sergeant major and Cassell were waiting for us. We fell in line and the funeral march to brigade headquarters started.

"Arriving at headquarters the battery commander was the first to be interviewed. This was behind closed doors. From the roaring and explosions of Old Pepper it sounded as if raw meat was being thrown to the lions. Cassell, later, described it as sounding like a bombing raid. In about two minutes the officer reappeared. The sweat was pouring from his forehead, and his face was the color of a beet. He was speechless. As he passed the captain he jerked his thumb in the direction of the lion's den and went out. Then the captain went in, and the lions were once again fed. The captain stayed about twenty minutes and came out. I couldn't see his face, but the droop in his shoulders was enough. He looked like a wet hen.

"The door of the general's room opened and Old Pepper stood in the doorway. With a roar he shouted:

"'Which one of you is Cassell? D——n me, get your heels together when I speak! Come in here!'

"Cassell started to say, 'Yes sir.'

"But Old Pepper roared, 'Shut up!'

"Cassell came out in five minutes. He said nothing, but as he passed me he put his tongue into his cheek and winked, then, turning to the closed door, he stuck his thumb to his nose and left.

"Then the sergeant major's turn came. He didn't come out our way. Judging by the roaring, Old Pepper must have eaten him.

"When the door opened and the general beckoned to me, my knees started to play 'Home, Sweet Home' against each other.

"My interview was very short.

"Old Pepper glared at me when I entered, and then let loose.

"'Of course you don't know anything about it. You're just like the rest. Ought to have a nursing bottle around your neck and a nipple in your teeth. Soldiers—by gad, you turn my stomach to look at you. Win this war, when England sends out such samples as I have in my brigade! Not likely! Now, sir, tell me what you don't know about this affair. Speak up, out with it. Don't be gaping at me like a fish. Spit it out.'

"I stammered, 'Sir, I know absolutely nothing.'

"'That's easy to see,' he roared; 'that stupid face tells me that. Shut up. Get out; but I think you are a d——d liar just the same. Back to your battery.'

"I saluted and made my exit.

"That night the captain sent for us. With fear and trembling we went to his dugout. He was alone. After saluting we stood at attention in front of him and waited. His say was short.

"'Don't you two ever get it into your heads that Morse is a dead language. I've known it for years. The two of you had better get rid of that nervous habit of tapping transmitters; it's dangerous. That's all.'

"We saluted, and were just going out the door of the dugout when the captain called up back and said:

"'Smoke Goldflakes? Yes? Well, there are two tins of them on my table. Go back to the battery, and keep your tongues between your teeth. Understand?'

"We understood.

"For five weeks afterwards our battery did nothing but extra fatigues. We were satisfied and so were the men. It was worth it to put one over on Old Pepper, to say nothing of the injury caused to Fritz' feelings."

When Wilson had finished his story I looked up and the dugout was jammed. An artillery captain and two officers had also entered and stayed for the finish. Wilson spat out an enormous quid of tobacco, looked up, saw the captain, and got as red as a carnation. The captain smiled and left. Wilson whispered to me:

"Blime me, Yank, I see where I click for crucifixion. That captain is the same one that chucked us Goldflakes in his dugout and here I have been 'chucking me weight about in his hearing.'"

Wilson never clicked his crucifixion.

Empey tells of a narrow escape in the next installment.

"Land of Lanterns."

Among the Chinese there has existed for ages a passion for fireworks and lanterns. In every city, at every port and on every river and canal, as soon as night comes on, the lanterns make their appearance. They are hung out at the door of every dwelling; they swing as pendants to the angles of the pagoda; they form the fiery crown of every shop front; they cluster round the houses of the rich and light up the hovels of the poor; they are borne with the carriage of the traveler, and they swing from the yards and masts of his vessel.

First Springs Used on Railways.

The first record of the use of springs on railways is George Stephenson's patent of September, 1816. The first locomotive with steel springs was the Agenoria, built by Foster and Rastrick in 1820, and now in South Kensington museum, London. This had laminated springs on the leading wheels.

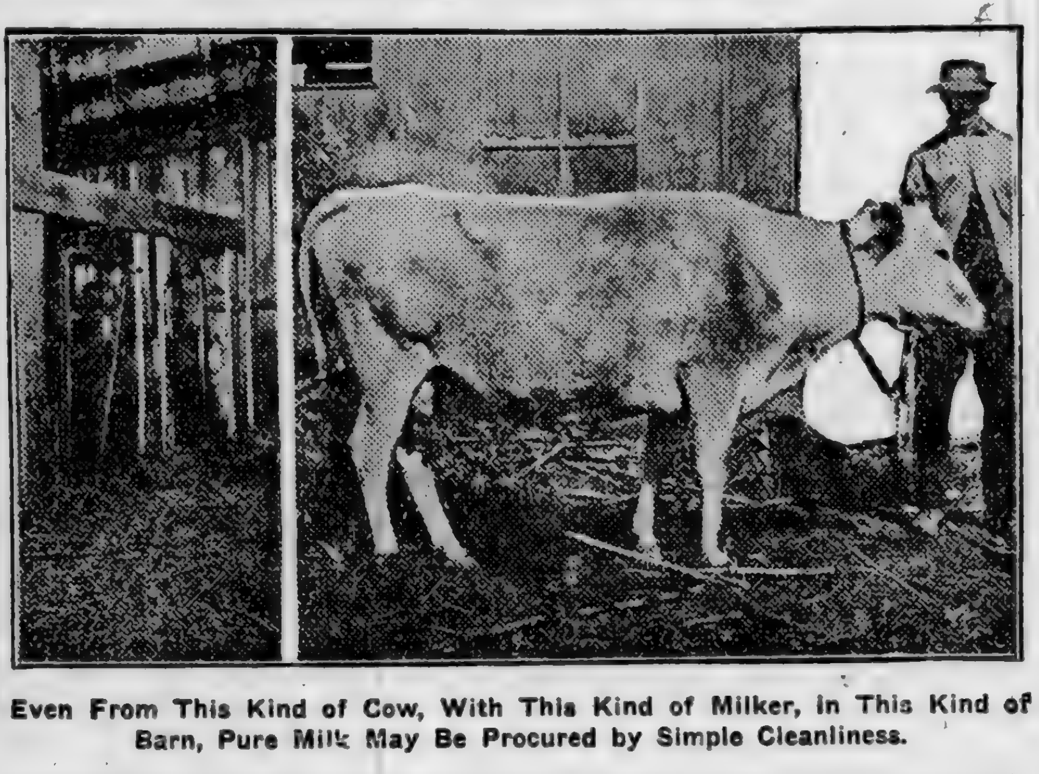
Hide Picture Wires.

Never, if you can help it, hang pictures so that the wires will show, and do let the pictures hang against the wall as if they were really and truly decoration.

Helping the Meat and Milk Supply

(Special Information Service, United States Department of Agriculture.)

ESSENTIALS OF PURE MILK



Even From This Kind of Cow, With This Kind of Milker, in This Kind of Barn, Pure Milk May Be Procured by Simple Cleanliness.

KEEP BACTERIAL COUNT VERY LOW

Main Essentials Are Clean Cows, Sterilized Vessels and Small-Top Pails.

TESTS ON ORDINARY FARMS

Result of Experiments Indicate It Is Possible for Average Dairyman to Produce Milk of Very Superior Quality.

The consumer of milk may sometimes be inclined to feel that its purity is in direct proportion to the cost of the plant and equipment from which it comes. The dairy division of the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, has demonstrated that this is not always the fact. Clean milk, with low bacterial count, can be produced in ordinary farm barns, provided a few basic principles are adhered to in each case.

How Tests Were Made.

In order to demonstrate the practical value of the three essential factors in producing milk of low bacterial count—sterilized utensils, clean cows with clean udders and teats, and small-top pails—tests were made on six ordinary farms with the voluntary co-operation of the dairymen. Five of the farms sent milk and one sent cream to an experimental creamery operated by the department of agriculture. The dairy barns were ordinary farm barns, scoring on the dairy division score card less than the average barns for equipment. The plan was to determine first the bacterial content of the fresh milk and cream on the farm under the existing conditions; then to place in operation the three factors previously mentioned and note the results.

For the work small-top pails were lent to the farmers, together with simple steam sterilizers. The method of operating the sterilizer was demonstrated to the farmer, who was then left to operate without further assistance. At each milking the milk was stirred by means of a long sterilized pipette, after which samples were taken from each can and a composite sample placed in ice water and tests made within an hour and a half. For a period of three weeks samples were taken from each farm under the old conditions, and for the three weeks following under conditions in which small-top pails and sterilized utensils were used.

Decrease in Bacterial Count.

On all the farms the bacterial count of the fresh milk showed a very great reduction following the installation of the simple safety method mentioned. The bacterial count of the milk on several of the farms was reduced to 3,000 per cubic centimeter. One of the most striking reductions was on a farm where the average count was reduced from 187,000 to 3,600.

The results of these experiments are taken by the department of agriculture to indicate that it is possible for the average dairyman on the average farm, without expensive barns and equipment, to produce milk of a very low bacterial count. These factors, when combined with other simple factors relating to cleanliness in producing and handling, will result in clean, wholesome milk with low bacterial count.

Back-Yard Cow.

The milk-goat industry in the United States has not as yet developed to any important extent. The interest shown during the past has come largely from people who were either raised in or at least are familiar with conditions in countries where the milk goat has proved a success. It requires time to educate people to the value of any new industry, especially one that has been so greatly handicapped as has been the case with the milk goat. In Switzerland, Italy, Germany, France, Norway, and Spain milk goats are largely used by families not so situated as to permit keeping a cow. F. S. Peer, a well-known American importer of live stock, after making an investigation of the industry in Switzerland some years ago, stated that "the goat of Switzerland is the Swiss peasant's cow and Swiss baby's foster mother, a blessing to the sanitariums for invalids, and a godsend to the poor."

The milk goat is adapted to this country and the industry is likely to become of greater importance every year. The goat is especially useful to those who desire a small quantity of milk and do not have the room, or cannot afford, to keep a cow. In fact, a goat can be kept where it would be impossible to keep a cow, and it will consume considerable feed that otherwise would be wasted. The fact that goats are rarely affected with tuberculosis is another point in their favor. The demand for good goats appears to be far greater than the supply.

WHAT MAKES MILK SAFE

It is mighty nice to know that you are drinking milk drawn from blue-blooded cows by immaculate milkmen in palatial barns.

But, because such is not the case, the milk is not necessarily inferior.

Though the cow be an ordinary grade animal of no particular color or character, the barn ordinary and the milkman clad in blue overalls and "jumper," the milk may be just as wholesome.

The United States department of agriculture has shown that keeping the bacterial count of milk low depends upon four things—clean cows, sterilized utensils, small-top pails, a temperature never above 50 degrees Fahr.

Therein lies one of the ways of "helping the meat and milk supply."

The thing you are interested in is that the milk you use be pure and wholesome.

If you can satisfy yourself that your dairyman observes the few essentials of cleanliness, you need not worry about the pedigree of his cows, the architecture of his barn, or the eclat of his milkers.

Pasteurization of Milk.

The pasteurization of milk has been so much thought of as a process performed by elaborate plants that it may not be a matter of common knowledge that such equipment is not necessary. Milk may be pasteurized at home with the very simplest of paraphernalia. Pasteurization consists merely in exposing the milk to a high temperature. All the equipment necessary is a metal pail, a pie pan with some holes punched in the bottom, and a thermometer. The pail is filled to the proper depth with water and the milk, in the bottles in which it is delivered, placed in it, the pie pan having been placed at the bottom to allow free circulation of water under the bottles and to prevent bumping. A hole is punched through the cap of one of the bottles and the thermometer inserted.

The pail is then placed on the stove or over a gas burner and heated until the thermometer in the milk shows not less than 145 nor more than 150 degrees Fahrenheit. The bottles are removed from the water and the one with the punctured cap covered with an inverted cup. The thermometer, meanwhile, has been placed in the water in the pail and cold water added until the temperature of the water is between 145 and 150 degrees. The bottles are then replaced in the water, covered with a towel and held thus for from 20 to 30 minutes. The final process is to run cold water into the pail until the milk is reduced to the temperature of the tap water. The milk is then pasteurized and should be immediately placed in the refrigerator, preferably with ice packed around the bottles. It must be remembered that pasteurization does not destroy all bacteria and that even pasteurized milk must be kept constantly cold. Where pasteurized milk cannot be purchased and where conditions under which the raw milk is produced are unknown, home pasteurization is recommended by the United States department of agriculture.

Lives 200 Years!

For more than 200 years, Haarlem Oil, the famous national remedy of Holland, has been recognized as an infallible relief from all forms of kidney and bladder disorders. Its very age is proof that it must have unusual merit.

If you are troubled with pains or aches in the back, feel tired in the morning, headaches, indigestion, insomnia, painful or too frequent passage of urine, irritation or stone in the bladder, you will almost certainly find relief in GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. This is the good old remedy that has stood the test for hundreds of years, prepared in the proper quantity and convenient form to take. It is imported direct from Holland laboratories, and you can get it at any drug store. It is a standard, old-time home remedy and needs no introduction. Each capsule contains one dose of five drops and is pleasant and easy to take. They will quickly relieve those stiffened joints, that backache, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gall stones, gravel, "brick dust," etc. Your money promptly refunded if they do not relieve you. But be sure to get the genuine GOLD MEDAL brand. In boxes, three sizes.—Adv.

Then She Understood.

An American soldier in France was given a fork but no knife when he sat down to dinner in a French restaurant. He held up the fork, and—

"Camerade, camerade," he said.

"Ah, oui, oui," said the waitress, dashing off to the kitchen, to return with another fork.

Here was a poser for the soldier. He spent a moment in deep thought, then beckoned to the waitress. With the air of a Christopher Columbus, he pointed again to the fork.

"Fiance, fiance," said he.

That time he got the knife.—International Digest.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

Kept Busy.

Bacon—How many buttons has your wife on the back of her dress?

Egbert—Gracious! Don't ask me, for I don't know!

"Why don't you know? You've buttoned it up often enough to know, I should think."

"But when I've been buttoning it up I've been too busy to count the number of buttons."

Spencer Over Top

In the last issue of the News, we stated that Spencer township had subscribed $2,045.98 in the war savings stamp drive, or $183.48 over the top. We were right in one particular—she did go over the top. But we did not get the figures right: Spencer township gave $2,455, exceeding her quota by $582.50. We gladly make the correction, and assure our readers that the error was unintentional.

He Beat Dr. Price

W. L. Wallace announces that he had new potatoes and peas for dinner last Thursday, grown in his own garden. He wants everyone to know that he beat Dr. Price this year. He did not say so, but there is no doubt that beating the doctor gave an extra flavor to the potatoes and beans.

The Sun Darkened

There was a partial eclipse of the sun about 5:30 p. m. Saturday, and smoked glass was in demand. Old Sol looked like a huge cookie, out of which some one had taken a bite. In some parts of the country, the eclipse was total.

Clark Writes From France

France, May 19, 1918

Dear Alumni:—

Received your letter of greeting today, long after the reception of May 4 is over; but, nevertheless, it was a letter from home, expressing the thoughts of many, and came with a large welcome. This is the first year since a member of the St. Joe high school alumni that I have not been present; but, in part, I was not absent, for my heart always returns home on such occasions.

Everyone appears to be in the best of health, working hard and long; but I don't think it will hurt any of the St. Joe boys, no matter what comes.

We have real sunshine now, very warm days and lots of rain, which is no longer noticed, as we have been here long enough to get acclimated to anything.

I have been doing drainage surveying for a short time; and the work, as a rule, is not half bad.

Thanking you all for the remembrance shown me, I remain

Sincerely Yours,
Clark Scholes.

ARMY BARRACKS FOR NURSERIES

One of Them Houses More Than 800 Children Under Ten.

Within sound of the deep throated guns of the French firing line, guns that are ceaselessly telling the Germans "thou shalt not pass," live hundreds of happy, healthy children.

At the beginning of the war the buildings in which these kiddies now live and play and study were barracks for French boys training to be soldiers. Today these boys—those who are left of them—are veterans. These barracks are good modern buildings, and they are set amid beautiful scenery. There are several of these groups of barracks scattered throughout France, and all of them have been turned into homes for the nation's homeless children.

At one of the barrack-nurseries there are more than 800 children. Some are babies of a few days old, and the oldest is not over ten years. Most of these children are orphans. Some few of them have mothers who are working in fields and factories to help France win the war.

And these little folks are receiving the first intelligent care of their lives. Skilled American doctors are in charge of the kitchens, and experienced teachers are instructing those old enough to attend the barrack-school. The older girls and boys are being taught useful trades as well as the usual classroom lessons, and with it all these children are learning the joy in healthy play.

France laid upon us a sacred service in this care of its children. And how noble has been the response of our American Red Cross!

THE SEA'S CALL

By HENRY HOWARD,
Director of Recruiting Service,
U. S. Shipping Board.

The sea's call to our country's youth today is clear and strong. At no other period in our national life has need been greater than now for fearless men to carry our flag through stress of war and storm to foreign ports. The American merchant mariner of today takes rank in the greatest of all wars—the ultimate struggle of liberty with force—beside his honored brothers of the army and navy, an exemplar of the strength and plenty of this free and chivalrous new world. In his hands we trust our trade; but more than this, we trust our honor, too. Neither shall perish so long as our mariners sail the seas. Their calling is a cherished legacy from God-fearing forefathers, who in their day sailed hard and far on errands of peaceful commerce, while ever ready to fight for freedom. The descendants of such men do not fail in their duty when the sea calls them in this time of war. The ways of the sailor may have been lost to them in generations of peaceful land pursuits; but the salt is in their blood, and with steady purpose they say to the sea, "Take me and teach me what you would have me do." This response, from shore to shore of a mighty land, makes possible the new, great things America is doing on the sea to end the war. On a thousand new ships now taking shape upon our shores American merchant sailors by tens of thousands will go forth without fear. Veterans in sea service will have trained the newcomers to the fleet—and so will be wrought a strong, close-knit, all-American personnel for our reborn Merchant Marine.

Indigestion

DO YOU KNOW that indigestion can be cured, permanently cured, so that you can eat any kind of food that you crave? It has been done not only once, but in almost every case when Chamberlain's Tablets are used. An instance: Mr. J. Pominville, Stillwater, Minn., who had spent over $2,000.00 for medicine and treatment was permanently cured by these tablets.

The alumni of the high school have our thanks for a donation of $6.53. This is the second offering from this organization within the past year; and, in addition resident members have assisted in raising funds by entertainments.

Woodcox Overlooked

In the write up of the play, "The American Flag," last week, we forgot to mention C A. Woodcox, who was stage manager and to whose efforts is due much of the success of the entertainment. He worked as hard as any of the actors and is entitled to as much credit. We are not going to apologize to "Coxey," for he knows there was no intention of slighting him, yet we feel it to be our duty to make mention of his services, even if it does come late.

Training Ships for New Merchant Crews

National training ships for merchant crews are a novelty in this country, the only work done in training merchant seamen, that is, men for cargo and passenger vessels, before the war having been on a few schoolships maintained by two or three Atlantic seaboard states.

Now the country has a whole fleet of training ships, recently put into commission by the United States Shipping Board, as part of the country's war equipment. On the vessels young men from all parts of the country will make their first acquaintance with a sailor's life.

National headquarters for this fleet of training ships is at Boston; but this port is not the only one at which such ships are based. Philadelphia recently had one of the ships in port a month, taking on 500 apprentices who volunteered to serve at sea rather than in their country's land forces.

San Francisco is fitting out a large seagoing ship, the Iris, to accommodate the recruits for the merchant marine from the Pacific coast and mountain states.

New York has a receiving ship, the steamer Dorothy Bradford.

New Orleans is expected to have a station ship on Lake Pontchartrain, that broad arm of the sea near the city, where young men of the Southern states will have preliminary training before going aboard one of the cruising training vessels.

Home Base of Ships.

Boston, the home base of the shipping board training service, will receive men from the Eastern and Central states. It has as a station ship, on which recruits are received, the former Atlantic liner City of Berlin (later the transport Meade), a supergrayhound in her time, and holder of the transatlantic speed record, both east and west, in 1875. Though now forty-four years old, the Meade is a handsome and habitable ship. She was refitted for the special use of the shipping board recruiting service at Newport News, Va., in the spring of 1918. She has capacity for about one thousand apprentices.

All the training ships are specially equipped with accessories to healthful living. Each has a modern hospital, with a doctor and nurse in attendance. There is a generous steam heating plant for use in the cold months. Sleeping quarters are well ventilated. Galleys and messrooms are kept scrupulously neat. There are ample shower baths and modern plumbing.

Course in Sea Training.

Under strict but kindly discipline, a young man is as well cared for here as at home, and he associates only with young men of his own type, and instructors of character and experience.

The length of the course of training for an apprentice on the United States Shipping Board training ship may vary, according to circumstances, from a minimum of not less than a month to probably not more than three months. The training is practical, with a wholesome system of instruction and exercise lasting eight hours a day, and proper intervals for rest and recreation.

The inexperienced man trained by the course of instruction thus provided will become qualified in the shortest possible time to serve his country in its merchant fleets.

Chances for Promotion.

The young American merchant sailor knows that after a total of two years' sea experience he may enter a shipping board school in navigation to fit himself for an officer's license; that in three years he can pass upward through all three grades as mate—third, second and first in order—and that his next step in promotion is to the command of a ship.

All Merchant Marine apprentices are exempted from all Navy duty.

The Pious Devil

By KATE JORDAN
Of The Vigilantes

Since that June day in 1914 when the assassination at Sarajevo gave the German kaiser, and the cormorants who gutturaled with him over the council tables, the opportunity for the crime against mankind for which they had been preparing for fifty years, we have had him described, quoted, photographed by the highest men of many countries—men of honor, whose word cannot be questioned.

His vanity is colossal—something to gibe at. Raymond Hitchcock described it when, as a reason for his having made the war, he explained that "the kaiser was all dressed up with nowhere to go." He is always "dressed up," either as an hussar, an admiral, as this, or that, and lately, even as a Turk. Yes, William Hohenzollern is "crazy about himself." He likes the way he "carries the duds."

With vanity there is always arrogance; and he is arrogant. His mustache ends alone are damning evidence of that. The points point up at him. It is evident, too, in his addiction to posing on a horse—he can look down, and ride over anything on foot.

With vanity and arrogance, treachery makes a good third. In his own mind, the first two traits set him apart, a glorified unit, a law unto himself. What is, therefore, just common decency to other men has no meaning for one who is law. Because of this he can break his word, lie, cheat, steal, murder at every turn of the game—as he has done from the first moment.

These three traits could not exist without breeding cruelty. The German insensibility to suffering in others looms large in the "all-highest." In sheer savagery he has outdone the most barbarous Turk that ever lived. He has directed the slaughter of millions of men. And not only of his enemies—make no mistake of that! He has directed the slaught[illegible] of his own peasant and artisan a[illegible]es with as untrembling a finger. It might be well for the Germans in this country who secretly yearn over the fatherland to think of this: The German kaiser does not spare his people. He murders his own—as a cat eats its own—when the idea seems good for aristocratic and Hohenzollern reasons.

Vanity, arrogance, treachery and cruelty! Surely these are enough of hell to exist in one man. But there is another, and it reeks from the brew—this is hypocrisy.

Yes, this man of lies and torn treaties, whose armies were directed to treat the betrayed Belgians as hyenas treat the graves they pull to pieces for bones; this killer of babes; this murderer of the wounded—is pious! If one were to believe him, each of his horrors has had God's auditing.

During this last year he has grown very old and white of hair. Some late photographs of him that have reached this country show no arrogance at all. No, he is now markedly sanctimonious and very, very sad. No wonder. He—and God—have not had the easy time that he expected.

You see he had the restaurant picked out and the date set for his triumphal dinner in Paris around Christmas, 1914. There was reason for his feeling so sure. When he started across Belgium, killing and burning all in his path, he was most hideously prepared for the fight he knew he would meet in France.

Perhaps it is not generally known just how prepared he was in a one-sided infamy. From sure authority I have recently read of the tons of barbed wire, 15 years in the making, that went with those first troops; that every German soldier as he took his first step over the Belgian frontier with Paris as his goal, had in his kit tubes of liquid gas and a perfectly constructed gas mask, also years and years in the making. When the kaiser ruminated on the liquid gas that was to come as a surprise upon his defenseless enemies while his own men were supermen, immune, is it any wonder that the points of his mustache waggled in a sweet, slow smile? Any wonder that he saw himself in Paris by Christmas, eating sauerkraut prepared by a French chef?

Well, in spite of all that he has brought to make solid his loathsome ambition, he is not in Paris. He is in Berlin, or near it, and glad to stay there.

He hadn't counted on England—and England's navy bottled up his ports; her millions poured over the channel after him.

He was sure Italy would hold to a feeble sort of promise to back him up if he were good. Italy thought him rotten bad; and so she went after him.

He wasn't afraid of America. America was too busy making money, too happy in selfishness, and luxury, and indolence. America would never fight. She was like an overfed cat asleep in the sun. But from the time he sank the Lusitania America has really been at war with him in spirit, as she is now in reality. When she did wake up she put her head under the pump and the cold water made her vision so clear she could see nothing but the kaiser—and a gun.

And so, in spite of vanity and arrogance, and treachery and cruelty, and that cosy, comrady way he has with his God—not our God we say with full hearts!—though he has succeeded in bringing chaos upon the world, he has gained nothing. Instead he has lost much.

And he will lose more. If necessary the whole world will rise to put him down. Something in the soul of man could not tolerate subjection to anything so visibly monstrous.

What will Germany be when the war is over? Industrially and commercially a cripple and a mendicant.

And how many centuries must pass before the German people by right living and fair thinking can wipe away the stain this pious devil has put upon their name?

SLACKERS OLD AND NEW

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY
of the Vigilantes.

The papers chronicle day by day the steady advance of the British soldiers northward through Palestine. Their lines extend from the Jordan to the sea and they are slowly but surely driving the Turks before them in this latest, greatest and most decisive crusade.

If the followers of Mahomet can make any stand against the followers of Christ it will surely be in the plain of Esdraelon, one of the natural battlefields of the world. It is singular how some places lend themselves inevitably to conflict. The plain of Jezreel, to give it another name, is one of these. It has been fought over continually since Thothmes there defeated the Hittites in the dawn of recorded history. Jew and Gentile; Canaanite, Assyrian, Babylonian, Scythian, Persian, Greek and Roman contested for its mastery in the East; English, French, Italian, German, Arabian, and Turk from Godfrey and Richard and Saladin to Napoleon drenched its fertile soil with blood in more modern times. May the forthcoming be the last of its many battles, and Allenby the last of the long line of crusaders.

One of the most decisive of the conflicts upon that plain occurred in 1296 B. C. when Barak, the Lightning, inspired by Deborah led ten thousand men down the slopes of Mount Tabor in a successful night onfall and surprise of the army of the oppressor, Jabin of Hazor, under the command of Sisera. The Hazorites were disastrously defeated, driven in panic terror down the narrow pass cut by the Kishon, then in full flood, and killed or drowned in large numbers.

Deborah made a great song about the triumph. One stanza runs this way:

"Curse ye Meroz, said the Angel of the Lord, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

No one knows where Meroz lay. No ruined vestiges remain to identify it. There is no other mention of it in the pages of history. There is no ground even for speculation about it. Yet for over thirty-two centuries it has been pilloried in its infamy in that immortal song. Whatever its prosperity and its works, whatever its hopes and achievements, the loves and hates, the successes or failures, of its people—they are all forgotten in the blistering, withering condemnation of the singer. It stands as a place accursed forever. Perhaps its utter oblivion is the result of the merited condemnation.

Shall there be written against our city, against our land, the curse of Meroz? Shall we apply to these and to ourselves this slackers' text? Or shall we come to the help of the Lord today, tomorrow and forever, in the great conflict now, and at all times, being waged in Europe and everywhere against sin and the devil?

Curse ye Meroz? Non nobis, Domine—Not unto us, Oh Lord!

I have a German neighbor
Who has a son
Twelve years old,
Yesterday afternoon
He was playing in the yard.
Some other youngsters passed
And called out:
"Hey, Joey, you Germans are going to get licked.
How do you like being a German, Joey?"
Joe's cheeks flamed
And his little fists clenched.
"I ain't a German, see!" he cried.
And there were tears in his voice.

And his soul?
Were tears there, too?
We and ours
Must be very careful these days

CONQUEST

By HENRI CHAPELLE,
of the Vigilantes.

The broad, beloved life of a peaceful, home-keeping nation, is a product, not an ordinance to be proclaimed. Why, then, do we talk of negotiating peace, when it has been destroyed by violence? The forces that make peace must first be reestablished.

One might as well talk of peace to a man struggling in the hands of a murderous highwayman. One might as well talk of a peace settlement with the thief, to a man who has been robbed.

Wherever moral issues are involved, the instinct of mankind demands a clean-cut conquest of evil.

Wherever there is a definite attempt to injure another person, the one assailed knows he must win a decided conquest to be safe.

Wherever there is a man who lives justly, he is entitled to conquest over those who attacked him.

Right, safety, and justice all demand conquest over wrong, danger and brutality. Let conquest be the word we use in speaking of the disposition of this war.

Substitute for Dinner Garment

New York.—The world goes on reviving old things and calling them new. This is not only true of the stupendous spectacle of war in its most barbaric form, asserts a prominent fashion critic, but it is true of the minor accidents and happenings that flutter through "this imbroglio called life."

Observe fashions. The designers dip their hands deep into the boiling pot of ancient lands, history and peoples, and pull out of it demure or fantastic things, which they dress up a bit and give over to a most modern people, who accept them as new.

At present the designers are dipping more deeply than ever. They seem to be frantically pulling out odds and ends of flotsam and jetsam that must serve to whet the appetites of those who have money.

G[illegible]en Hats and Tea Gowns.

It seemed a fitting thing today to revive the simplicity of Civil war costumery, and therefore we see approaching us an era of printed muslins, garden hats, pastel colors and Colonial fichus.

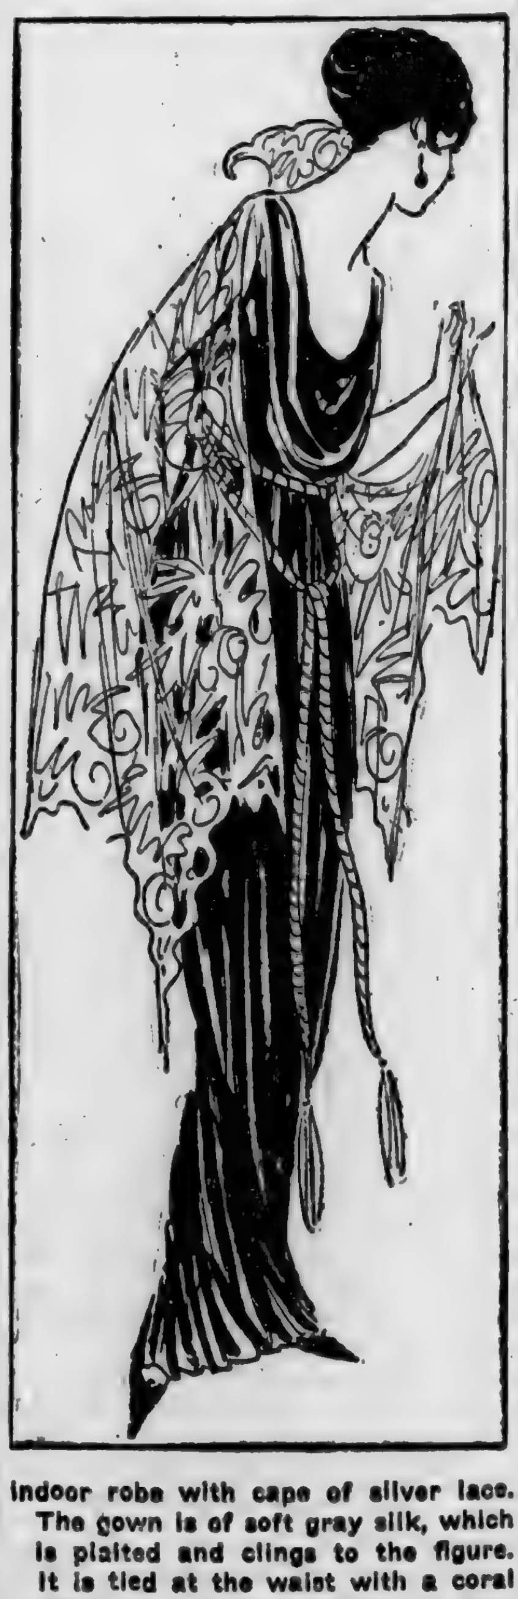
Along with these fashions comes that intimate and usually alluring garment called the tea gown. It is as much a part of the English social system as five o'clock tea, cricket and parliament. The French have always placed their reliance upon the garment which they call the "robe d'interieur." But the American had nothing to place beside these two.

When this remark was once made to a French designer she lifted her eyebrows in surprise and asked, "But is there not the Mother Hubbard?" There was, she was assured, but it was not the kind of garment of which she would approve.

But here in America today we are rapidly learning the artistic value and comfort of the British tea gowns, which someone once described as the only really soft thing in the British nation. That statement was made, however, before the English woman had learned to copy the arts and the graces of face and figure from the French, and when she still wore her stiff, unyielding, ugly clothes; her big boots; straight, mannish Scotch tweeds, and raglan coats.

The English tea gown has spread over the civilized world, alongside of the English five o'clock tea, which even the American soldiers behind the French battle front have learned to desire.

The British wear two sets of costumery at that hour in the afternoon, and both of these are introduced this summer; the flowered muslin with the big shade hat, and the alluring tea gown with its fanciful coloring and its loose grace.



Indoor robe with cape of silver lace. The gown is of soft gray silk, which is plaited and clings to the figure. It is tied at the waist with a coral silk cord, and the cape has a rolling collar.

Substitute It for Dinner Gown.

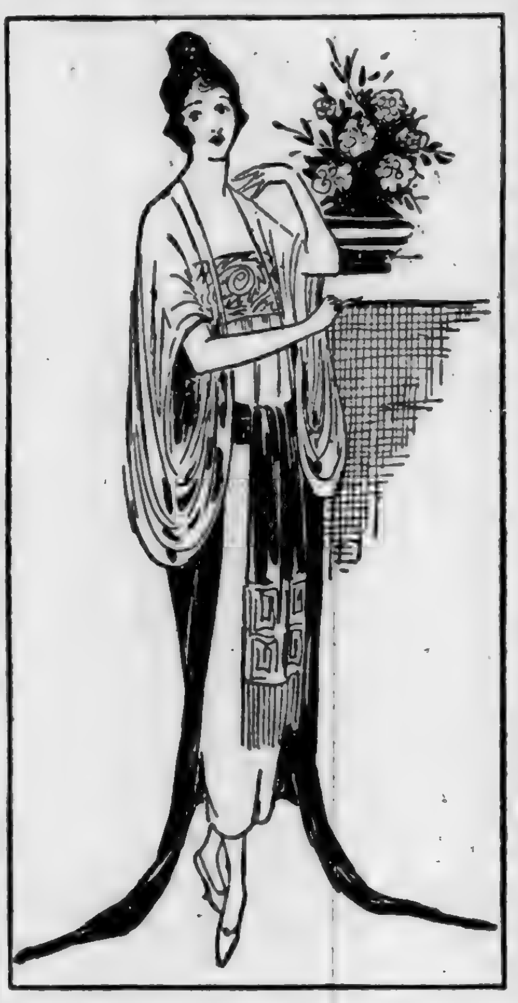
One of the reasons that America is wearing this tea gown at and after the five o'clock hour is that the French have taught her the economy and pleasure of it.

Black, midnight blue, olive green, beige and munitions gray have ruled the outdoor costumery of the French people since August, 1914. They have worn white only at mountain and seashore resorts, and then it was restricted to sport clothes for the morning hours.

The French are quite willing to wear dark and demure clothes in the street, but they ease up the depression of their spirits by adopting colors in their own homes. At the opera, the play, in public restaurants, one sees clothes in somber colors; but in the French homes—especially in the Paris houses, where women are involved in a social system—there is a brilliant display of the British tea gown. It solves the problem; it satisfies the need for color; it does not flaunt itself in the face of the public. It is worn intimately, cheerfully and artistically in one's own home.

About the beginning of January the Americans saw the attractiveness of this idea, and it was adopted in a wide area of houses where women dress well. In the smartest private homes tea gowns were substituted for dinner gowns, in the French fashion.

There has been little disposition on the part of the American woman to put a great deal of money into an exceedingly decollete evening gown, although hundreds more have been purchased than the public realizes. But the average woman, whether she was placed in high or in middle society, felt that she would prefer to put her money into a house gown that gave her the chance to wear colors.



Sumptuous gown with long mantle. Purple and gold tissues are combined in this garment. The purple and gold oriental sash which drapes the hips ends in a gold embroidered panel in front, and the sleeves are of draped gold and purple tulle.

America's Contribution.

We are becoming quite self-assured in designing clothes these days, and have made such rapid progress that we do not rest entirely upon what others give us.

When the dressmakers found that women who spent different amounts of money and moved in different kinds of social life were asking for tea gowns, there immediately jumped up a kind of rivalry among the workers to see who could get out something startling and good.

The especial contribution in which this rivalry has resulted is the rainbow tea gowns. We have already found out that we are in for a "rainbow" season. Whoever named the first fighting division that went to France had a happy inspiration—it gave the word to a hundred activities in this country. The name flickers from the stage, on posters, gowns and hats, and now it seems to have found an admirable setting in the new tea gown.

Elaborate Japanese Style.

France has sent to us a striking tea gown that is being copied. It is made as an elaborate Japanese kimono. The material is extra-broad black and white striped satin. There is a flicker of white lace and a bit of white satin, and the robe is complete.

All of the house robes that are to be substituted for dinner gowns this spring and summer do not owe their inspiration to the exotic East. There are other epochs and other fashions from which the designers draw.

The early nineteenth century has been found prolific in ideas. The tea gowns which are taken from that time are sometimes more suitable for the average woman than the more complicated draperies.

These are made of flowered chiffon, printed voile and silk net, and they are run beneath the bust, after the manner that obtained in the Directoire, with broad ribbons of old blue, pale pink and Chinese yellow. They are half low and round in the neck, and have short puffed sleeves.

Quaint Boudoir Cap.

A pretty little cap that reminds one faintly of the head covering worn by French sailors—in shape, not in coloring—is made of pale pink crepe de chine. A straight band four inches wide or so of the silk is edged with a frill of inch-wide lace and banded with rows of insertion to match. The crown is made of fine Brussels net over the pink silk and is divided into four segments by straps of narrow pink satin or velvet ribbon, the center of the crown, where they cross, being adorned by a fluffy pink pompon.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

MANY DRINKERS FOR PROHIBITION.

As an example of liquor-users who acknowledge the evils of drinking and are helping to vote out the traffic is the millionaire packer, Patrick Cudahy. He is doing fine antiliquor educational work in his packing plant at Cudahy, Wis. In an open letter published in the Milwaukee Times he thus describes some of the effects of a world-wide prohibition as he sees them:

"If some all-powerful person were to appear at the present time on earth and perform a miracle, changing all the booze in the world back to water, and issuing a decree that any person who attempted to make another drop of it would be struck dead by an electric bolt from heaven, just imagine if you can the change that would take place in the world, say ninety days after this event. See the red noses changing to white; the fat beer bloats shrinking to their natural size; the man whom alcohol made a brute of, returning to his normal condition; his wife, whose life this alcohol brute saddened and almost destroyed, returning to her normal condition; the wrinkles and tear furrows in her face being smoothed out; the color coming back to her cheeks; her eyes becoming bright again; her saddened and wretched face becoming joyful and happy.

"In short, the home that alcohol made wretched is now joyful and happy.

"We also see the saloons changed into places of usefulness—some of them ice cream and soda water parlors. A great many of them are used for book stores, for the men who spent their time in saloons are now reading books.

"The saloonkeepers themselves have gone back to their trades and are now useful citizens. And by doing away with alcohol we do not need nearly so many policemen. About seventy per cent of the policemen have been discharged and are engaged in other employment in the shops, and on the farms, changed from idle men to useful producers. The prisons, such as our house of correction, are changed from prison to recreation halls. The grounds about them are converted into beautiful parks. People are now saving the money formerly spent for booze. Savings banks are springing up all over the country. In short, the drunkards and criminals of the world, made so by alcohol, of all classes, are now industrious people and living happy lives. What a glorious change, if this could be brought about, and it may be partially brought about some time by prohibition."

Mr. Cudahy confesses he drinks both beer and whisky, yet seeing the evils of intemperance he uses his influence against the saloons in his own town. A friend of his, Mr. J. P. Benscher, in a letter published by the same paper, says:

"I am not a prohibitionist. I drink beer, although I have never touched whisky, but I have seen the misery which it has created, and I shall do everything within my power to wipe out the thirty-eight bum factories which we now have in Cudahy."

Many drinking men, rich and poor, are taking the same attitude.

EVEN BREWERS HATE THE SALOON

"No one understands the saloon better than those engaged in the business. They live as far from it as their means will allow; they know that no saloon can live except as it draws money to the bar that is needed by wives and children 'round about. They know that the saloons in the city can be traced by the raising death rate among little children that die from neglect because the money to which they are entitled is squandered at a neighboring bar. They know, too, that when the alcoholic habit is once fastened on a man or a woman, it travels in the blood and that little children have the door of hope shut on them before their eyes have opened to the light of the day.

NINETY PER CENT DROP IN DRUNKENNESS.

Drunkenness in Ogden, Utah, during five months of prohibition decreased approximately 90 per cent. During the first seven months of 1917 there were 916 arrests for drunkenness as against 62 since August 1, 1917, according to the report of the police department. The Salt Lake City News records the fact that more of the stockmen than ever before brought their wives and daughters or other members of the family with them to the convention held in that city this year, and the dryness of the state is said to be the reason.

WE'RE WORKING FOR JUST THAT.

This is our ideal—a land where you meet no drunkard staggering on the road towards his doom, a land where you have no slums for humanity to rot in, a land where you have two-thirds of its prison cells empty, a land with its workhouses vanished, a land with its children well fed, well clothed, well sheltered, well trained, with their merry laughter ringing through the streets, a land where the curse of drink shall be driven from all hearts.—Right Hon. David Lloyd George.

EXPERT'S TRIBUTE TO WESTERN CANADA SOIL

That there is good reason for the wonderful crops of grain grown in Western Canada, which have made thousands of former residents of the United States wealthy, is not always given the thought that it deserves is quite apparent. But that there must be a reason is quite evident. Probably more than one—but the one that requires emphasis—is that the soil is of the nature that will produce good crops. It was not long since that the farmer selected his land in the most haphazard way. He need not do so today. He will select it on the soil analysis plan. Soil from Western Canada was submitted to Prof. Sievens, soil physicist of the State College of Washington, at Pullman, Wash. His report should no doubt further encourage settlement in Western Canada. It reads as follows:

"We have analyzed this sample and find that it runs high in lime, very high in potash, phosphorus and in nitrogen; that it has a splendid supply of organic matter and is in the best of physical condition. There is nothing wrong with this soil from the standpoint of crop production, and I am satisfied that it will give splendid results wherever put under cultivation."

It is soil like this properly worked, and on scientific lines, as is the rule today, that gives the opportunity to quote the experiences of farmers who have increased their incomes from $500 to $30,000 in two seasons, and whose story would read as follows:

"I have threshed altogether 7,000 bushels of No. 1 Northern wheat from 200 acres, which went from 24 to 56 per acre—sod breaking 24, spring plowing 36, back setting 56 bushels—the average being 35 bushels per acre."

The newspaper giving an account of this man's experience says: "When he disposed of his 1,600 acres from north of Brooks, Alta, to four Oak Harbor men, he was worth $30,000. Two years ago he came here with $500 and a few horses."

It is the soil of Western Canada, and the knowledge of what it will do that brings to Canada the hundreds of settlers that are daily arriving at the border. A growing enthusiasm for the fertile prairie lands of Western Canada is spreading all over the continent. This enthusiasm is the recognition of the fact that sufficient food could be produced on these prairie lands to feed the world. From the south, east and west, hundreds of men, too old for military service, are pouring into Western Canada to take up land or to work on the farms. A great many of the incoming settlers have arrived at such central points as Calgary, Edmonton, and Lethbridge, Alberta, and at Regina, Moose Jaw, and Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Judging from the bulk of their household effects, the number of their horses and cattle, and the quantity of implements they are bringing with them, most of the new arrivals also seem well blessed with the world's goods.

Reports from North Portal, Saskatchewan; Coutts, Alberta, and Kingsgate, British Columbia—the principal gateways into Western Canada from the United States—indicate that the present influx of farmers is in such volume as has not been witnessed for many years. From Vancouver, British Columbia, people are going to the prairies for summer farm work, many with the intention of taking up land themselves at the end of the summer.

The influence of this tide of farmer settlers on greater food production will be more readily appreciated when it is considered that the average settler takes up at least twice as much land as he has hitherto been farming—and land which, acre for acre, produces better and larger crops.—Advertisement.

Not True.

Calvin, six years old, was taking a stroll through Irvington with his father.

"What are those buildings over there?" the lad inquired.

"That's Butler college, son," the father replied.

"Oh, that's where men go down to learn to be butlers, isn't it?" pursued Calvin, and his father had difficulty in convincing him such was not the case.

Baby-Excluding Landlords.

James F. Gannon, Jr., Jersey City's commissioner of revenue, is out after landlords refusing to rent homes to families having babies. To such gentlement he says: "If you insist on discriminating against families with children the city will raise your tax assessment to the limit. If you try to come back we will fight the case out before the bar of public opinion. And you will lose. For Jersey City is on the side of the babies, and don't you forget it!"

PATRIOTIC TO PROTECT BIRDS

Helping to Save Our Feathered Friends Means Also Helping Save the Food Crops.

The work done by birds in saving food by destroying injurious insects and weed seeds is almost unbelievable, but the figures given here are vouched for by scientists. For instance:

A scarlet tanager ate 630 gypsy-moth caterpillars in 18 minutes, which is at the rate of 2,100 an hour.

The quail, most hunted of birds, has no bad habits and eats 145 species of insects in summer and 129 kinds of harmful weed seeds in winter.

A flicker was found to have eaten 1,000 chinch bugs; a nighthawk, 600 grasshoppers; a Maryland yellow throat 3,500 plant lice in 40 minutes.

The stomach of a cedar waxwing contained 100 canker worms; a snow bunting was found to have eaten 1,000 pigeon weed seeds, a Bob White made a meal on 5,000 seeds of the same plant, and a mourning dove ate 7,500 seeds of yellow sorel.

Professor Beale estimated that in Iowa the tree sparrow eats 875 tons of weed seeds every year.

The robin, the flicker, the thrush, all found frequently in the game bag of the hunter, subsist largely on a diet of ants, beetles, bugs, flies, grasshoppers, caterpillars and scpiders.

Food saving is patriotism. Prove your patriotism by helping save the birds that protect the nation's food supply.—The People's Home Journal.

Just a Matter of Place.

The conversation at a social gathering turned to the subject of domestic arguments when this story was fittingly related by Congressman James A. Gallivan of Massachusetts.

One morning a hard-featured individual, carrying a grip, entered a city bank and approached the window of the paying teller.

"I want one thousand dollars," said the man in a low voice. "Give it to me at once or I will drop this grip on the floor."

"You will, will you?" responded the paying teller. "What's in it?"

"Dynamite," answered the other; "and in one minute you will be going through the roof."

"Let her drop," was the careless rejoinder of the teller. "I have forgotten something that I was told to get for my wife and I might as well have the explosion here as at home."

Old Salt Knew.

The pastor had waxed eloquent from the pulpit in describing a ship in distress. Then: "What are you going to do?" he cried.

"Nay," retorted an old sailor in the congregation, "you've got her in such a tarnation mess that I'm not sure it's worth doin' anything!"—London Tit-Bits.

FAVORITE DISHES.

Sour cream makes a most delicious white sauce to serve with codfish or with any fish. Care should be taken not to overcook it.

Spiced Tongue.—Take a fresh calf's tongue, put it into boiling water and let it simmer for two hours or long enough to loosen the skin easily. Put four tablespoonfuls of butter into a saucepan and when hot add a cupful of small onions, one red pepper, one and a half teaspoonfuls of salt and a tablespoonful of vinegar, two small carrots chopped, one-half pound each of dates and raisins, well chopped, then add a pint of the liquor in which the tongue was cooked and simmer one hour. Remove the tongue, thicken the sauce and pour around the tongue when serving.

Scrambled eggs served with half a cupful of grated cheese which is just allowed to melt is a most appetizing supper dish.

Stuffed Onions.—Parboil good-sized onions and stuff the centers, chopping the portion removed; add egg, a little flour, a clove of garlic chopped, a half-cupful of grated cheese, butter, salt and pepper. Mix well and fill with the well-blended mixture. Bake until thoroughly cooked.

Salmon Sandwich Filling.—Take a can of salmon, removing the bones and skin, and put it through a sieve; add to it two tablespoonfuls of melted butter or substitute, a saltspoon of mace and a dash or two of cayenne. Mix the paste very thoroughly and press it into small glasses, pour over a layer of melted fat and keep in a cool place. Nice for Sunday night lunch. A chopped pickle may be added when using the paste to give zest to it as well as variety.

Peanut and Rice Loaf.—Take a cupful each of ground peanuts, fresh and crisp; tomato, strained bread crumbs, and cooked rice with salt, pepper and paprika to taste. Mix all together and steam one hour. Sprinkle with buttered crumbs and brown in the oven. This is a fine meat substitute.

Mold left-over cereal, such as oatmeal, in small cups. Unmold and scoop out the centers and fill with any fresh fruit mixed with sugar; heap over the top sweetened whipped cream, or a thin custard may be served as a sauce.

After a day of cloud and wind and rain,
Sometimes the setting sun breaks out again,
And touching all the darksome woods with light,
Smiles on the fields until they laugh and sing,
Then like a ruby from the horizon's ring
Drops down into the night.
—Longfellow.

LET US PLAN.

The women of our country are divided into two classes today—not the loyal and disloyal, for the great majority of our American women are keenly loyal. No woman who reads and thinks can be otherwise; but the two classes are the small number of women who need not worry because of expense, and the great number who must count every penny to make ends meet.

The woman who must watch her purse closely, that her family is well and economically fed, is she who must study food values, attend every lecture on foods where she may gain new ideas or inspiration. We are confused very often in our judgments of food values by taking this or that food and learning its nutritive value, but forgetting that different foods act upon each other in the digestive process, thus producing a more highly nutritive food than either taken separately. There will always be something lacking in substituting one food for another. Rice and potatoes cannot take the place of wheat, yet by adding a variety of foods to our diet the health of the body as well as its growth may be kept up with no wheat at all.

The housewife who must consider cost, with food substitutes, is the housewife who needs to study, and over 80 per cent of our American women are in that class.

When a butter substitute is used on the table see that the family has plenty of egg yolk and green vegetables to supply the growth determinant found in butter. It is better, where possible, to serve butter to the growing child and economize in some other way.

We are apt to feel that eggs used in foods can be saved, thus cutting down expense; but every egg added to corn bread, griddle cakes, cake or pudding adds just that much more food value to the dish.

She dresses aye so clean and neat;
Baith decent and genteel;
And then there's something in her gait
Makes ony dress look weel.
—Burns.

INEXPENSIVE DISHES.

Take a slice of round steak, cover with a layer of sliced potatoes, a layer of onions and on top of these two sliced green peppers. Season well with salt and pepper, add a pint of boiling water, cover and let simmer two hours. Rice that has been cooked in milk may be used for a most appetizing loaf. Take a tablespoonful of peanut butter for each cup of cooked rice, add seasoning and moisten with either tomato or soup stock. Bake until hot, cover with buttered crumbs, and when they are brown serve in the dish in which it is baked.

Noodles and Ham.—Butter a baking dish or quart mold and sprinkle thickly with fine bread crumbs, then line with cooked cold noodles. Put in a layer of chopped ham, highly seasoned, then a layer of noodles until the dish is full. Cover and bake one hour. Turn out on a platter and serve with spinach or sauerkraut.

Spiced Carrots.—Cook young carrots until tender, sprinkle with flour, powdered cloves, butter and lemon juice, reheat and serve with minced parsley as a garnish.

Rice Griddle Cakes.—Mix two cupfuls of boiled rice with the same amount of milk, and let it stand over night. In the morning add two or three cupfuls of corn flour sifted with two or three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a dash of sugar, and salt to taste. Beat until well mixed, add two beaten eggs and fry on a hot griddle.

Beets With Spinach.—Pick over, wash, and put to cook a half peck of spinach. Cook in unsalted water to which a pinch of soda has been added; do not cover. Near the end of the cooking add a teaspoonful of sugar. When tender, drain and chop. Add butter, flour, three tablespoonfuls of fat and one of flour, with a half cupful of cream. Reheat and pack in a border mold and let stand in hot water to keep warm.

When ready to serve turn out on a platter with buttered beets in the center. Garnish the platter with hard-cooked eggs cut in eighths. This dish is not only a pleasing color combination but tastes equally well.

Cultivate a serene, truthful mental state and you need never trouble about external things: they will all come right without your worrying.

A FEW MEATLESS SOUPS.

When soup is served in the meal as a food rather than a preparation of the stomach for hearty foods is should be prepared with that end in view. Cream soups are both nourishing and palatable and may be used freely as a main dish.

Asparagus Soup. — In these days of everybody with a garden we should have our own asparagus bed; once started it will be a source of profit for years. Take a bundle of asparagus, cut off the heads and put them aside for a more delicate dish. Cover the shoots, after cutting in small pieces, with a quart of water and cook until the asparagus is tender. Rub through a colander and add this pulp with the liquor used in cooking to a pint of milk. Cook together two tablespoonfuls of corn or barley flour and two tablespoonfuls of sweet fat; stir into the soup and bring to boiling point. Servewith popcorn.

Celery Soup.—Put two tablespoonfuls of sweet fat in a saucepan, and when bubbling hot add a slice of onion; cook until brown, then add a pint of cabbage water (water saved when cooking cabbage), four carrots ground fine, all stewed gently for an hour in a tight kettle; then add two tablespoonfuls of butter.

Turnip Soup.—Put a tablespoonful of butter, one slice of onion and three slices of carrot into a saucepan and stir over the heat until the onion is yellow; then add four good-sized turnips which have been ground through the meat chopper. Cover and let simmer without water over slow heat. There should be a pint of pulp; after 20 minutes add a quart of milk, two tablespoonfuls of butter blended with the same amount of flour, using barley or corn flour; a half teaspoonful of kitchen bouquet; salt and pepper to taste. Serve with croutons.

Clear Tomato Soup.—Add a pint of water to a quart of tomatoes, a slice of onion, a half a bay leaf, a dash of celery salt and a few celery tops, a teaspoonful of salt and a chopped green pepper. Cook all together 15 minutes, then bind with two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch and butter cooked together.

A dessert rich in eggs should be served at a meatless meal, and an eggless dessert may likewise follow a dinner when meat is served.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 16

THE SON OF GOD GIVING HIS LIFE A RANSOM FOR MANY.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 15:1-47.

GOLDEN TEXT—Truly this man was the Son of God.—Mark 15:39.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Isaiah 52:13-53:12.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matthew 27:32-61; Luke 23:26-56; John 19:16-42.

PRIMARY AND JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus gives his life for others.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The suffering Savior.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ dying for our sins.

The grand climax of the year's lessons thus far is reached in this one. If the significance of the crucifixion is not apprehended, all the lessons thus far are meaningless. It is not a matter of learning lessons taught by a great teacher, or imitating the example of a great and good man, but of apprehending the vicarious atonement made by the world's Redeemer. Christ saves, not by his ethics, but by his shed blood. His death was purposeful and absolutely voluntary.

I. Jesus Arraigned Before Pilate (vv. 1-15).

In the early morning, after the mock trial before the high priest, they bound Jesus and delivered him to Pilate. They act freely in this according to the evil desires of their own hearts.

II. Jesus Crowned With Thorns (vv. 16-29).

Knowing that Jesus had been condemned for claiming to be Israel's king, they in mockery crown him with a wreath of thorns, and salute him "King of the Jews." Not only this, but they smote him on the head and spit upon him and went through a process of mock worship. The crown of thorns typifies the curse which he bore for man's sin.

III. Jesus Crucified (vv. 21-41).

1. Led away to the place of crucifixion (vv. 21-23).

At first they compelled him to bear his own cross, but when physical weakness made this impossible, they compelled Simon the Cyrenian to bear it for him. It is beautiful to note that the son of this Cyrenian who bore the cross of Jesus came to believe on him (Romans 16:13). Because of the scourging and cruel indignities heaped upon him, they actually were obliged to bear him to Golgotha. His face was marked by the thorns and cruel blows, so that there was "no form or comeliness" (Isa. 53:2). All this he endured for us. He drank this bitter cup to its very dregs and refused to drink the "wine mingled with myrrh," which would have deadened his pain. He went all the way in his sufferings.

2. Gambling for the clothing of the Lord (vv. 24, 25).

Having nailed him to the cross they gambled for the seamless robe under the very cross where he was dying, and in their heartless cruelty they sat down to watch him die (Matt. 27:36).

3. The superscription (v. 26).

It was customary to place over the victim on the Cross the name and crime of the offender. Though Pilate did this in mockery to vex the Jews, the title was absolutely true. He was indeed their King. They had long looked for him, and now when he came they crucified him. Though he wore a crown of thorns in derision, he will come again wearing a crown of glory, and before him all shall bow. God hasten the day!

4. Between two thieves (vv. 27, 28).

This added to his shame. His identification with two robbers was the fulfilment of the Scripture—"Numbered with the transgressors."

5. The dying Savior reviled (vv. 29-32).

This reviling was engaged in by the passers-by, the chief priests and the thieves who were crucified with him. In this nameless agony and shame they taunted him by bidding him come down from the cross, and derisively saying, "He saved others, himself he cannot save." They unconsciously uttered a great truth. He could not save himself and others, so he chose to die to save others. Hallelujah, what a Saviour!

6. Darkness upon the land (v. 33).

This was at noonday. So shocking was this crime that nature threw around the Son of God a shroud to hide him from the gaze of a Godless company.

7. The cry from the Cross (vv. 34-37).

What awful anguish when God laid the world's sins upon his beloved Son! When the price was fully paid. Jesus dismissed his spirit. No one took his life; he gave it up. His death was unlike that of any other.

8. The rent veil (v. 38).

This symbolized the giving up of his life (Heb. 10:20).

9. The centurion's confession (v. 39).

10. The lingering group of women (vv. 40, 41).

They who had lovingly ministered to him in life were waiting to see where they could bury his precious body.

IV. Christ's Burial (vv. 42-47).

Loving hands now take the precious body and lay it in Joseph's new tomb. This man who did not consent to the foul treatment of the Lord now risks his reputation, and by his action makes a bold confession of the Lord. The sinless Son of God is placed in a new tomb.

Important Discovery.

"How long have they been married?"

"Long enough to discover that they can't both have their own way all the time."

There is surely something wrong with the man if religion makes a pessimist of him.

Getting Away With It.

Student—For work.

Steals EATONIC
(FOR YOUR STOMACH'S SAKE)

Cures Him—Comes Back and Pays For It
It's the Acid Test of Man and Eatonic They Both Win!

It takes a big man to stand up and say "I am wrong and willing to do right"; and it is needless to say that this poor sufferer will not want for EATONIC as long as he lives.

To stomach sufferers and those not getting full strength out of their food, suffering from indigestion, dyspepsia, sour stomach, bloaty, gassy feeling after eating, stomach distress of any kind, we say, Go, get a box of EATONIC today, use it according to the directions and you will know what real stomach comfort means. Tens of thousands all over the land are using EATONIC and testify to its powers to heal. If you suffer another day it is your own fault.

EATONIC costs little—a cent or two a day. Buy EATONIC from your druggist.

Most Startling Endorsement Ever Published

Mr. A. W. Cramer, Registered Pharmacist and Druggist of Plano, Illinois, writes under date of December 12, 1916:

"Eatonic Remedy Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—The following incident which happened in my place of business I know will be of great interest to you, and, I hope, of great benefit to humanity, morally and physically.

I keep a quantity of EATONIC piled on my show case. I recently missed a box, and knowing neither myself nor clerk had sold it, I could not account for its disappearance. Yesterday morning a man walked into my store and said: "Mr. Cramer, I owe you fifty cents for a box of EATONIC which I stole from your show case. I am bothered with stomach trouble and, not having the money to spare to get a box, I took it. EATONIC has done me so much good my conscience bothered me until I had to come back and pay for it."

This is the most wonderful testimonial statement in all my experience in the interest of any preparation. It is positive proof, to my mind, that EATONIC is all that is claimed for it. If it had not helped this man his conscience would have left him unmolested. Very truly yours,
A. W. Cramer."

Notice to Tax Payers

Tax payers who have purchased treasury certificates of indebtedness maturing June 25, 1918, should use such certificates in payment of their income taxes, and should not present them for payment in cash. This is of the utmost importance to the financial arrangements of the government at this time. It is hoped that tax payers possessing these certificates will avail themselves of the privilege extended; and, by so doing, extend a favor to the treasury department.

LIKE MOTHER USED TO MAKE

Khaki Clad Boy With a Lump in Throat Welcomes Home Cooking.

Imagine your boy on a troop train bound for some United States seaport where a transport lies ready to take him and his regiment "over there." He never felt healthier in his life—in body. In mind? If he finds moments when his thoughts begin to race back toward you, wondering what you are doing, can you blame him if occasionally something lumps in his throat about as comfortable as a billiard ball?

And then the train grinds to a standstill. Some one yells, "Big eats; oh, boy!" as several Red Cross uniforms flash out in the crowd on the station platform. For here is a Red Cross emergency canteen. Here he can get coffee—good, hot coffee—sandwiches, candy, tobacco, fruit, postal cards and almost anything that he may have forgotten.

Does it help his spirits? Does it? Does it cheer him to get these snacks of good home tasting food served by women like those in his own family? Probably the most valuable part of the Red Cross canteen service work is the effect of the smile and cheer from the women who are in charge. Soldiers write frequently such messages as the following, indicating their appreciation of this branch of Red Cross work:

"The Red Cross of Chicago met us with coffee, sandwiches and post cards. I hope the Montana women are all doing the same. Chicago sure is a big city and plenty of pep. Join the Red Cross and help the boys who have volunteered their lives."

There are now more than 500 of these Red Cross canteens or refreshment units located at the important railroad centers in the United States. Every commander of a troop train has a list of these canteens, so that he can call upon the Red Cross for this service at these stations en route.

Women Give $36,000,000.

Thousands of patriotic women in all parts of the United States are freely giving their time to make surgical dressings, knit goods, hospital garments, comfort kits, socks and sweaters. The value of this labor given by American women is estimated at $36,000,000 a year.

The Red Cross operates in France a motor truck transportation service with 250 motor trucks.

A Sluggish Liver Needs Attention

An Inactive Liver Affects the Kidneys and Deranges the Stomach and Bowels.

Too much stress can not be placed on the necessity of keeping the liver in good condition; upon it the health of the body largely depends. When the liver becomes sluggish, the kidneys are overworked, the digestive fluids are not properly secreted and a languid, bilious, nervous or sick headachy condition results. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body. Constipation, bloating, dizziness, belching, pain or soreness in the right side, impaired vision and, in fact, most diseases have their origin in an inactive liver. An inactive liver is easily corrected if taken in time, but the only way to doctor is to get at the cause. Glando Tonic is a liver remedy that has a splendid record for renewing activity, removing the poisons and building up the system. For bilious attacks, it can not be beaten. Mothers who are nursing a baby should take Glando Tonic to keep the bowels well regulated. This will keep baby's bowels in a good condition. Glando Tonic is a three-in-one treatment that brings results. A trial will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials will be furnished upon request. Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be obtained by sending 50c direct to the Grand-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JUNE 20 1918 NO. 28

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

CAMP SHELBY, June 8, 1918

DEAR PARENTS:—

Everyone was expecting to see an eclipse of the sun this evening, but along came a rain and plenty of black clouds and spoiled it all. The only sign there is is the added darkness.

This is the only evening in the week that we do not have school, and it is certainly appreciated. Most of the fellows go on pass or about the camp. There are a few ununlucky ones, though: these are the fellows who do some little thing during the week and get demerit marks, or, as we term them, "skins." The ones that get "skinned" have to walk back and forth across the parade ground as if they were walking post. So far, I have escaped; but don't know when I may get it. Some of the things for which demerits are given are not saluting properly, turning the head while at attention, looking at the ground while marching, not standing at attention properly. You can see from that that we are to act the soldier from the time we get up in the morning until we go to bed at night. I told you that we were on the go from 5:30 in the morning until 9:00 at night. Now it is from 5:00 on. It is just go all the time, and the ones who get commissions will sure earn them.

I like the artillery better every day. I was a little doubtful at first, but it takes more studying and not so much walking, and that is a little more pleasant these hot days. I am getting to be an expert horseman. After the first day's riding, I felt like a man of 60; but am getting a little better acquainted with the actions of the "dashing steeds."

There is a bunch of fine fellows here, the greater part of whom are college men. They come from all parts of the country, and one is fortunate in getting in with a bunch of fellows like that. Of course, there will be a big bunch who will not be commissioned (50%); but even if I should be among this bunch, I would consider my time well spent, not only for what it would help me as a soldier, but what it does toward character building.

There is nothing attractive to this place, and everyone wants to get where things will be more exciting than fighting mosquitoes, digging sand out of the eyes and hunting a shady place. The artillery camp here is considered one of the best in the United States, and that is the reason they stay here. You could shoot for 5 or 6 miles and not be in danger of hitting anyone; for all there is through here is an occasional "coon" shack, with a family of pigs occupying the ground floor and the real owners the rest. Oxen are very common through here, too. That is about all the natives use. I even saw a yoke hitched to a disk the other day.

I don't get to see much of the other fellows from DeKalb county who came down here, and don't expect to see the greater part of them until the war is over, for they have gone. The most of them who are left are non-coms. So they will stay for quite a while yet. We in this camp will be sent wherever they may see fit to send us after we have completed our course, which will probably be France. We all hope so.

Hoging this will find you all well, I will close. As even your son,

RALPH SECHLER.

"The American Creed."

"I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed, a democracy in a republic, a sovereign nation of many sovereign states, a perfect union, one and inseperable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes. I therefore, believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies."

Paul Perry Decorated

St. Joe boys are winning distinctions on every hand—all honor to them!—but Paul Perry, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Perry, has been honored as but few are honored. He has been awared the Croix de Guerre (war cross) the highest distinction that is paid a soldier, by the French government. This cross is given only to those who have performed acts of particular bravery; and thus to be singled out from the others and decorated is an honor every soldier in France covets. He received the cross on May 8, according to a letter to his parents; but, with becoming modesty, he does not state what he did to merit it.

One interesting feature about Paul's decoration is that he received the Croix de Guerre on his birthday, being 24 years old at the time.

Later.—Since the foregoing was written, the way in which Paul won the Croix de Guerre has been learned, but details are lacking. It is known that he went out between the lines under fire and brought in a wounded Frenchman, a deed of bravery that won him official notice. His parents are proud of their boy—and justly so—and eluted over his distinguishing himself; and St. Joe joins with them.

Take off your hat to Paul Perry!

Letter From Chas. Bassett

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Bassett are in receipt of a letter from their son, Charles, written at Jefferson barracks, near St. Louis, last Saturday. The young man does not state what branch of the service he is in, although when he left St. Joe, he contemplated enlisting as an automobile repairer. He does not know whether he will stay where he is or not, but expects to be transferred to some other camp.

He is certain on but one point, and that is that he has been duly enrolled in Uncle Sam's army. He passed the physical examination all right, and some idea of its rigidity can be gained by the fact that it lasted from 10 a. m. till 4:30 p. m.

Charley is the stuff that soldiers are made of: he became 18 years of age on May 11; and within a month (June 8), he volunteered in the service of his country. He is another boy over whom St. Joe may feel proud.

Stole an Auto Tube

An act of stealing had not been pulled off in St. Joe for many months until just a few nights ago, when a sneak (—— ——) entered Joe Hull's auto and took an inner tube. The fellow was seen in the act, and Joe kindly asks that he return the stolen property and avoid trouble. This is no bluff, and the thief will find out so to his cost if he fail to heed this warning.

No School Reunion

There will be no reunion of the Spencerville Old School association this year. Those who have attended these annual events will be disappointed at learning this, for they undoubtedly have looked forward to the 1918 meeting with pleasant anticipations after the enjoyable time they had a year ago. The management, however, thought it best to postpone the meeting for at least one year on account of the war, a conclusion that every member of the association will endorse. The old school is an American institution and so are the graduates American—too American not to make a sacrifice for the land that gave them the old school.

Is Kicked by a Horse

Lem Farver, a farmer living near Concord, was painfully injured by a horse about noon Sunday; and while he is still in bed as a result, there is, in the opinion of Dr. Shook, who has the case in charge, nothing serious to be apprehended. The kick landed in the pit of the stomach, and the patient was badly bruised and is still very sore. The horse is one that Mr. Farver recently purchased. He entered the stall where it was and touched it without speaking to it and it kicked.

Injured by a Fall

Mrs. B. E. Widney was injured by a fall Friday evening. She was working in a manger in the barn at the the time of the accident, standing up and holding to a board. The board broke and she fell to the cement floor, striking on the back of her head, rendering her unconscious. Medical aid was necessary. She is improving and out of danger.

WHAT THEY MISS

Written for the Allen County Rural Review, New Haven, by Art Long, brother of Mrs. William Miller, of St. Joe. The author is in France.

They send us pocket Bibles
To make us lads behave,
They send us bright trench mirrors
To help us when we shave,
Powders for our face and feet,
Cold cream and camphor ice;
But never any poison
For the hungry army lice.

They send us Wrigley's doublemint.
It's really very nice.
They send us little sewing kits,
With which we sew and splice;
Wrist watches and bright wristlets,
And "ukes" on which to strum:
But never any poison
For the hungry army chum.

Yes, dear friends, we've got them,
And we've got them very bad.
The pesky things keep biting
Till they almost drive us mad;
They're after us continually—
Morning, noon and night:
And every time they grab a chunk,
We know old "Sherm" was right.

New Egg Depot.

Because of the passage of the rigid law governing the candling of all eggs before they are disposed of by all grocers, we the merchants of St. Joe have entered into the agreement, that all eggs shall be handled by one man. L. B. MEEK has agreed to prepare for the candling of the eggs and to pay the highest market prices. In order to handle the business the room beside the meat market will be fitted up and the Cream station will be moved into the same room. Farmers will please remember that this act is compulsory and that we shall endeavor to care for our customers as before. Just bring your egg and cream checks when trading, and we will be glad to cash them for you or exchange goods for same.

A Word to Coal Buyers.

The Government through the fuel administration has advised everybody to lay in their coal as much as possible during the spring and summer months. The dealers also are urged to lay in their supply now.

The reason for this is, the government will need the coal as soon as cold weather sets in more than now and the car supply will be short, therefore they ask domestic consumers to buy now. This we are doing and we hope to continue doing. But we must have our coal bills paid promptly as most of this coal is paid for before we unload it and it takes money to buy coal.

We ask you to give this your attention us we will have to insist that all back bills are paid at once as coal is CASH with us. We have kept St. Joe in coal during the worst coal famine the country has ever known and we will try to keep on doing so, but we must have your co-operation, we mean PAY UP.

Let every citizen do his duty—We are doing ours.

Arbitrate!

By BOOTH TARKINGTON
Of The Vigilantes

In wartime the strike is not the remedy for profiteering. Publicity and action by the government are the remedies for profiteering. Profiteering that brings on a strike is, in effect, not better than treason; but a strike may itself be an attempt to "profiteer" and therefore not better in result than treason. Every sensible person, however, understands that workmen are entitled to as high wages as they can get without interfering with the utmost possible efficiency of industry engaged in the prosecution of the war. A strike does interfere with such efficiency, and therefore means a larger casualty list and increased danger to the country. That is to say: if I am a war industry workman on strike I am prolonging the war and adding to the risk of America's defeat in the war. This means that I cause death and wounds to a certain number of American boys who would have come home safe and sound to their mothers if I hadn't gone on strike. That is the simple truth; and if I am impeding a war industry by going on strike, I might just as well have torn and tortured the bodies of those boys myself. The responsibility is so terrible that no workman who understands it would take it, except to avoid a greater amount of torture and death at home through starvation wages.

Arbitration will give him what he needs and what he justifiably wants. The whole country understands that a workman cannot live today on the wages of ten years ago. Wages have got to advance, of course, as the price of commodities advances; and the price of commodities advances, of course, as wages advance; though it is to the advantage of the workman to let the price of commodities begin to advance first. But his wages must take account of higher prices, and permit him not only life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, but allow him to save, as well. That is all that any man on this earth is entitled to whether he be garbage man or kaiser; and it is all that is worth getting; and the ideal of this country is that every man shall have it. This is what we are fighting for; that no man shall take away this right from another man, that no man shall make another man his slave, as the Germans have made conquered labor their slave and as they would make slaves of us if they conquered us.

Now such is the temper of our country that the responsibility for a strike which means more death, more crippling, more blinding, more shot away faces, for our young men, sons of workingmen and sons of capitalists, fighting side by side and comrades "over there," as they will be over here when they come home—the responsibility for such a strike is an infinitely heavier and more dangerous thing than those who rashly assume that responsibility can know, and no decent human being could be so selfish and so treacherous to his country as knowingly to bring about such a strike.

And the temper of the country in these days is to know causes as well as results. Where the greediness of a profiteer has caused a strike, his money will not be envied him for he shall not have it, nor his liberty either. And it is unthinkable that American workmen, or workmen who are human beings, for that matter—it is unthinkable that they will strike, even for mere justice, without having to the last utmost atom of their energy pressed for settlement by arbitration.

The syndicate service, founded by Samuel Gompers and representing the point of view of the American Federation of Labor, reports an address by William Mosses, president of the Pattern Makers' Union of Great Britain. Mr. Mosses was speaking in the Labor Temple in San Francisco. He said: "We were requested to abrogate our working rules and agreements . . . to give up everything that tended to restrict output. . . . Being convinced that this was necessary, unless we desired to see the entire world subjugated by German autocracy, we recommended that our unions submit to the request made by the government. . . . This meant that there was to be no stoppage of work during the war. It meant the acceptance of compulsory arbitration. . . . We have secured better results through arbitration than by resorting to the strike, which should be used as a last resort after all else has failed. If this is done, the strike weapon will rest in its scabbard."

And Mr. Mosses said another thing worth thinking about. "Today labor in Great Britain is more prosperous than ever before in its history. . . . Our influence is greater than ever before and our workers are enjoying wealth beyond the dream of avarice."

Not only is arbitration necessary, but it pays!

PASSING OF MR. JOHNSTON

By ISOBEL FIELD
of the Vigilantes.

The traditional Englishman, he of the eyeglass and the haw-haw manner, has been thrown into the discard. The last four years have changed our views on many things and today when we think of a Britisher it is not as we used to see him, in caricature, but as he is, a simple, likable, friendly chap, and "a first-class fighting man."

Another figure has gone, never to return: the dancing, bowing, frog-eating Alphonse, the very opposite in every particular to the real Frenchman we have come to know, whose very name is the personification of valor.

Guiseppe, he of the organ and monkey, with a stiletto in his belt and a plate of macaroni in the near distance, is displaced by a bold Alpini fighting in the clouds, or a dashing, gallant Bersegliero defending his country to the last drop of his blood.

There is a personage nearer home that we must be prepared to lose, Mistah Johnston, the Darktown coon. He is no more. Gradually there has appeared in his place a stern young American, trained and alert, musket in hand. There is no hyphen to his name. His forefathers were Africans, but he is loyal United States.

When the colored troops marched down Fifth avenue for the last time before going to France, the newspapers reported that they were given a "tumultuous ovation." As a matter of fact, there was little cheering. The dense masses that lined the side-walls and filled the windows and overhanging balconies looked on in growing wonder. Here and there a patter of gloved hands or a "bravo" was drowned in the beat of drums and the tramp of many feet. The sight of the long, long line of khaki-clad figures marching like clock-work; the strange grim faces that might have been cast in bronze—eyes straight ahead, with not a side glance or a gleam of white teeth; company after company led by smart, soldierly colored officers, all on their way to the battlefront, was too awe-inspiring for noise. The crowds gave them the deeper homage of breathless surprised silence. They came to applaud Mistah Johnston and beheld in his place a bold warrior who commanded their respect and admiration.

THE NEW LIFE

By ZOE ADKINS
of the Vigilantes.

This is an Intermission: Time stands still,
And we—as lost as children in a haze—
To take from some heritage of other days
Forgotten faith and unsuspected will:
We have gone back, like children, to our knees,
And we have learned the sad and splendid pride
Of those whose dearest gloriously died,
Knowing our own face Death across the seas.

Oh, after this—when joy-bells ring out peace,
And home our war-tired heroes come again,
Shall we not vow ourselves, when war shall cease,
To a new life, and prove that not in vain
We saw the Prussian sword drawn from its sheath
And neutral lands—and children—fall beneath?

THE FASHION OF 1918

By ISOBEL FIELD.
of the Vigilantes.

Her hat was plainly old fashioned, and the ribbon that adorned it had evidently been cleaned and pressed with a hot iron; her tailor-made suit, though well fitting, was faded in color and cut in the mode of year before last; but she walked down Fifth avenue among the best-dressed women in the world with a swing of the skirts and a noble condescension of glance that attracted my attention. I watched her with interest, sauntering a little ahead and stopping at shop windows to study her as she passed.

Was she a great painter, authoress or poet puffed up with her well-deserved fame? No, her face was not familiar, as, in these days of newspaper photography it would be were she of the elect. She was neither young nor strikingly beautiful, yet why the grand manner as of one above the common herd?

Suddenly she paused beside me to cast an indifferent glance at a dazzling array of diamonds in a shop window and then I discovered the secret of her proud bearing. What need had she of fine clothes or feathers in her hat? She was dressed in the height of the fashion of 1918. On the breast of her shabby jacket she wore a little service bar and on that bar were three blue stars!

EXPOSE EVERY ONE

By HARRY V. MARTIN
of the Vigilantes.

While we are at it, reporting German spies to the federal government, why not go a little further and give your local food administrator the names of those grocers and butchers who are charging more for their goods than they should? By helping to force up the cost of living, already deucedly high, these petit larceny profiteers, although waving the American flag at every opportunity, are really helping the kaiser. Their safety lies in the fact that they are too insignificant to come under the notice of investigators employed by Uncle Sam.

Here is your opportunity, Mr. or Mrs. or Miss Citizen. A chance to air that detective instinct that is within us all. A very good way of "doing your bit," and one that is bound to be appreciated. It stands to reason that the food administrator in your town and county has his hands full taking care of the big things. Give him a lift by appointing yourself, this very instant, as one of his assistants to ferret out the meanest men and women in all the world, the criminals who see in the war a chance to get rich quick at the expense of their own countrymen.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

CHERADAME'S GREAT IDEA

Andre Cheradame, recognized authority on pan-Germanism, lays before the allies a daring plan for organizing scientifically a revolution against pan-Germany within its very boundaries. He is confident that 60,000,000 German-hating people of Bohemia, Galicia, Herzegovina, Transylvania, Bukowina and Poland can be aroused to active rebellion and that they can be supplied with arms and ammunition by squadrons of giant airplanes like the Capronis. This, says M. Cheradame, is the sure way to end the war.

When Andre Cheradame states facts about middle Europe and the Balkans he speaks as a very high authority on such questions. Also, when he suggests a practical course of action based on those facts he demands most serious attention as a man whose previous foresights, enunciated in minute detail through more than two decades, have been strikingly and completely borne out by the course of events. Thirteen years before the war came, Cheradame, from investigations made on the ground, not merely predicted its coming, but in his book, "Europe and the Question of Austria on the Threshold of the Twentieth Century," foretold precisely the strategy which Germany would pursue to bring her to the position she holds today, with her prewar aims more than nine-tenths attained. Ten years before the collapse of Russia, Cheradame, from studies made on the ground, pointed out in his book, "The World and the Russo-Japanese War," that Russia was eliminated for at least a generation as a military power and would crumble if put to the test. In both cases his statements were treated with mildly superior scorn.

SEES TRAGEDY OF FRENCH BABIES

HARRIS & EWING

"Can you imagine anything more pitiful than the lives of children who have never known anything but war? Is there anywhere on God's green earth a more dreadful tragedy than the tragedy of a blighted childhood?" asked Dr. Esther Lovejoy on returning from Red Cross work in France.

"I have spent six months in the nearest approach to hell that exists, I believe, in or out of the teachings of the theologians—the hell where babies are born to hear the sound of bursting shells as their introduction to this world of ours, where little ones learn their mother tongue only furtively and in whispers, where children must learn to wear their little gas masks as soon as they learn to walk, where suspicion and fear rule and love and confidence are not. And I'm going back again to stay until the German army and German ideas and beliefs are wiped off the face of the earth."

When she first went to France last August it was with no idea of remaining. She had been practicing medicine in her home city of Portland, Ore., for a good many years—incidentally having held the post of health commissioner. She went East to attend the 1917 annual convention of the Medical Women's National association, and that organization asked her to make the trip to France to report on the needs of French women and children and the ways in which American women physicians could help. She went, and joined the Red Cross staff.

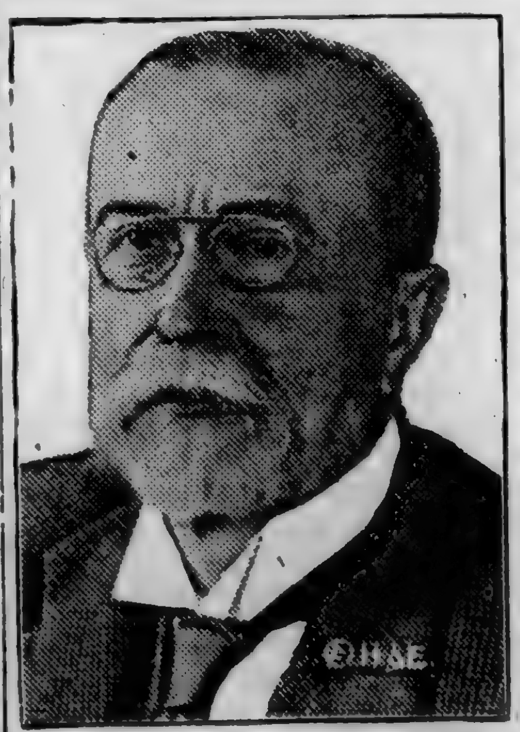
ANOTHER BIG MAN ENLISTED

When James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel corporation, was selected for the position of director of operations of the shipping board, the steel industry felt a man had been chosen who is pre-eminently fitted to handle a job involving a knowledge of shipping. Through his development of the foreign trade of the Steel corporation he has acquired information and experience which will be of great benefit in increasing the government's capacity for transporting men and supplies to the European war front.

Born at New Haven, on February 15, 1863, Mr. Farrell started his steel career in a wire mill while he was yet in his teens. While his work in the shops was considered satisfactory he gained an early reputation as a salesman with the Pittsburgh Wire company. Soon after this concern was taken over by the American Steel and Wire company, Mr. Farrell was made general salesmanager. He filled this position with such success that when the company decided to enter the foreign field he was offered and accepted the post of foreign sales agent.

When the Steel corporation absorbed the American Steel and Wire company he continued in the same capacity, and finally upon the organization of the United States Steel Products company he was made its head, from which position he jumped to the presidency of the Steel corporation.

LEADER OF BOHEMIANS



Dr. Thomas G. Masaryk, president of the Czecho-Slovak National council, which is also a provisional republican government for Bohemia, had a conference with President Wilson recently, and soon thereafter the administration announced that America supported the aspirations of Bohemia for independence from Austria.

Doctor Masaryk is a Czech, professor in the University of Prague and deputy for Moravia to the Vienna parliament. Shortly after the world war broke out he fled from Austria and became a leader of the Czecho-Slovak revolution against Austria.

Masaryk was born in 1850 in Moravia, in the same district in which 300 years earlier was born that great teacher of nations, John Amos Comenius. His father was a coachman and Thomas was destined to become a blacksmith, but at the age of fifteen he entered the gymnasium of Brno, Moravia, and in 1872 commenced to study at the University of Vienna. Masaryk knows the United States well. He came here for the first time in 1878 to get acquainted, at first hand, with the greatest democracy of the world.

Indiana Brevities

Indianapolis.—Indianapolis and Indiana will be included in the survey to be made by the government to ascertain which industries not doing war work may be utilized for that purpose, and to disclose what industries now engaged in war work may increase their production. Indianapolis factories, it is said, are largely occupied in making war products although it is pointed out that some of them may increase their facilities for this sort of work and accept additional contracts. The Indianapolis chamber of commerce, it is announced, will have charge of the Indiana survey and meetings will be held to which factory owners will be invited. Every type of industry will be asked to co-operate and each will be prevailed upon to increase production. Through the regional plan it is proposed to prevent duplication and the dislocation of labor as well as providing suitable housing where necessary.

Indianapolis.—L. H. Wright, chairman of the state highway commission, announced that the commission has released from its employ its entire force, consisting of approximately 40 engineers and assistants and other workers, pending the decision of the supreme court in the case before it on appeal from a Hamilton county court, which declares the highway commission law invalid. The action has been taken, according to Wright, because the commission did not wish to incur any expense in connection with work under the highway law, until it has been definitely established that the law is valid. In case the supreme court should hold it invalid, expense incurred by the commission could not be met legally.

Washington, D. C.—Indiana in general, and Indianapolis in particular, are destined to play an even more important part in the nation's war activities in the future than they have at any time in the past. The various bureaus of the war department, impressed with the splendid geographical situation of the state and its capital city and fully aware of the eager patriotism of its people, mean to make a larger use of its advantages in the future conduct of the war. The chief feature of the war program as it affects Indiana is the proposal to convert Fort Benjamin Harrison into a large signal corps training camp.

Indianapolis. — The first officers' school of the brigade of the Indiana state militia came to a close at the statehouse after two days of lectures and other instruction for the officers of the state military organization. Governor Goodrich appeared unexpectedly before the officers at the session and made a short address. He discussed with them confidential information concerning possible situations outside the state into which, he said, the militia might be called at any time, and he thanked the men of the militia for the time and effort they are giving to make the state organization a success.

Indianapolis.—Plans for aiding the farmers of Indiana in the harvest season now are being made in practically every city of the state. Owing to a shortage of labor, occasioned by the big drafts of men for military service, not enough workers ordinarily would be available to store hay and take care of the ripening wheat. Arrangements to offset this lack include the pledging of professional men and others in cities to devote some time to the farms. College students and high school boys also are aiding.

Indianapolis.—With the action of the Federal Reserve banks in notifying member banks that notes of farmers secured by wheat in their own granaries will be accepted for rediscount, the last doubt as to the ability of the nation to finance its great wheat crop has disappeared. Announcement regarding the rediscounting privilege was made recently by W. A. Heath, chairman of the board of directors of the Federal Reserve bank of Chicago, in a conversation with an Indianapolis banker.

Petersburg.—Pike county has a new oil field. The Bement Oil company, which was drilling for gas on the James Way farm, six miles south of this city, struck ten feet of oil sand at a depth of 1,100 feet. The well soon filled up 125 feet with oil. It was shot and promises to yield from 80 to 50 barrels a day. The well was drilled in wildcat territory, four miles from any other oil well, but one mile west of the great Selby gas well.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich and M. E. Foley, chairman of the state council of defense, have congratulated the farmers of Indiana for the big results accomplished by them in hog production, the increase in which was asked last year by Herbert Hoover, federal food administrator. The organized campaign for more hogs last year will continue during the coming year.

Princeton. — Farmers in Gibson county began the past week cutting their wheat crop. The first wheat to be put into shock was near Owensville. This probably was the first wheat to be cut in Indiana this year. It is believed the yield will be large.

Bloomington. — The Bloomington high school will inaugurate a system of military training next fall, it has been announced by members of the school board. A competent military instructor will be employed and uniforms will be provided all cadets. High school credit will be given for those taking the work.

Indianapolis.—Views of Governor Goodrich on attempts to boost the price of threshing, which has caused a stir in rural districts that it was called to the attention of the state council of defense by H. A. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, were read at the council meeting the past week. They are contained in a letter addressed to Chairman M. E. Foley of the council and suggest that an arbitration board be formed by committees from the council and threshermen's and farmers' organizations. Doctor Barnard told the council that representatives of the United States Grain corporation likely would co-operate with the council in preventing what is held to be an unreasonable demand on the part of some threshermen. Much of the trouble is reported to be in Putnam, Boone, Hendricks, Clay and Parke counties. Prices of 10 cents a bushel for wheat, 12 cents for rye and 5 cents for oats have been agreed upon by threshermen there, while, for example, in Benton county wheat is to be threshed for 5 cents a bushel and oats for 2 cents.

Evansville.—Offers of $2.50 a day for farm labor have been made by farmers who called at the office of Ross N. Atkinson, county agent of Vanderburg county. Wheat is beginning to ripen in this part, and crops must be harvested within the next two weeks if heavy losses are to be avoided. State Employment Agent Krainer is making a round of the factories of Evansville and obtained the consent of employers to let their men work in the harvest fields for several days if the need actually exists and the crops are in danger. The employees who consented to go to the farms for a few days say that it was on condition that the laws against vagrancy and gambling be rigidly enforced in this city and that the loafers and parasites be forced to either work or go to jail. George S. Clifford, chairman of the county council of defense, has called on Edgar Schmitt, chief of police, and asked that these laws be enforced. All civic organizations of the city have united to co-operate with the farmers of the county in harvesting the bumper wheat crop.

Indianapolis.—J. H. Lowry, superintendent of the city park board, announces that with continued favorable conditions the 21 acres of potatoes now under cultivation at Riverside park will yield about 100 bushels to the acre. The plot of ground was planted in Irish Cobbler, Early Rose and Burbank varieties of "spuds." Mr. Lowry expects a total yield of 1,000 bushels of tomatoes from 8,000 plants under the care of the park board at Riverside park, 150 bushels of sweet potatoes and 100 bushels of sweet corn. Part of the produce will be supplied to the City hospital and the remainder will be sold at cost to the employees of the park board who have been engaged in the work of cultivation.

Jeffersonville.—William Kranz, a farmer of Silver Creek township, has seven acres of alfalfa, and in the same field there is growing a fine stand of volunteer wheat. It is better in condition and appearance than many fields of wheat which were sown last year, but failed to produce good crops. Mr. Kranz says he would have two good crops if he could separate them. Nearby, James B. Green has 94 acres in alfalfa and on 16 acres he is grazing 230 hogs which are unable to keep down the growth. He has cut two tons of hay from the field as well.

Indianapolis.—An absolute trade war on merchandise made in Germany was declared at the fourth annual convention of the Indiana Retail Dry Goods association held Tuesday in this city. Resolutions favoring the passage of laws by congress establishing a national label, "made in the United States of America," and denouncing as disloyal the buying or selling of German wares were adopted unanimously by the large gathering of dealers.

Gary.—To obtain for Gary a portion of the $60,000,000 housing appropriation by the government, the Gary Commercial club has named a committee to go to Washington and present the Gary claims. The city asks for $3,000,000 with which to build houses for war workers. There is said to be great need for houses here on account of the thousands of war workers employed at the local steel plants.

Jeffersonville.—Eighty-five inmates of the Indiana reformatory were transferred to the Indiana state farm under an order received from Governor Goodrich. It is understood the transfer was made because there is a shortage of labor for important work and much spare accomodation at the state farm. Those transferred were selected from the short sentence men and from those who had the better records.

South Bend.—In addressing the Indiana Sunday school convention here, Mayor F. R. Carson publicly apologized for the nonenforcement of the liquor laws in South Bend. He craved the indulgence of the visitors during the three days of the convention because, he asserted, the city administration has not been and is not capable of enforcing the state prohibition law.

Connersville. — One hundred and twenty men, boys and girls are enrolled in corn-growing contests, pig-raising or canning contests in this county. The county agricultural agent expects the number to reach 150 before entries are closed.

Terre Haute.—According to the report of Ira Holland and Vic C. Palmer, field examiners of the state board of accounts, which is on file here, the expenses of election supplies alone for Terre Haute was $11,935.75, which is a sum greater than the entire cost in either South Bend, Fort Wayne or Evansville.

AN AMERICAN SOLDIER WHO WENT

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

MACHINE GUNNER, SERVING IN FRANCE

©1917 BY ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

EMPEY HAS NARROW ESCAPE WHILE ON PATROL DUTY IN NO MAN'S LAND.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Chaplain distinguishes himself by rescuing wounded men under hot fire. With pick and shovel Empey has experience as a trench digger in No Man's Land. Exciting experience on listening post detail. Exciting work on observation post duty.

Quite a contrast to Wilson was another character in our brigade named Scott; we called him "Old Scotty" on account of his age. He was fifty-seven, although looking forty. "Old Scotty" had been born in the Northwest and had served in the Northwest Mounted police. He was a typical cowpuncher and Indian fighter and was a dead shot with the rifle, and took no pains to disguise this fact from us. He used to take care of his rifle as if it were a baby. In his spare moments you could always see him cleaning it or polishing the stock. Woe betide the man who by mistake happened to get hold of this rifle; he soon found out his error. Scott was as deaf as a mule, and it was amusing at parade to watch him in the manual of arms, slyly glancing out of the corner of his eye at the man next to him to see what the order was. How he passed the doctor was a mystery to us; he must have bluffed his way through, because he certainly was independent. Beside him the Fourth of July looked like Good Friday. He wore at the time a large sombrero, had a Mexican stock saddle over his shoulder, a lariat on his arm, and a "forty-five" hanging from his hip. Dumping this paraphernalia on the floor he went up to the recruiting officer and shouted: "I'm from America, west of the Rockies, and want to join your d——d army. I've got no use for a German and can shoot some. At Scotland Yard they turned me down; said I was deaf and so I am. I don't hanker to ship in with a d——d mud-crunching outfit, but the cavalry's full, so I guess this regiment's better than none, so trot out your papers and I'll sign 'em." He told them he was forty and slipped by. I was on recruiting service at the time he applied for enlistment.

It was Old Scotty's great ambition to be a sniper or "body snatcher," as Mr. Atkins calls it. The day that he was detailed as brigade sniper he celebrated his appointment by blowing the whole platoon to fags.

Being a Yank, Old Scotty took a liking to me and used to spin some great yarns about the plains, and the whole platoon would drink these in and ask for more. Ananias was a rookie compared with him.

The ex-plainsman and discipline could not agree, but the officers all liked him, even if he was hard to manage, so when he was detailed as a sniper a sigh of relief went up from the officers' mess.

Old Scotty had the freedom of the brigade. He used to draw two or three days' rations and disappear with his glass, range finder and rifle, and we would see or hear no more of him until suddenly he would reappear with a couple of notches added to those already on the butt of his rifle. Every time he got a German it meant another notch. He was proud of these notches.

But after a few months Father Rheumatism got him and he was sent to Blighty; the air in the wake of his stretcher was blue with curses. Old Scotty surely could swear; some of his outbursts actually burned you.

No doubt, at this writing, he is "somewhere in Blighty" pussy footing it on a bridge or along the wall of some munition plant with the "G. R." or Home Defense corps.

CHAPTER XVII.

Out in Front.

After tea Lieutenant Stores of our section came into the dugout and informed me that I was "for" a reconnoitering patrol and would carry six Mills bombs.

At 11:30 that night twelve men, our lieutenant and myself went out in front on a patrol in No Man's Land.

We cruised around in the dark for about two hours, just knocking about looking for trouble, on the lookout for Boche working parties to see what they were doing.

Around two in the morning we were carefully picking our way about thirty yards in front of the German barbed wire, when we walked into a Boche covering party nearly thirty strong. Then the music started, the fiddler rendered his bill, and we paid.

Fighting in the dark with a bayonet is not very pleasant. The Germans took it on the run, but our officer was no novice at the game and didn't follow them. He gave the order "down on the ground, hug it close."

Just in time, too, because a volley skimmed over our heads. Then in low tones we were told to separate and crawl back to our trenches, each man on his own.

We could see the flashes of their rifles in the darkness, but the bullets were going over our heads.

We lost three men killed and one wounded in the arm. If it hadn't been for our officer's quick thinking the whole patrol would have probably been wiped out.

After about twenty minutes' wait we went out again and discovered that the Germans had a wiring party working on their barbed wire. We returned to our trenches unobserved with the information and our machine guns immediately got busy.

The next night four men were sent out to go over and examine the German barbed wire and see if they had cut lanes through it; if so, this presaged an early morning attack on our trenches.

A Hidden Gun.

Of course I had to be one of the four selected for the job. It was just like sending a fellow to the undertaker's to order his own coffin.

At ten o'clock we started out, armed with three bombs, a bayonet and revolver. After getting into No Man's Land we separated. Crawling four or five feet at a time, ducking star shells, with strays cracking overhead, I reached their wire. I scouted along this inch by inch, scarcely breathing. I could hear them talking in their trench, my heart was pounding against my ribs. One false move or the least noise from me meant discovery and almost certain death.

After covering my sector I quietly crawled back. I had gotten about half way when I noticed that my revolver was missing. It was pitch dark. I turned about to see if I could find it; it couldn't be far away, because about three or four minutes previously I had felt the butt in the holster. I crawled around in circles and at last found it, then started on my way back to our trenches, as I thought.

Pretty soon I reached barbed wire, and was just going to give the password when something told me not to. I put out my hand and touched one of the barbed wire stakes. It was iron. The British are of wood, while the German are iron. My heart stopped beating; by mistake I had crawled back to the German lines.

I turned slowly about and my tunic caught on the wire and made a loud ripping noise.

A sharp challenge rang out. I sprang to my feet, ducking low, and ran madly back toward our lines. The Germans started firing. The bullets were biting all around me, when bang! I ran smash into our wire, and a sharp challenge, "'Alt, who comes there?" rang out. I gasped out the password and, groping my way through the lane in the wire, tearing my hands and uniform, I tumbled into our trench and was safe, but I was a nervous wreck for an hour, until a drink of rum brought me round.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Staged Under Fire.

Three days after the incident just related our company was relieved from the front line and carried. We stayed in reserve billets for about two weeks when we received the welcome news that our division would go back of the line "to rest billets." We would remain in these billets for at least two months, this in order to be restored to our full strength by drafts of recruits from Blighty.

Everyone was happy and contented at these tidings; all you could hear around the billets was whistling and singing. The day after the receipt of the order we hiked for five days, making an average of about twelve kilos per day until we arrived at the small town of O'——.

It took us about three days to get settled, and from then on our cushy time started. We would parade from 8:45 in the morning until 12 noon. Then except for an occasional billet or brigade guard we were on our own. For the first four or five afternoons I spent my time in bringing up to date my neglected correspondence.

Tommy loves to be amused, and being a Yank, they turned to me for something new in this line. I taught them how to pitch horseshoes, and this game made a great hit for about ten days. Then Tommy turned to America for a new diversion. I was up in the air until a happy thought came to me. Why not write a sketch and break Tommy in as an actor?

One evening after "lights out," when you are not supposed to talk, I imparted my scheme in whispers to the section. They eagerly accepted the idea of forming a stock company and could hardly wait until the morning for further details.

After parade, the next afternoon I was almost mobbed. Everyone in the section wanted a part in the proposed sketch. When I informed them that it would take at least ten days of hard work to write the plot, they were bitterly disappointed. I immediately got busy, made a desk out of biscuit tins in the corner of the billet, and put up a sign "Empey & Wallace Theatrical Co." About twenty of the section, upon reading this sign, immediately applied for the position of office boy. I accepted the twenty applicants, and sent them on scouting parties throughout the deserted French village. These parties were to search all the attics for discarded civilian clothes, and anything that we could use in the props of our proposed company.

About five that night they returned covered with grime and dust, but loaded down with a miscellaneous assortment of everything under the sun. They must have thought that I was going to start a department store, judging from the different things they brought back from their pillage.

After eight days' constant writing I completed a two-act farce comedy which I called "The Diamond Palace Saloon." Upon the suggestion of one of the boys in the section I sent a proof of the program to a printing house in London. Then I assigned the different parts and started rehearsing. David Belasco would have thrown up his hands in despair at the material which I had to use. Just imagine trying to teach a Tommy, with a strong cockney accent, to impersonate a Bowery tough or a Southern negro.

Adjacent to our billet was an open field. We got busy at one end of it and constructed a stage. We secured the lumber for the stage by demolishing an old wooden shack in the rear of our billet.

The first scene was supposed to represent a street on the Bowery in New York, while the scene of the second act was the interior of the Diamond Palace saloon, also on the Bowery.

In the play I took the part of Abe Switch, a farmer, who had come from Pumpkinville Center, Tenn., to make his first visit to New York.

In the first scene Abe Switch meets the proprietor of the Diamond Palace saloon, a ramshackle affair which to the owner was a financial loss.

The proprietor's name was Tom Twistem, his bartender being named Fillem Up.

After meeting Abe, Tom and Fillem Up persuaded him to buy the place, praising it to the skies and telling wondrous tales of the money taken over the bar.

> Empey stages his play under difficulties but with great success. The next installment tells about it.

Used Vast Amount of Wire.

It has been estimated that the wire in the cores and sheathing of the world's submarine cables that have been made since they were first used in 1857, would reach from the earth to the moon.

Frill Epoch For Children's Wear

New York.—Do not take the fashion of children's clothes for granted. Do not fall into the error of going on the old methods. There is as much ebb and flow in the tide of juvenile costumery as in adult, so watch straws and then go with the current, is the advice of a prominent fashion writer.

Patterns cannot be handed down from one child's wardrobe to another. What was worn last season is usually out of the picture by the time the new season begins.

Things were not always according to this schedule of variation. For centuries children were dressed alike. Glimpse backward over the portraits that hang in our museums to prove this. The tortuous clothes that were put on infants three centuries ago will most probably make the modern woman, filled to the eyes as she is with the schedules of hygiene and sanitation, want to scream aloud at the misery that was inflicted.

Even the wooden sabots and long full skirts of the small Dutch girl, with her white rabbit, stirs in the mother of the moment a violent feeling of reform. We grieve far more for the discomfort of the young man than for the actual grief of the old.

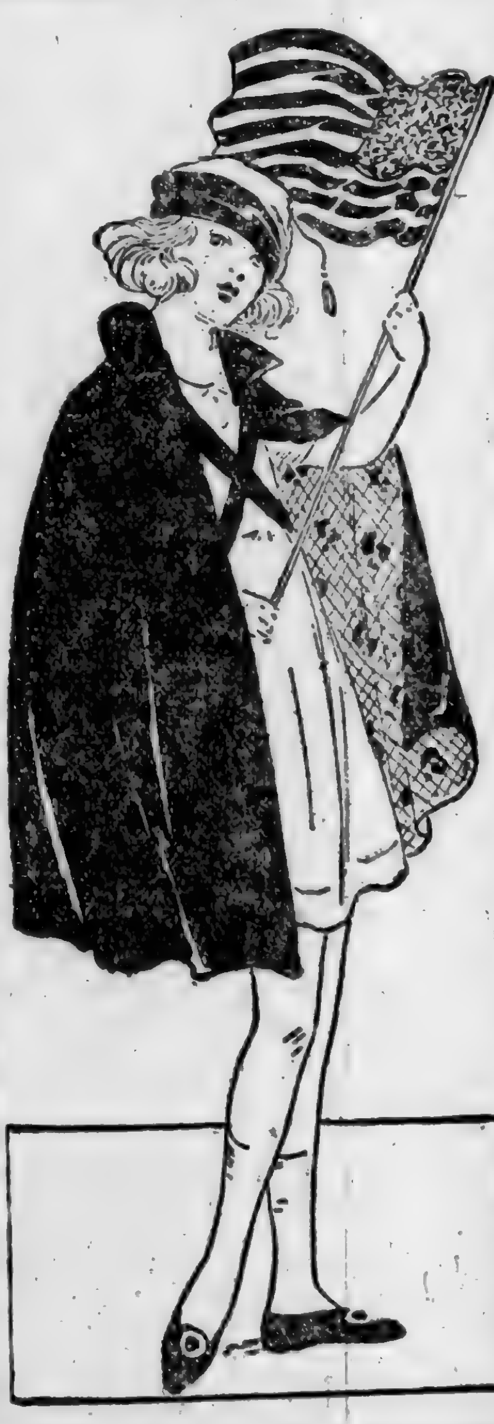
As near to nudity as the law allows has been the modern interpretation of children's clothes, and we have felt that by hardening their legs and arms through constant exposure in the formative years, we are handing them a talisman against weakness and disease in the settled seasons of life.

The elimination of the garter that binds, the corset that restricts, the skirt that hampers, the sleeves that cover, the shoe that pinches, has aided the doctor and the teacher.

Touch of Military.

Does your particular memory go back to the days when to dress a boy child as a Highlander was to prove yourself in the fashion? The swagger of the Gordons was not even omitted from the clothes for small girls. Scotch bonnets were as common among children as they are now among men.

Whether or not it brought the passionate and rebellious shame of Penrod, plaid kilts were placed on boys whose faces burned with indignation at the thought of wearing skirts and showing their knees. Rakish bonnets with a gay feather were perched over scowling brows, and only the Lord Fauntleroys of life were pleased with themselves. And now, when the "Ladies from Hell" have made the costume the cause of wild admiration of every half-grown boy on two continents, the designers will not reinstate it, nor will chastened mothers request their boys to wear it. So that in itself is good evidence that we have wisely and, let us say, forever gotten over the desire for the foolishly pictorial in juvenile clothes.



The cape takes on new grace as worn by the younger generation. Immensely useful for seashore or country is this cape of navy blue serge lined with old rose and blue figured silk.

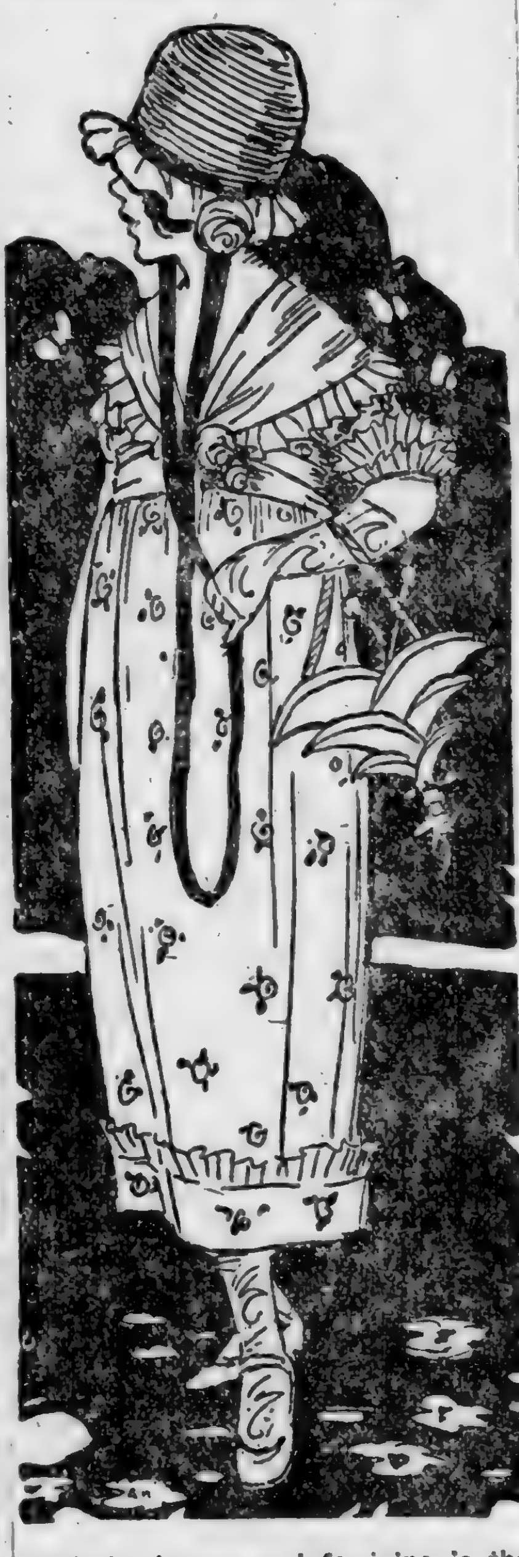
But it is not possible for the war to leave all forms of dressing free from its sinister influence.

It touches the clothes for the young in a gentle way, and the way is not objectionable. Middle youth, as it is expressed at seventeen and younger, finds the avion of France and Italy the most picturesque fields from which to draw a fashion here and there.

The oblong cap, the flowing cape with one end draped over the shoulder, are neat and attractive fashions to use up for the summer season. An illusive kind of Sam Brown belt is becoming a bit common, but it too finds an abiding place on the coat of a slim little suit.

Now, however, that such a big majority of young women find that public opinion permits them to wear breeches, cap and coat for war relief work, they are less apt to use up the military ideas in the more feminine costumes.

In children's clothes there is little of the war that can be adopted, but the plaid sashes from Scotland and Naples and Rome, the short black coats, the multiple pockets, are evidences that war has thrown its shadow downward to the cradle.



Entirely demure and feminine is the effect of this pink-and-blue flowered muslin frock. The fichu is of white organdie; the girdle of blue taffeta fastened with pink rosebuds. The hat is of blue straw, with deep ruffle of taffeta and pink rose over left ear. Long velvet loop finishes the Kate Greenaway picture.

Adopting Fashions of Age.

Between the nursery and middle youth there is a mass of children that must be dressed well throughout the hot season, and for these the designers have turned out enough fashions to supply the demand of a continent of grownups. They smack of sophistication, some of them, and are taken directly from the clothes of their elders.

There is the surplice bodice, the Martha Washington collar which resembles a handkerchief, the patent-leather belt, the umbrella skirt, and the short sleeves—which, after all, age has merely pilfered from youth this spring.

There are still touches of an older war in the retention of the top hat and cape coat in two colors, which was adopted from the directoire and the consulate, after the designers could not force them upon women with any degree of success last winter.

The organdie frocks, which spring like mushrooms from Bar Harbor to the Florida coast this year, are found to be admirable for youth when it is parading itself in the afternoon. It goes well on even the smallest girl. It is chosen in colors as well as white, and now that colored ribbon sashes are revived by old and young, the organdie takes on the atmosphere of the flowery part of the nineteenth century and fits into the landscape as the sport clothes never do.

Grown-Up Fashions in Miniature.

It is a fact that you cannot fail to observe, if you have had occasion to study the recently produced clothes for little girls that some of the styles borrowed from—or, rather, suggested by—the styles launched this spring for mamma's clothes have done rather better in the juvenile version than in the adult. Whatever may be the fate of the eton jacket in grown-up costumery, true it is that not one woman in ten can wear it to advantage. In short, the eton jacket style goes very much better with children than with their mothers or big sisters. Likewise the collar that is always part of the picture with the eton jacket—the round-about collar, that seems to make double chins triple, and hides all the prettiest curves in the grown woman's neck without concealing any of the ugly ones. It is eminently becoming on a little girl; in fact, one never knows what an entirely adorable spot is to be found at the back of a little girl's neck until one has seen it in this eton collar.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 23

JESUS TRIUMPHANT OVER DEATH.

LESSON TEXT—Mary 16:1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Now is Christ risen from the dead.—I Corinthians 15:20.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matthew 28:1-20; Luke 23:56-24:12; John 20:1-25; I Corinthians 15:1-58; I Thessalonians 4:13-18.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' power over death.—Mark 15:42-16:20.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The living Christ.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ's resurrection and the Christian's assurance of immortality.

I. The Ministry of Love (vv. 1-4).

1. By whom (v. 1).

Mary Magdalene, the mother of James and Salome.

2. When (v. 2).

Early in the morning, the first day of the week.

(3) Their perplexity (vv. 3, 4).

They questioned as to who should roll away the large stone from the mouth of the tomb. To their surprise they found the stone removed. They, like us, find their difficulties are removed before they come to them. If they had believed him, their anxieties and sorrows would not have been.

II. The Angel in the Tomb (vv. 5-8).

Jesus knew that these women would come to the sepulcher with unbelieving hearts, so he had an angel waiting there to announce to them the fact of his resurrection. How many times we are helped out of doubts and difficulties by an angel which the omniscient Lord knew would be needed at a particular time. With such companions and helpers no place need seem lonely, and no condition need affright us. The angel's message:

1. "Be not affrighted" (v. 6).

What comforting words these must have been to these bewildered women. The open tomb is the cure for fear; it steadies our hearts when things look dark and we do not understand.

2. "Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, who was crucified (v. 6).

This three-fold designation with marvelous clearness shows:

(1.) His humanity—Jesus.

(2.) Lowly residence—Nazareth.

(3.) Ignominious death—crucified.

3. "He is risen; he is not here; behold the place where they laid him" (v. 6).

These words throw light upon his birth, humility and shameful death. He who was born in lowly circumstances, and suffered the shameful death of the cross, is now the conqueror of death. His resurrection gives meaning to his death. If Christ had not risen, then his death would have been meaningless. "If Christ be not risen, your faith is vain; ye are in your sins" (1 Cor. 15:17).

4. "Go your way, tell his disciples and Peter" (v. 7).

As soon as it was known that Christ had risen from the dead, they were to tell it to the disciples. Knowledge of Christ's triumph involves the responsibility of witnessing concerning it. The disciples all needed this blessed news, but Peter especially since he had so denied him. Wonderful grace, this!

5. "He goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him" (v. 7).

Christ had told the disciples that he would arise from the dead and meet them in Galilee, but their unbelief kept them from this blessed truth.

III. The Appearances of the Risen Christ (vv. 9-14).

These appearances had as their object the restoration of the disciples from their awful failure and discouragement and the convincing them, without the peradventure of a doubt, of Christ's resurrection. Since his resurrection was to be the central theme of apostolic preaching, it was necessary that they have certainty of knowledge as to this matter (Acts 1:3). Without the resurrection of Christ, his death would be meaningless. Out of the ten or more appearances, Mark selects three.

1. To Mary Magdalene (vv. 9-11).

Mary's heart responded to the Saviour's gracious deliverance of her from demons. Her sufferings were no doubt terrible. She is the first to the tomb. Her devotion is amply rewarded by being the first to meet the risen Lord. Light will surely come to the heart that really loves the Lord, though the faith is weak. She went at once and told the sorrowing disciples, but they refused to believe.

2. To two disciples on the way to Emmaus (vv. 12, 13).

Luke gives full particulars concerning this appearance. Jesus had walked, talked, and eaten with them, convincing them that the Lord is risen indeed (Luke 24:13-35). The testimony of such is trustworthy.

3. To the eleven disciples (v. 14).

IV. The Commission of the Risen Lord (vv. 15-18).

After the disciples were convinced of the truth of his resurrection, Christ sent them forth to "preach the Gospel to every creature."

What a glorious and supreme task is this! "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned (v. 16).

V. The Activity of the Enthroned Christ (vv. 19-20).

After giving the disciples their commission, he ascends on high, and from the unseen sphere directs their activities. Wherever they went he confirmed their word.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Prepared For Woman's Use.

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the reliability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attends the making of this great medicine for woman's ills.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used anually and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal substances are at their best.

The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs.

Every utensil and tank that comes in contact with the medicine is sterilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills.

The letters from women who have been restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which we are continually publishing attest to its virtue.

"Conscription of Wealth."

It is the simple fact, so thinks the Monetary Times of Toronto, that the idea of conscription or confiscation of wealth must be abandoned upon this continent. ARTILLERY NEARLY ALL IS MOTORIZED

AMERICAN ARMY TO GO FURTHER IN THIS RESPECT THAN HAS ANY OTHER.

NOTIFYING OF CASUALTIES

How the War Department Informs Relatives of Killed and Wounded Soldiers—Radio and Buzzer Operation Taught in 600 Schools.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—Motorization of field artillery will be carried to a greater extent in the American army than in any other army engaged in the war. Not only will a far greater amount of motor equipment be provided in proportion to the strength of the army, but it will be used for work where armies now in the field depend solely upon horse power and man power.

The ordnance department has succeeded in developing such types of tractors that, exclusive of the heaviest field artillery mounted on railroad carriages, all American artillery will be motorized, with the exception of some of the three-inch gun batteries. The problem of motorization of field artillery is a difficult one, which explains why it has not been carried out to a greater extent than has been the case with the armies that have been fighting in Europe for the last three years.

The possible output of tractors for the transport of field artillery in the United States is practically unlimited, whereas the supply of horses is at present limited and is becoming more so each month.

Relatives of soldiers named in casualty lists forwarded from France ordinarily are notified within 24 hours after receipt of the lists, according to a statement authorized by the war department. A "statistical division," with a staff of officers and a corps of stenographers, gives all its time to the maintenance of files of soldiers' names and addresses. This division notifies relatives.

A copy of the roster of each contingent sailing to join the expeditionary forces is filed in card index fashion, each card bearing the name of one soldier, his organization, and the name and address of parent or other relative or friend designated by him to be notified in emergency. When a casualty list is received from General Pershing each name cabled from the American expeditionary force is listed with the emergency address on file in the card index. As rapidly as the new list with emergency addresses is built up the telegraph clerks get duplicates. These clerks already are supplied with blank telegrams which require only the relative's address, name of sender, nature of casualty and the date, and filling in the blank spaces they get the telegrams off as quickly as possible. In addition to maintaining the telegraph blanks for the sake of speed the statistical division is supplied with sets of form letters to be filled in and mailed when further details are available.

While relatives are generally in receipt of information within 24 hours after the cables are received, delays are sometimes due to clerical errors caused by the fact that names must pass through so many hands in France and in America, incorrect emergency addresses turned in by soldiers, removal of families to addresses other than those listed, and the occasional necessity for cabling back to General Pershing to verify a name or to obtain an address.

Aside from these four causes of delay the only reason for the failure of relatives to receive word at once is military consideration. General Pershing may, at his discretion, withhold a casualty list until he is positive it will have no military value to the enemy.

Through the operation of repair shops for clothing and other articles, a considerable saving in reissue of new equipment has been made at army camps. One camp quartermaster estimates the issue of new clothing has decreased one-third, and of shoes 40 per cent.

At a base repair shop for clothing an average of 2,831 garments were repaired daily during the first 18 days of May. In addition to the work done at base repair shops, many thousands of garments are repaired at camp shops, one shop being located at each large camp.

During April nearly 170,000 pairs of shoes were repaired in army repair shops. At present practically all hat repairing is done by contract, the price varying from 50 to 90 cents per hat.

This work is in charge of the conservation and reclamation division of the quartermaster corps, which has been in operation only during the last four months.

The food administration is making a careful survey of the national ice situation in order that it may be prepared to meet any sudden shortages in particular communities. The destruction of ice plants by fire, breakdown of machinery, or the exigency of the weather may at any time cause a serious shortage.

Incomplete returns from 25 states show that nearly 8,400,000 women have registered for war work under the woman's committee of the council of national defense.

The demand for specialists in the army is increasing daily. Mechanics and technicians of all kinds, including radio and buzzer operators, are needed by the signal corps.

In nearly every large city the federal board of vocational training, through local school authorities, has established schools of radio communication where men of draft age who have not been called may receive a preliminary course in the operation of radio and buzzer instruments. There are about 600 of these schools where instruction is given, usually in the afternoons and evenings. It takes about 200 hours for a student of average ability to obtain a speed of 20 words a minute, sending and receiving.

Electrical engineers and men with good fundamental training in engineering or physics are particularly in demand for signal corps work. Men of satisfactory qualifications are given three months' training in special schools, and have every opportunity to take examinations leading to promotion.

Men who have had experience as electrical repair men, wiremen and mechanics are also desired for assignment to special schools and later to field organizations.

When the five new regiments and 19 battalions of railway engineers now being organized are put on duty there will be 50,000 Americans engaged in railroad construction and operation in France.

After the United States entered the war one of the first requests transmitted to this government by the French mission was for assistance in strengthening the French railways. Nine regiments of railway engineers, whose organization was started before General Pershing sailed, were in France by August, 1917. Six of them have been engaged in construction work, building and rebuilding railways, building docks and rearranging terminal facilities. The other three regiments have been engaged in operation, and some of the railway troops have been on the fighting line. The additional troops will be used partly for construction and maintenance and partly for operation.

A total of $160,000,000 has been spent on railway materials alone. Included in the purchases are 1,727 locomotives, 22,630 freight cars and 350,000 tons of steel rails.

Reports are reaching the children's bureau of the department of labor from the hundreds and thousands of women who during the last 60 days have been weighing 5,000,000 children of America, and the way in which permanent poverty menaces the healthy growth of the children of the nation is being revealed as a result of the weighing and measuring campaign.

Workers have been so much aroused by the conditions revealed that they request information regarding follow-up work. Many of the families are described as being pitifully poor. One mother had a new baby wasting away for want of milk. The mother was told to drink one quart of milk a day herself and to give one quart a day to each of her six children. Milk is 16 cents a quart, and the family income $15 a week. The women writing to the children's bureau said they did not know how to solve the problem.

The children's bureau has been compelled to reply to such reports that federal appropriations are available only for the families of men actually in the military or naval service.

Nearly 157,000 negro soldiers are now in the National army. Of these 1,000 are line officers holding commissions of captain and first and second lieutenants. There are about 250 colored officers in the medical and dental reserve corps.

The army now includes two divisions of colored troops, which when fully constituted will include practically all branches of the service; infantry, engineer, artillery, signal corps, medical corps and service battalions with men technically trained in all branches of scientific work.

There are now openings in the veterinary corps for negroes skilled in veterinary and agricultural work. Arrangements have been completed to send negroes registered but not yet called to schools and colleges this summer for training in radio engineering, electrical engineering, auto mechanics, blacksmithing and the operation of motor vehicles.

Scores of firms throughout the United States have been penalized for violations of rules of the food administration. In some cases licenses to operate have been suspended; in others, contributions to the Y. M. C. A., Red Cross, and other organizations have been accepted in lieu of suspension of license.

Among the more numerous violations are sales of flour without substitutes; refusal to accept delivery of foodstuffs previously ordered; operating without licenses; excess sales of sugar; carrying more than a normal 30 days' supply of sugar; failure to use the proper amount of flour substitute in bread making; and profiteering.

Next to the aggregate number of subscribers, perhaps the most striking feature of the third Liberty loan was the support given it by the farming and rural populations of the country, according to a statement by the treasury department. Not only did the farmers purchase liberally of the bonds, but the rural communities as a rule were more prompt in completing their quotas of the loan than the larger cities. More than 20,000 communities in the United States subscribed or oversubscribed their quotas, many of them on the first day of the campaign.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

THE CALL OF THE HOUR.

I learned as a lad that you cannot run a saw mill without feeding it logs, a grist mill without feeding it grain, a rock crusher without feeding it rocks. No more can we continue the rum factory without grinding through it sons and daughters. I have none to spare! Nor will I be a poltroon and by my vote or silence say, "It shall feed on yours!"

The call of the hour is the challenge of highest patriotism. America must not fail; it is written in the plan of God for the ages that America shall not fail!

The liquor traffic, because it blocks the road that leads to the realization of our national destiny, is as doomed today as Judas Iscariot was when he betrayed the Christ of God. Because no human welfare program can be completed, because humanity's physical, moral and spiritual health cannot be rightly conserved while breweries, distilleries, wineries and rum shops continue to transact business, we pledge our constructive and united efforts, our sacred honor, and our lives, if need be, to accomplish a saloonless nation by 1920 and a saloonless world by 1930.—Daniel A. Poling.

THE DRINK TRAFFIC AND THE TAXPAYER.

"Saloon revenue aids in reducing taxes!" This is one of the most shallow arguments advanced by the liquorite in support of the drink business. No thoughtful or observant person will attempt to deny that under prohibition crime decreases, pauperism grows less, and that, given time for the natural readjustment which must follow the general elimination of the saloon and its influences, the need for reform schools, jails, asylums, almshouses, hospitals, etc., will in the aggregate mean a saving of many millions of dollars to the taxpayers. Remember, too, that as drunkenness is eliminated more people will become self-supporting and there will be less need for charity. Abolish the saloon and much of the money now expended in aiding those who become dependent through drink, and the money now paid for taxes caused by the results of drink, will be used in creating more taxable property and the burden will be more widely and evenly distributed.

TESTIMONY OF CHARITY WORKERS.

The charitable organizations are quick to realize the blessings of prohibition, for prohibition not only means less poverty, but it means that money which formerly went to care for the family of the drinking man is made available for other uses. The testimony of the Des Moines Associated Charities is an illustration of this point: "Three years ago 26 per cent of all the families and individuals aided were in a condition of poverty through the drunkenness of the father or supporting member of the household. Last year that figure had dwindled to 10 per cent. This means that with open saloons Des Moines' largest charitable body was spending annually more than one-fourth of its budget to take care of the product of the saloon, while within a year and a half after the closing of the bars of the city the association was paying out but one-tenth of its income for the same purpose."

PROHIBITION A BENEFIT TO THE WAGE-EARNER.

Viewed from whatever angle, there is no computing the value of prohibition to the industrial class. Counted by dollars and cents, the elimination of liquor from this country would mean millions of dollars diverted into a channel that would make and does make for a higher order of things. Dollars and cents do not count when the question of prohibition is the subject matter. It is not always a question of what prohibition will do; the other side is: What will it prevent?

There is no man in or out of the labor movement, if he be honest with himself and others, but must recognize the benefits from every viewpoint that have come to the workers in those states that have adopted prohibition. —Jerome Jones, President Southern Labor Congress.

KENTUCKY GOING DRY.

I saw a camel go through the needle's eye,
I saw the trust that paid its fine; saw old Kentucky dry.

No doubt the popular writer who had this vision of "impossibilities" will soon see the necessity of revising it. The legislature of old Kentucky by an overwhelming vote referred the question of statewide prohibition to the people, and was the third state (the first wet one) to ratify the federal prohibition amendment.

INFANT MORTALITY DUE TO DRINK.

According to statistics compiled by Prof. Laitinen of the University of Helsingfors, covering an investigation of 19,000 children in 5,700 families, abstaining families lost 18 per cent of the children by death; moderate drinking families lost 28 per cent; excessive drinking parents lost 32 per cent.

Prohibition during the war period! Then if it is good, keep it. If it is bad, go back to booze. Let the people rule!—Clinton N. Howard.

Grooving Machine Building Ships.

Revival of the wooden shipbuilding industry has brought into the limelight a number of labor-saving appliances, among which is a grooving and planing machine, capable, it is claimed, of doing as much work as 15 or 20 men equipped with manual tools. The device, which is illustrated in the Popular Mechanics Magazine, weighs about 56 pounds and may be driven either by compressed air or electricity.

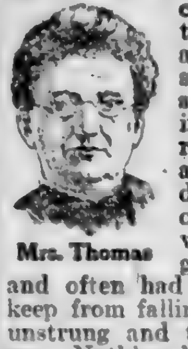
Doan's Kidney Pills Effected Wonderful Recovery After Other Medicines Had Failed.



Mrs. Thomas

"I don't believe I would be alive to give this testimony if it weren't for Doan's Kidney Pills," says Mrs. Julia A. Thomas, 1125-A Missouri Ave., East St. Louis, Ill. "I was in a serious condition with kidney trouble; my feet and ankles were terribly swollen and the kidney secretions caused agony in passage. I had terrible rheumatic pains and often got so dizzy I dared not walk for fear of falling. I felt as if I would go frantic. I grew weak as a baby and often had to grasp something to keep from falling. My nerves were all unstrung and the least noise startled me. Nothing benefited me and I was discouraged. A neighbor happened to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills and I began using them. The swellings and pains were soon eased up and it was but a short time before my kidneys were in good shape again. They have never bothered me since nor have I had any backache or other kidney trouble. I have gained 55 pounds since I was cured and can do all my own work without suffering."

UNITED STATES AND SCIENCE

Activities of Entire World Centered on This Country and Interest Expected to Continue.

"Very few people realize that the scientific activities of the world are centering in the United States, and that they will doubtless continue to do so if material means be given to keep up the work," said Father Charles B. Moulinier, regent of the Marquette university school of medicine, in a recent interview in the Marquette Tribune.

"South America, for instance, is now looking to us for scientific leadership. China and Japan are once more turning to us. Great attention is being paid to medicine in South America, Buenos Aires alone having a medical school with 5,000 students.

"The Wistar institute of anatomy, in Philadelphia, is one of the most decisive factors in turning the attention of the scientific world to the United States. This institute has an endowment which makes it possible to give large service to mankind. Just now it is printing copious translated extracts from the medical journals published and sending them to China and Japan. Duplicates of the journals are also sent to South America.

"A great deal of research work is being done by this school in the direction of discovering dyes. Certain chemical dyes, formerly produced only by Gruebler of Germany, are required in technical work. Wistar is now producing dyes the equal of Gruebler's.

"It may be interesting to know that much of this research work has been done by a young Philadelphian who delved into chemistry for his own pleasure and experimented in his private laboratory. Wistar hearing of some remarkable discoveries made by him immediately called him to the institute, placing its facilities at his disposal for this important work.

It is said that the Philippines could supply 100,000 soldiers.

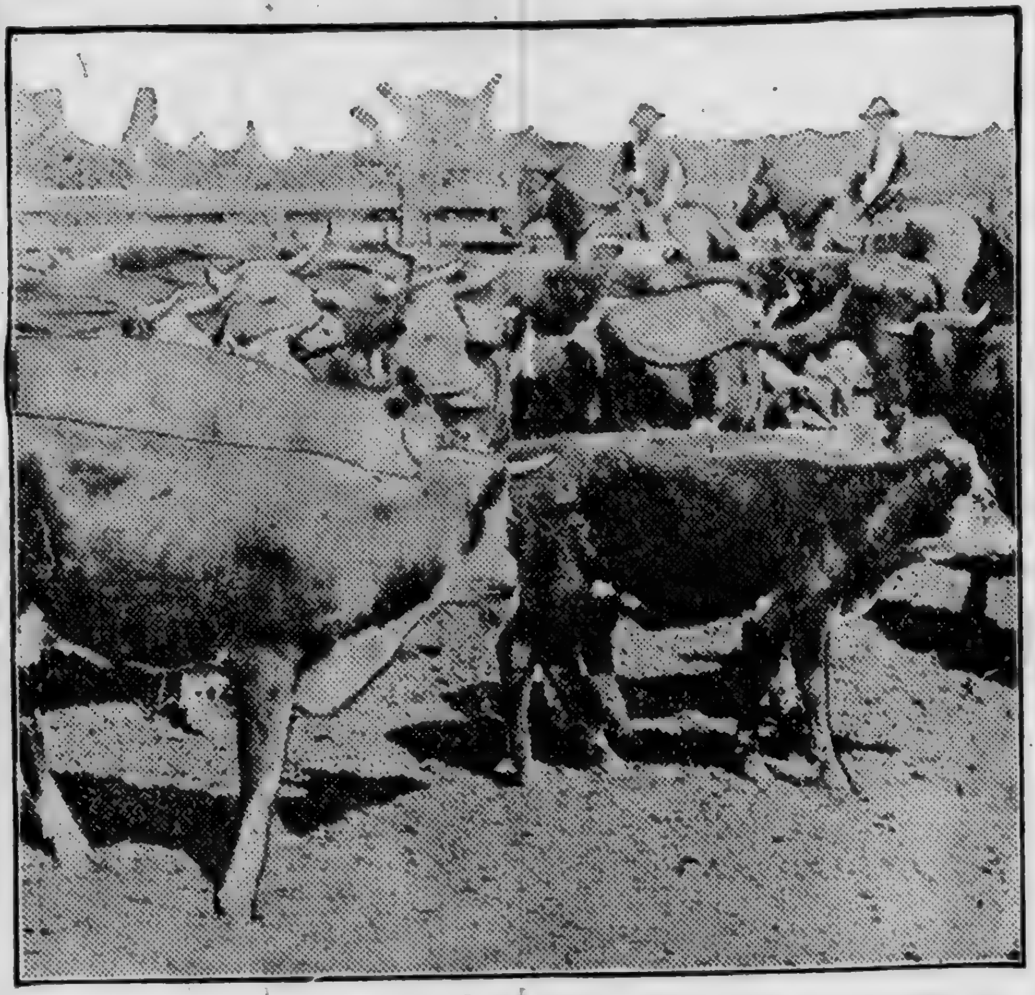
FOOD FOR CITIES MUST BE RUSHED.



From the Time Cattle Are Rounded Up for Shipment Until the Roast Reaches Your Refrigerator, the Beef Has Been in a Succession of Grand Rushes.

FEEDING CITIES IS BIG PROBLEM

Study of Some Things Which Affect Final Delivery of Food to Consumer.

QUESTION OF RAPID TRANSIT

Fresh Meats and Other Perishable Products From Farms Must Be Speeded Up at Every Stage—Delay Means Shrinkage.

One of the fundamental factors in the problem of feeding towns and cities is that of transportation. Since city dwellers are so dependent upon transportation for their foodstuffs, it may be interesting to study some of the things which affect the final delivery of food and especially meats to the consumer.

Transportation difficulties begin with the stock raiser, whether he is a rancher in the West, a corn belt farmer or other agriculturist who produces live stock for food. In the early days, before our railroads were in existence or before they were the principal factors in getting stock to market, cattle, hogs and sheep had to be driven or hauled long distances to reach a selling point or a point from which they could be shipped by boat or rail. This was a very expensive way of moving stock; it not only took a long time but the loss of animals and the loss of flesh by these animals was also considerable, even though the values per pound were very little compared with today.

Troubles of Stock Grower.

The first trouble the stock grower or dealer today has in getting his stock to market is to get to a railroad point to ship his animals to one of the various large stockyards to be sold. Bad roads, adverse weather and perhaps a long drive or haul to the shipping point all affect the length of time required; then there may be a temporary shortage of cars and stock must be held in the railroad stockyards and fed until cars are provided. Once loaded into cars, however, there is a special effort made to get to the market in the shortest possible time. Delay means abnormal shrinkage; if the cars are on the road 36 hours the stock must be unloaded for feed and water; or the market may drop suddenly; hence the necessity for speed.

Shipping Fresh Meats.

In order to ship fresh meats successfully they must be thoroughly chilled before loading and then transported in refrigerator cars, especially during the warmer weather, although this practice is followed the year round. These cars have ice tanks at each end, which are filled with ice and a percentage of salt and the car chilled to about 35 to 38 degrees Fahrenheit. Also they are provided with ventilating or circulating systems in order to keep the temperature in all parts of the car as nearly uniform as possible. In making long shipments, and especially during the warmer months, it is necessary to ice the car one or more times en route to keep the temperature as low and as constant as possible. Even then on account of bad weather, wrecks or any other condition that causes undue delay, the meat may not be in first-class condition on its arrival at the destination and must therefore be sold quickly even at some sacrifice in price.

Speed Is Essential.

Speed is vital from the time the stock leaves the producer's hands until it reaches the packer and from the time the product, fresh meat, leaves the packing house until it reaches the ultimate consumer. So anything that interferes with quick delivery, that causes shipments to be delayed, quite often means loss. The principal live stock producing sections are a long distance from the principal meat-consuming centers of the East, which makes them dependent almost entirely upon adequate transportation facilities to keep supplied with fresh meat at any and all times.

FEEDING YOU

The average city man has probably never realized that getting his feed to him on time is one of the most troublesome things with which the country has to deal.

In ordinary times it was not so important that the city man have such a realization, but now, in war time, it is an important part of "Our Part in Feeding the Nation."

The subjoined statement from one of the experts of the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, will serve at least as an introduction to one phase of the problem.

Mobilizing Harvest Labor.

Steps for the systematic mobilization of farm labor in Kansas were taken at a meeting held in Kansas City, May 14. This is the first of a series of meetings which are to be arranged by the department of agriculture in a number of cities to unite the efforts of all agencies working to secure labor to help farmers in harvesting their crops. At the Kansas City meeting a committee was appointed to direct the work of the various agencies in the state and to see that registrations are held in the cities where city employees who will do farm work during their vacations can register. It is estimated that 80,000 helpers will be necessary to harvest the crops in Kansas this year, and the commercial organizations in Kansas City have undertaken to supply 10,000 of this number.

Army of Extension Workers.

An army of 5,651 extension workers is aiding in the department of agriculture's food production and conservation campaign. This is an increase of 3,405 over the number doing similar work on July 1 of last year. Of this total 3,049 are in county-agent work, serving 2,450 counties; 1,690 are in home-demonstration work, serving in 1,675 counties; and 912 are in boys' and girls' club work. In the 15 Southern states 2,624 workers are busy carrying out the plans of the food campaign, and in the 33 Northern and Western states 3,027 are employed. On July 1 of last year 1,640 were employed in the Southern states, and 606 in the Northern and Western states. In the Southern states there are 130 negro county agents and 160 negro home-demonstration agents.

Protecting Fighters.

Sixty-seven inspectors of the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, are now with the army inspecting the meat and meat products supplied for the soldiers and 30 others are similarly engaged with the navy. Operations are under federal supervision from the time the live animals are driven into the slaughtering houses until the finished product is delivered in good condition to the mess cooks.

Survey of Food Stocks.

An inventory of commercial stocks of grain, flour, meal and other food products is being taken each month by the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, and the results published in a new monthly publication called Food Surveys, two numbers of which have already been issued. These monthly surveys began April 1, 1918.

MANY INDIAN PEACE EMBLEMS

Wisconsin Braves Still Retain Numerous Medals Given to Them by Various Governments.

Wisconsin Indians still retain many peace medals that were given to them or their ancestors by various governments, and some of the medals date back in 1720, according to an article on Wisconsin Indian medals in The Wisconsin Archeologist.

The earliest medals owned by Indian families today include one of brass issued at the time of George I, four of silver bearing the bust of George III, an old Spanish medal and four American medals.

A Washington medal is in the possession of an aged Ottawa Indian on the Menomonie reservation near Shawano. Philip Nacootee, a Menomonie Indian of the South Branch settlement, has a Lincoln medal. A silver medal with the bust of President Polk, dated 1845, was owned by the Menomonie chief, Shunien.

Arthur Gerth, Milwaukee collector, once owned a silver medal issued by President Jefferson. An Andrew Johnson medal is in the collection of A. T. Newman of Bloomer. Dr. Alphonse Gerend is the owner of a silver George III medal, formerly the property of the Wisconsin chief, Waumegesako.

The Old Man's Call to Duty.

J. H. Snowden, a retired farmer and capitalist, told a Seattle reporter that he is on his way back from southern California to his old home at Calgary, Can., to go back to the fields. He supposed that he had earned a rest for the remainder of his days, but now sees that he was mistaken. "I am now fifty-five years of age," he said, "and have not done any manual labor for eight years, but I am going to hire out this summer and fall to help my former neighbors to harvest their crops. I figure that as long as I am too old for military duty, I can help win the war by helping produce crops." Thousands of Americans as well as Canadians will see their patriotic duty and take similar action before the war is over. The call to the colors is by no means confined to men and youths under thirty-two. — Nebraska State Journal.

New Compact Fire Escape.

One of the boys aboard our navy's fleet has invented a fire escape which is similar to the rope ladders used aboard ships. His principal object was to provide a collapsible fire escape which could be compacted and conveniently arranged at the window of a dwelling. It consists of a container hinged to the sill in such a manner that by opening the window and folding the container on its hinges the metal ladder may be unfolded and dropped. When this operation is gone through, a means is automatically provided whereby the ladder is held at a distance from the walls of the building. The advantage of such precaution is obvious.

A Discouraging Precedent.

There is nothing original about Marshal von Hindenburg's boast that he would drive the English into the sea. In the Peninsular war Soult made the same remark about the British under Wellington that Von Hindenburg has now uttered about the British under Haig. Wellington did retire perilously near to the sea, just as Haig has. But Soult looked at the position and changed his mind. Is Von Hindenburg, in apparently still planning to give battle, going to show less sense than his renowned French predecessor?—Christian Science Monitor.

KINSEY

THE GIRL WITH THIRTEEN DADDIES

CHAPTER I.

There were thirteen of them. At one time, they had responded to names, just like other people; but they had answered to nicknames so long that they would have hesitated before recognizing anything else. First came Perfessor, whose title had descended upon him as the result of an assumption of wisdom on his part. Then there were Jedge and Calamity, the first of whom was looked to by his companions for weighty opinions upon any question they had to consider, which opinions made up in quantity for any defect in profundity, and led to his being regarded as an oracle; and the second of whom was a sort of amateur pessimist, who looked out upon and beheld a world of beauty and, at the same time, grumbled at it, as at nearly everything else, through force of habit or as a pastime. Peddler ranked fourth in importance. He dealt in pills, the same being carried on his right hip in an automatic forty-four. He prescribed and administered these as a specific in cases of excessive hilarity that threatened the peace of the mining camp of Paradise Lost; and several mounds in the cemetery, each of which covered the remains of an individual who had suddenly been reduced from a state of over exuberance to one of extreme passiveness, attested to the efficacy of his cure.

The remaining nine followed the lead of the four introduced in the foregoing. There were Canuck, who hailed from Canada and who obstinately and wisely refused to listen to any hail to recross the border, where officers of the law awaited to welcome him; Fiddler, who boasted of being a violinist, but was forced to accept the lesser title that Jedge gave him (there is a difference between a violinist and a fiddler); Truthful Jim, whose liberties with the truth at times shocked his associates, who themselves would often have been embarrassed if called upon to prove that their own utterances were of the character heard on the narrow path leading upward; Dutch and Frenchy, who were regarded by the others as lacking good taste in the selection of their respective places of birth; Deacon, so named because of a fancied ministerial air, which was heightened by a startling vocabulary of oaths; Red, who inherited from his ancestors a sunburned complexion, which lost nothing by his gratifying a craving (also inherited) for the product of the still, and a head crowned by a shock of ruddy hair; Punkun Seed, so named because of his thin visage; Fish Hook, who was forever impaling others upon his waspish temper

The thirteen resided in a large one-room, one-story frame building. This one room served as sitting room, parlor and bedroom; and would have been used as kitchen and dining room had not its occupants "chucked" at a nearby boarding house. The home of the thirteen was the center—in importance, in size and geographically—of Paradise Lost, a place of about one thousand inhabitants.

The thirteen were the leading citizens of the place, having been the first to strike "pay dirt" there. They owned in common a rich gold mine and an extensive cattle ranch, the latter being on a broad plain just beyond the north end of the narrow valley that enclosed the town. The camp was ruled by the thirteen and the thirteen were ruled by Perfessor, Jedge, Calamity and Peddler. The four would have modestly disclaimed any intent to rule—merely advised; but their advice was usually accepted by their partners and then made public, where it was enforced by thirteen guns, aided by a secondary battery in the hands of friendly townsmen, all under the leadership of Peddler. There was one exception, Mrs. Dal, who was supreme in Paradise Lost, owing her supremacy to being the best cook in the place and the proprietor of the only respectable boarding house. She lorded it over all, the men in particular and over none more than the thirteen, reserving her choicest epithets for what she termed the "fool four."

The thirteen were sitting in their home late one fall evening, after having exhausted the pleasures of Paradise Lost—the saloon, the dance hall and the gambling house. They were huddled about the stove at the side of the room farthest from the front (and only) door. Calamity was spinning a tale of woe, the others being too tired to resent his talk.

"Huh!" Calamity grumbled in conclusion, "the Lucky Thirteen's a fine name to hitch to a gold mine. Luck an' thirteen don't herd none together. You ediots were plumb locoed when you branded that name onto that thar pay dirt jest because thirteen o' us rounded it up."

This aroused Fish Hook. "Thar's no law in Californy agin you redoocin' the number to twelve," he snapped. "We all won't rope you 'r hawg tie you if you want to go. You may be hittin' the right trail when you say we all's locoed, but it's doo to hearin' you give too much rope to your fool tongue. Them thoughts o' your'n is like a kaf runnin' at the end o' a rope: he goes a whole lot, but don't git nowhar."

"Thar's likewise one fiddle that's somewhat distractin'," grunted Punkun Seed.

Jedge saw that the waters were troubled, and he began to pour on oil before Calamity and Fiddler could add to the trouble. "'Tain't human natur that we all should see alike," he said. A snort from Calamity caused Jedge to forget his oil pouring. He continued: "That thar Calamity ranges by hisself: the fust thing he does after reachin' this mundane sphere is to try to straighten out 'cause the doctor's bow-legged. Now, I opine that when thirteen cow punchers start out to round up a herd o' steers an' rope down an' cinch the best payin' gold mine in Californy, thar's some luck to it."

"If I was as big fool as that thar Jedge," retorted Calamity, "I'd shore expect some sympathizin' friend to muzzle me. The Creator must a-had a grudge agin him an' handed him the habit o' talkin' when he ought to shet up his fool haid. He knows an' I know an' you all know that thirteen an' luck don't travel the same trail fer no great length o' time. We all knows"—

Calamity's torrent of words ended suddenly. A look of surprise overspread his face, and he half rose to his feet and pointed toward the door. The others looked. There stood a mite of a girl who had entered unobserved. She was scantily clad, her face was pinched and blue from exposure and her little body was shaking with cold. The forlorn little waif touched these rough men at their most vulnerable point—the heart. Before any of the others could act, Dutch arose and impulsively started toward the child. He approached her with hands extended in invitation for her to come to him; but she drew back from him and on her face appeared a startled, apprehensive look that told of cruelty and neglect. He put an arm about the shrinking form and drew it toward him; but the child wriggled from his embrace, eying him doubtfully. The kind hearted German folded her in his arms a second time, speaking encouragingly as he did so:

"Mein Gott! who couldt vorsake sootch a leedle von wie du? Du verloren kidchen—du kleines suesslein!"

Dutch employed a mixture of English and German; but the little one understood, for he spoke the language of Love, which is not interpreted by means of words. She suffered herself to be led to the stove, where she stood shyly apart from the men.

"What is your name, little girl?" inquired Perfessor, with a benignant smile that failed to reassure the little one, who drew further away.

"You little devil." The child twisted her frail body as she spoke.

"That ain't a name, little girl," remonstrated Perfessor, kindly.

"That's what Ole Moll called me, anyway," was the reply.

"What did the others call you?" was the next question.

"Katie, she called me Margert," replied the child, shyly.

"Margaret! That's shore a nice name," cut in Jedge, letting his eyes travel around his circle of friends. What he saw there gave him an inspiration. "Gentlemen," he cried, springing to his feet. "I move we adopt little Margaret."

The thirteen generally acted in the same manner as an alarm clock, which begins without warning, performs its work with all the rattle and bang it can exert and then suddenly subsides. Jedge's motion was carried with a whoop, and a few more decorations were added to the bullet-frescoed ceiling from the guns of Peddler and Truthful Jim. The child uttered a cry of terror and instinctively rushed to Dutch. He drew her into his lap, where, pale and trembling, she hid her face on his breast; and his colloused hand, with which he sought to quiet her, became as light of touch as that of a woman.

"Jedge," said Calamity, turning to the person named, "I called you a fool a short time ago. I'm goin' to stay by the bet—I ain't goin' to pinch back any o' them words o' mine. But when it comes to a show down on ediotucy, you can't hold out enough kyards to beat them two ediots who used thar guns jest now—meanin' Peddler an' Truthful Jim."

"Pardners all," admitted Peddler. "I own up that my exubrance got the best o' me. The man that plays me for a place in the A-B-C class at the feeble minded home is a shore winner."

"I'm the same shore bet that Peddler is," added Truthful Jim. "I'm toin' the mark in the same class as him."

"Pardners," said Jedge, "it's human natur fer we all to set here an' make crazy hoss plays all night in a game like this. The thing to do is to send fer Mrs. Dal, which I puts in the form o' a motion."

"You all are requested to vote sort o' vokay, which is Dago fer not yelpin' like a pack o' coyotes, and no gun play goes," admonished Perfessor.

The motion was carried in a unanimous whisper.

A Sluggish Liver Needs Attention

An Inactive Liver Affects the Kidneys and Deranges the Stomach and Bowels.

Too much stress can not be placed on the necessity of keeping the liver in good condition; upon it the health of the body largely depends. When the liver becomes sluggish, the kidneys are overworked, the digestive fluids are not properly secreted and a languid, bilious, nervous or sick headachy condition results. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body. Constipation, bloating, dizziness, belching, pain or soreness in the right side, impaired vision and, in fact, most diseases have their origin in an inactive liver. An inactive liver is easily corrected if taken in time, but the only way to doctor is to get at the cause. Glando Tonic is a liver remedy that has a splendid record for renewing activity, removing the poisons and building up the system. For bilious attacks, it can not be beaten. Mothers who are nursing a baby should take Glando Tonic to keep the bowels well regulated. This will keep baby's bowels in a good condition. Glando Tonic is a three-in-one treatment that brings results. A trial will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials will be furnished upon request. Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be obtained by sending 50c direct to the Grand-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXII | ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JUNE 27 1918 | NO. 26

War Savings Day

The president has set aside Friday, June 28, as War Savings day; and, at this time, every state in the union is expected to go over the top on the savings stamp drive, either by cash or by pledge. With this end in view, patriotic rallies will be held all over the land, that for Concord township to be held at Widney opera house, St. Joe, next Friday evening. Every person who loves his country should be present and do his bit toward keeping Concord township where she always has been—in the front rank among those that have responded promptly to every request of the government for money.

The authorities have become out of patience with slackers—those who love dollars more than country; and such are to be reported, yellow cards having been provided for that purpose.

A meeting of the township committeemen of the county was held at the city hall, Auburn, Monday evening, at which County Chairman Whitten outlined the plans for making the drive a success. Every section of the county was represented, none better than Spencer and Concord.

Following are the meeting places in this section of the county, with he spea ker at each:

Widney opera house, St. Joe; speaker, B. O. Fink, of Auburn.

Concord church; Willis Rhodes, of Auburn, speaker.

Hopewell church; W. H. Leas, of Waterloo, speaker.

United Brethren church, Newville; J. E. Jellison, of Auburn, speaker.

Coburntown school; Rev. A. K. Mumma, of Spencerville, speaker.

Spencerville M. E. church; Rev. F. A. Hall, of Auburn, speaker.

Ivan North Fatally Shot

Ivan C. North, of Butler, was fatally shot by a guard at the Jeffersonville reformatory last Friday. John Gibson, who did the shooting, claims it was done in self defense. He says that he heard some one in the garage and demanded that the intruder surrender. Instead of doing so, the latter started to run. Gibson headed him off, when he turned on the officer, who was forced to shoot. The man proved to be North.

North was sent to the prison from Auburn on May 25, 1910, for petit larceny. He was paroled on Dec. 19, 1914, remaining at liberty until March 14, 1916, when he was recommitted for the same offense as in the first place. He was paroled a second time on the Monday preceding the shooting. In November, 1915, he was married to Mabel Knisely, of this place. They soon separated.

North remains were to Columbia City, the home of his mother, for burial. He was 26 years old. He was the son of J. C. North, of Butler. His parents were divorced years ago, and his mother is now Mrs. Mary Winebrenner. North was born at Butler.

Escapes with Fine of $1.00

The last act of the Spencerville whiskey party ended Tuesday morning, when Jack Beams was found guilty of being accessory before the fact and fined $1 00 and costs, amounting to $34.60, which he paid. Defendant was not connected with the stealing of the liquor nor the drinking of it. It was brought to the basement of his store by William McKinley, who clerked for him, and others connected with the theft. There is a conflict of testimony as to whether Beams ordered them away. He swore that he did, and he was corroborated by Harry Hirsch and by William McKinley. The first two were sober, but the last had been drinking. This was denied by the other members of the whiskey party, all of whom had been drinking. Mr. Beams' only offense consisted in giving McKinley oil cans, which were used in one of the raids on the whiskey barrel at the Wabash station.

Ford Car Is Stolen

Andrew Rupp, of Orangeville, had his car (a Ford) stolen at Hicksville last Saturday evening. It was taken from the Main street of the city while the owner was doing some trading. No trace of the stolen property has been found.

The machine is practically new, having been run only about 500 miles. The factory number is 2,541,179. The right front headlight is slightly slanted in, the priming wire is home made and the left hand fender hangs lower than the right.

A reward of $25 is offered for the return of the car and $25 for the conviction of the thief.

A Word to Coal Buyers.

The Government through the fuel administration has advised everybody to lay in their coal as much as possible during the spring and summer months. The dealers also are urged to lay in their supply now.

The reason for this is, the government will need the coal as soon as cold weather sets in more than now and the car supply will be short, therefore they ask domestic consumers to buy now. This we are doing and we hope to continue doing. But we must have our coal bills paid promptly as most of this coal is paid for before we unload it and it takes money to buy coal.

We ask you to give this your attention us we will have to insist that all back bills are paid at once as coal is CASH with us. We have kept St. Joe in coal during the worst coal famine the country has ever known and we will try to keep on doing so, but we must have your co-operation, we mean PAY UP.

"The American Creed."

"I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed, a democracy in a republic, a sovereign nation of many sovereign states, a perfect union, one and inseperable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes. I therefore, believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies."

MEDAL OF HONOR TESTS ARE FIXED

GENERAL PERSHING TELLS HIS OFFICERS WHAT DEEDS ARE TO BE REWARDED.

ARMY STORE'S LOW PRICES

Soldiers in France Can Buy Many Things Cheaper Than in This Country—New "Overseas Cap" Added to American Equipment.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—These tests are applied to cases recommended for the medal of honor, according to instructions issued as a guide to officers by General Pershing:

Men who have performed in action deeds of most distinguished personal bravery and self-sacrifice above and beyond all call of duty; so conspicuous as clearly to distinguish them for gallantry and intrepidity above their comrades; which involve risk of life or the performance of more than ordinarily hazardous service, the omission of which would not justly subject the person to censure for shortcoming or failure in the performance of his duty.

The distinguished-service cross is awarded for gallantry in action to anyone who may distinguish himself in action by extraordinary heroism in connection with military operation against an armed enemy, under circumstances which do not justify the award of the medal of honor.

The distinguished-service medal is awarded for exceptionally meritorious service to the government in connection with operations against an armed enemy.

Prices quoted for June on merchandise in the huge general stores operated by the quartermaster corps in France show that members of the expeditionary forces may secure goods at prices lower than retail prices in effect in this country.

June quotations are: Half-pound package chocolate, 11 cents; can of cherries, 24 cents; can of cocoa, 14 cents; pocket comb, 6 cents; can of corn, 10 cents; shaving brushes, 15 cents; tooth brushes, 12 cents; can stringless beans, 10 cents; bottle ginger ale, 9 cents; can plum pudding, 32 cents; standard $5 safety razors, $1.75; pair shoe laces, 3 cents; can talcum powder, 5 cents; pound cut-loaf sugar, 10 cents; spool cotton thread, 4 cents; two-ounce package smoking tobacco, 7 cents; hand soap, 1 cent; can lobsters, 25 cents; shaving soap, 4 cents; bottle Worcestershire sauce, 20 cents; linen handkerchiefs, 16 cents; pint bottle olives, 23 cents; can green peas, 10 cents; shoe polish, 9 cents.

Although the men are issued ample rations the quartermaster stores are opened to the enlisted men for the purpose of permitting them to add to their menu or to satisfy individual desires for dainties or delicacies. The highest grade of merchandise only is carried in stock so that the men may be sure of having the best, whether in rations or extra supplies.

Meats, groceries, fish, vegetables, notions, toilet articles, smokers' articles, and scores of miscellaneous items are included in the published price lists. These lists are made available to each company and purchases may be made either for cash or on credit.

Among the staples to be found in these chain stores are: Fresh beef, ham, bacon, turkey, potatoes, rice, hominy, beans, onions, coffee, tea, sugar, cheese, cocoa, butter, and evaporated fruits. The canned fruits and vegetables include: Apples, peaches, apricots, pears, cherries, currants, pineapples, prunes, asparagus, sweet corn, tomatoes, mushrooms, sweet potatoes, spinach, squash, turnips and beans. Included in the list of canned meats and fish are: Lobsters, oysters, salmon, mackerel, cod, sardines, shrimps, herring, deviled crabs, sausages, tongue, turkey, deviled ham, corned beef, corned-beef hash, roast beef and mincemeat.

For the man with a sweet tooth there are: Jams, jellies, preserves, raisins, apple butter, maple sirup, molasses, cranberry sauce, citron, nuts, candy, etc. The smoker may purchase smoking tobacco and chewing tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, pipes, cigarette papers and matches. The incidental needs of all the men are supplied with razors, combs, brushes for all purposes, buttons, soap, shaving sticks, shaving mugs, mirrors, razor strops, shoe polish, shoe laces, toilet water, talcum powder, tooth powder, witch-hazel, towels, handkerchiefs, pocket-knives, needles, thread, candles and playing cards.

In one army camp there are 55 battalion baseball teams, besides the headquarters, staff, brigade and division teams.

More than 800 penalties for violation of rules and regulations governing licensed dealers in foodstuffs have been imposed during the past ten months by the food administration. About 150 companies and individuals have been ordered to quit business in licensed commodities for a limited or unlimited period, and over 500 have voluntarily made a money payment, usually to the Red Cross, or have temporarily abstained from doing business rather than risk calling down more drastic penalties.

The "overseas cap" now being issued to soldiers in the expeditionary forces matches the uniform in color, has a very low crown, and has no brim or peak. It is so made that it may be folded and carried in a pocket.

When American forces entered the trenches it was found that the brims of their campaign hats interfered with sighting through trench periscopes and that in the cases of tall men the high crowns could be seen above the parapets. The new cap is so low that it permits the men to move with practically the same freedom as when they are hatless. The trench helmet can be worn over it.

Only soldiers who have been with the expeditionary forces wear the cap. According to reports from France new regulations provide that officers shall wear their insignia of rank on the cap, and enlisted men place on it the button prescribed to be worn on the left side of the collar of the service coat.

The total cost for National army cantonments was $140,726,473, according to a statement by the war department. The National Guard camps cost $38,375,272.

Emergency work to provide for soldiers in this country, and to provide buildings for the manufacture and storage of army supplies both here and abroad undertaken by the construction division of the army, which has been executed or is under way and in prospect up to June 1, will cost about $1,170,619,000. This total is exclusive of three operations costing $106,000,000, under the direct control of the ordnance department.

Up to June 1 the construction division had completed 53 jobs, at a total cost of $202,250,000. It has 244 operations under way, which, when finished, will cost about $270,369,000. Preparations are being made to start work on 117 new operations which are expected to cost $700,000,000.

Two out of every 1,000 men in the army have to have their shoes made to order. In several camps entire regiments have had their feet measured, and hundreds of drawings were made of odd shapes and sizes. At the present time the army uses between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 pairs of shoes a month.

Facts brought out in tests seem to prove that men in the present army are larger than those serving in previous wars. Not only is this shown by the larger sizes of shoes called for, but by the larger sizes of outer clothing that is being required. Records in the quartermaster corps show that a size larger, on the average, is being demanded in blouses, shirts and breeches than have ever before been used.

As a result of the studies at the front, methods have been developed whereby more than 80 per cent of the wounded, who originally remained at the military hospitals for months, are now cured and returned to the forces in three or four weeks. In order that army surgeons stationed at camps, cantonments, and other military hospitals in this country may thoroughly understand the latest treatment of war wounds, the army medical department has had established special classes of instruction to which are sent selected officers who, upon completion of their courses, return to their own hospitals and instruct other surgeons in these methods.

"Duty to one's country does not end on the parade ground, nor even on the battlefield, but consists in doing everything in one's power to help win the war," says an order issued by General Pershing, a copy of which has been received by the war department.

"To write home frequently and regularly to keep in constant touch with family and friends is one of the soldier's most important duties. Mothers and fathers will suffer if they do not hear often from sons fighting in France. In the present large companies it is not possible for officers to write letters for their men, and every man must do it for himself."

Applicants for commissions as first lieutenants in the engineer corps, according to a statement by the war department, should be between thirty-two and thirty-six years of age and for commissions as captains between thirty-six and forty-two. The engineer corps is conducting a campaign for 2,000 more commissioned officers, the examining board making a tour of the principal cities of the country to make examination readily available for applicants.

The $120,000,000 allotted for the plants is expected to give the government a smokeless powder production capacity equal to all other American plants combined. In construction of the plants it was found necessary to build a new town on each site to house the employees, and approximately 9,000 different buildings were erected. Streets were put down and sewered, power plants constructed, and stores and hospitals built. Approximately 35,000 men worked on construction and about 30,000 will eventually be engaged in the actual production of powder.

Thousands of women are employed in the United States gas-mask plant. They are acting as inspectors and are engaged throughout the entire process of manufacture, according to a statement from the gas defense service. Hundreds of girls have been trained in the special art of sewing the face pieces. Each separate step in the assembling of the mask is done by women workers, until the mask is completed, the last inspection is made and the final product is ready for shipment overseas.

QUICK DELIVERY IS RESULT

Fruits, Vegetables and Other Products in Season to Be Carried—Merchandise Is Hauled by Trucks on Return Trips.

Last year producers of eggs near Vineland and Millville, New Jersey, had difficulties getting their eggs to dealers in New York City. This year, however, they travel direct by motor truck to the dealers' doors and arrive in less time and with less loss from breakage than in other seasons.

This community of producers has found the results of their experiment of shipping eggs by motor truck so successful that they are planning to extend their efforts to cover fruits and vegetables, poultry, and other products in season.

Eggs by Motor Truck.

Following a season in which transportation troubles made shipments to New York City unsatisfactory the farmers sought assistance from the bureau of markets of the United States department of agriculture, and specialists on motor-truck marketing made a survey of the situation. This was followed by a group of producers agreeing to ship their eggs by motor truck and to bring the cases to designated places along the route the truck was to cover. A large commercial motor-truck company, operating a fleet of trucks between New York and Philadelphia, was interested and agreed to make a detour on their trips to New York, to which city their trucks had often traveled without being loaded, to take in Vineland and Millville. Local farmers and merchants in these two towns agreed to give their hauling business from Philadelphia to the truck company and thus insure a full load for the trucks all the way from Philadelphia to New York.

Capacity of Trucks.

The trucks have a capacity of about five tons, and can take 200 crates of eggs. On the first trip only 150 cases were ready at the roadside and the balance of the load was made up of crated glass from Vineland and Millville. This first load went the 140 miles in the record time of 15 hours with not an egg broken on the way. The truck went across on the ferry boat from the New Jersey shore, and the eggs were delivered on the sidewalks in front of the wholesale houses. On the return trip the truck hauled merchandise from New York direct to Philadelphia.

Some of the dealers in New York City are offering a premium of from one-half to one and one-half cents a dozen for eggs shipped by motor truck from Vineland and Millville, because the eggs arrive in better condition and in quicker time than when shipped by rail. This premium alone more than covers the difference in cost of shipping by motor truck and by rail, and, in addition to the time saved, the motor-truck service is more dependable and gives better delivery. The eggs, as yet, are not pooled, but consist of individual shipments to a number of dealers.

TRAIN FOR HARD WORK

Is there a physical training class in your town?

If not, this is a good time to start one—a physical training class to harden the soft muscles of town and city men, so they can go to farms and do effective work during emergency needs for farm labor in their counties and communities.

Kansas City started a "loyal physical fitness class" some weeks before the time for the wheat harvest. The idea spread all over the state. In many towns and cities similar classes were organized, and men made themselves fit for the hard work they were to undertake in the fields as volunteer harvest workers. The Kansas wheat crop couldn't have been harvested if thousands of patriotic men from the towns and cities had not volunteered to save this crop that will help feed the fighters at the front. And a great many of these men couldn't have worked as effectively, and some of them would have been forced to drop out altogether, if they had not been prepared for the physical strain by preliminary training.

Uncle Sam needs the help of every loyal American citizen. Either work or fight! You can't do your best work, either at your present job or at any other job, or in the fields temporarily as a farm volunteer, unless you are physically fit.

A few weeks' work in a physical training class will "harden" you surprisingly. Start a class in your town. Be ready to go to work effectively, be able really to accomplish something in the fields when the call comes for patriotic town men to do emergency farm work in your section. An open space—the courthouse square or a vacant lot or a big back yard—a leader who knows the army "setting up" or other movements and exercises—and determination on the part of the men of your town—these are all the things you need.

Finding Help for Harvest.

Kansas answered the call for increased food production. Kansas planted more wheat. Kansas knew, of course, that a tremendous amount of man power would be required to harvest that crop. But Kansas wasn't dismayed. Uncle Sam called for more wheat. Kansas planted more wheat. Kansas knew that wheat would be harvested and that people in the towns and cities would go to the fields to help do it!

And that is precisely how it is being harvested—by people from the towns and cities of Kansas. A literal exodus of all the urban people hasn't been necessary, of course. But all that were needed went—and more were ready if needed.

The state-wide campaign for town volunteers for farm labor service during the harvest was launched at a Kansas City conference the latter part of May. Representatives of the United States department of agriculture reminded all the co-operating agencies at that conference of the policy that department has been urging since the beginning of the war—the use of town man power for local farm labor needs during seasonal emergencies.

Indiana Brevities

Richmond.—More than 100 representatives of manufacturing establishments in ten counties of eastern Indiana met here to help speed up the production of war materials and to arrange for the conversion of plants engaged in nonessentials into the production of goods needed by the government. Richmond is the center of a subdistrict of the Tenth industrial district, which has Cincinnati for a center. It is made up of Blackford, Henry, Union, Jay, Wayne, Franklin, Delaware, Rush, Randolph and Fayette counties. A survey of the capacity of various plants will be made and data will be collected on the following classification: Castings, forgings and stampings, rubber products, clay products, machinery and machine products, chemicals, oils, paints, textiles and clothing, wood, automotive, leather, paper boxes and miscellaneous. The whole project is under the directions of the national war industries board.

Fort Wayne.—Work of reclassifying military registrants in Allen and other counties in the northern part of Indiana now is under way. The action is in accordance with a recent order issued at the war department at Washington by Major General E. H. Crowder, provost marshal general of the United States army. Its purpose is to provide more men for class 1 in the military draft. In this county the various local selection boards, legal advisory boards and the district appeal agent are co-operating in the task. The records of all registrants placed in classes 2, 3, 4 or 5, about whom there is a question as to their proper status, are being gone into carefully. Nothing has yet been announced to indicate whether many available men will be obtained by the process.

Kokomo.—Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist, has instructed county Food Administrator J. R. Morgan to impress upon the farmers that great care must be taken in thrashing to avoid the spread of the red weevil in their fields next year. The danger of the insect will be greater next season than this, he says, and advises that thrashing machines be cleaned after each thrashing of fields in which the weevil has been discovered. Not only does he recommendd that wheat stubble be burned over infected fields, but the ground beneath separators after thrashing and beneath straw stacks be burned over and turned under. The nature of the insect is such that it propagates rapidly in the ground; that it must be fought intelligently. The use of early varieties of wheat is suggested.

Seymour.—Practically all the rye in the county has been harvested and farmers are cutting wheat. Nearly all the fields are in shock. Some of the fields are expected to thresh from 35 to 40 bushels an acre, and the average yield in the county will be higher than usual, it is believed. Local millers expect the first new wheat before July 4. Corn and oats are in need of rain. Hundreds of acres have been planted in tomatoes. Potatoes are making little progress on account of the dry weather.

Rensselaer.—County Food Administrator John Eger has seized 500 pounds of sugar from Col. Ed Oliver, the onion king of Jasper county, who lives on his farm at Newland. Oliver, it is alleged, obtained the sugar of a wholesale grocery firm at Frankfort after presenting a certificate filled out in Chicago and making affidavit that he was part owner of the Saratoga hotel in Chicago and that the sugar was wanted for preserving purposes to be used in a preserving plant at Newland which he claimed he owned.

South Bend.—The annual retreat of the priests of the Holy Cross congregation is in progress at Notre Dame and continues for ten days, with Rev. Pascal Robison, a Franciscan of Washington, in charge. On August 19 the annual retreat for the priests of the diocese of Fort Wayne will begin here and the following week the several hundred priests in the Chicago diocese will come to Notre Dame for their annual retreat.

Indianapolis.—Electric interurban railway systems in Indiana, through A. L. Neereamer, chairman of the Central Electric Traffic association, filed petitions with the state public service commission asking authority to increase their rates on freight approximately 25 per cent, or to approximately the basis on which steam railroads now operate under the recent freight rate increasing orders from W. G. McAdoo, director-general of railroads.

Marion.—The Spanish-American war veterans' encampment concluded at the Soldiers' Home. The department elected H. Beecher Troutman, Terre Haute, commander. The Ladies' Auxiliary chose Marie C. Williams, Indianapolis, department president. Huntington was selected as the place of holding the 1919 Indiana encampment.

Rushville.—Because farmers will be busy with harvest work on the Fourth of July, the Rush county council of defense has officially disapproved any sort of public demonstration here. As gathering the crops is essential, members of the defense body believe nothing should be done to attract farmers from their work.

Bloomington.—A number of Indiana quarry operators in this section are co-operating in an appeal to William G. McAdoo, director general of railroads, against proposed increases in rates for switching from quarries to mills.

Indianapolis.—Wheat is now being harvested to the central counties, and cutting is expected to begin northward to Miami county by the 25th, and to the boundary by July 1, the state meteorologist reports. The crop is rated generally as good to excellent and heavy, but some damage by jointworm and fly is reported in a few northern localities. Clover cutting is well advanced with good yields of good quality. Oats are heading in most places, but are short in some sections, especially in those localities most in need of rain. The weather was ideal for work in corn and the fields are generally well cultivated and clean. In the northern division the height of corn averages about 14 inches; in the central division, about ten inches; and in the southern, where planting was delayed by flooding and heavy rains in May, about nine inches.

Indianapolis.—Nominees at the recent Democratic state convention held here for the state fall election include: Secretary of state, Herman L. Conter of Fairmount; auditor of state, William M. Jones of Decatur; treasurer of state, J. B. McCarthy of Kempton; attorney general, Evan B. Stotsenburg of New Albany; clerk of supreme and appellate courts, Samuel L. Callaway of Monticello; superintendent of public instruction, Willis A. Fox of Angola; state geologist, Edward Barrett of Plainfield; judges of supreme court, First district, John C. McNutt of Martinsville, Fourth district, James J. Moran of Portland; judges of appellate court, First district, Milton B. Hottell of Salem; Hugh Wickens of Greensburg; Second district, F. S. Caldwell of Winchester; Edwin F. McCabe of Williamsport.

Indianapolis.—A trust fund of $50,000, to be held for 500 years, the income from which is to be divided each 50 years and expended for social welfare work, is set aside from the estate of the late Charles W. Fairbanks, former vice president of the United States, as a memorial to his wife, by his will, filed for probate here. The value of the entire estate is estimated at $2,150,000. A number of other charitable bequests are made in the will. Ohio Wesleyan university is given $25,000, Depauw a like amount, and $50,000 is given to the Methodist hospital and Deaconess home in Indianapolis. An income of $15,000 a year is provided for Mr. Fairbanks' daughter, Mrs. John W. Timmons. Provision for his three sons include giving to each of them annual incomes of $10,000 a year. The will makes numerous bequests to old servants.

Indianapolis.—The school census in Indiana shows 776,868 children between six and twenty-one years old, according to statistics compiled by John B. Wood and Robert K. Devericks, clerk and deputy in the office of Horace Ellis, state superintendent of public instruction. A net gain of 2,226 children is noted over last year. The report shows 125,384 between fourteen and sixteen years old. These may be exempted from school for work in factories. White males number 389,613 and white females number 369,065. Colored males number 9,195 and colored females number 8,995. The enumeration is made by the township trustees in each township of the state as of May 15.

Columbus.—Bartholomew county farmers have declined an offer from office men of this city to help with the wheat harvest and other rush farm work on the grounds that if the office men did enoughwork to be of service to the farmers there would be perhaps as many sunstrokes as there were office men and that the farmers would be obliged to lose a lot of time giving first aid to the stricken. Many of the school boys of the cities and towns in Bartholomew county took employment on farms in the county at the close of the schools, but most of them have either gone back of their own accord or have been sent back by the farmers because of lack of efficiency.

Evansville.—Proposed plans for improving the local river front and building a railroad and waterways terminals have been disapproved by government officials at Washington, according to word received here by Frank Albus, secretary of the chamber of commerce. The officials gave it as their opinion that the building of a wall on the local river front, as proposed, might cause the lowlands in Kentucky opposite this city to overflow at certain times in the year.

Indianapolis.—Watch your poultry, advises the Indiana state veterinary department. Every fowl should be healthy, should be normal in size, erect, active, with the bright eye and the red comb. There is something wrong with the drooping or wing or weakened legs. Weakness is denoted when the head or neck is not erect. A good layer will be a good eater and a hustler generally.

Marion.—The national home of the Phi Delta Kappa fraternity is to be erected and maintained in this city, and construction work is expected to begin within the next six months. A lot for the new home has been purchased at an outlay of $5,000, and the frame dwelling now standing on the lot will be used as the fraternity home until work on the new structure starts.

Muncie.—"Tuberculosis and social diseases are more to be feared than the Germans, in the belief of some medical authorities," said Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the state board of health, addressing a mass meeting here under direction of the local Anti-Tuberculosis society. "Some day before long the Germans will be whipped and their ability to cause world-wide suffering and death then will be at an end, but these insidious diseases will go on taking the toll of the innocent and guilty alike through our own ignorance."

"OVER THE TOP"

By An American Soldier Who Went

Arthur Guy Empey

Machine Gunner, Serving in France

Copyright 1917, by Arthur Guy Empey

EMPEY WRITES AND STAGES A PLAY BEHIND THE LINES WITH GREAT SUCCESS.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Chaplain distinguishes himself by rescuing wounded men under hot fire. With pick and shovel Empey has experience as a trench digger in No Man's Land. After exciting experiences on listening post detail and observation post duty, Empey is picked for patrol duty in No Man's Land and has narrow escape from death.

While they are talking, an old Jew named Ikey Cohenstein comes along, and Abe engages him for cashier. After engaging Ikey they meet an old Southern negro called Sambo, and upon the suggestion of Ikey he is engaged as porter. Then the three of them, arm in arm, leave to take possession of this wonderful palace which Abe has just paid $6,000 for. (Curtain.)

In the second act the curtain rises on the interior of the Diamond Palace saloon, and the audience gets its first shock. The saloon looks like a pigpen, two tramps lying drunk on the floor, and the bartender in a dirty shirt with his sleeves rolled up, asleep with his head on the bar.

Enter Abe, Sambo and Ikey, and the fun commences.

One of the characters in the second act was named Broadway Kate, and I had an awful job to break in one of the Tommies to act and talk like a woman.

Another character was Alkali Ike, an Arizona cowboy, who just before the close of the play comes into the saloon and wrecks it with his revolver.

We had eleven three-hour rehearsals before I thought it advisable to present the sketch to the public.

The whole brigade was crazy to witness the first performance. This performance was scheduled for Friday night and everyone was full of anticipation; when bang! orders came through that the brigade would move at two that afternoon. Cursing and blinding was the order of things upon the receipt of this order, but we moved.

That night we reached the little village of S—— and again went into rest billets. We were to be there two weeks. Our company immediately got busy and scoured the village for a suitable place in which to present our production. Then we received another shock.

A rival company was already established in the village. They called themselves "The Bow Bells," and put on a sketch entitled, "Blighty—What Hopes?" They were the divisional concert party.

We hoped they all would be soon in Blighty to give us a chance.

This company charged an admission of a franc per head, and that night our company went en masse to see their performance. It really was good.

I had a sinking sensation when I thought of running my sketch in opposition to it.

In one of their scenes they had a soubrette called Flossie. The soldier that took this part was clever and made a fine-appearing and chic girl. We immediately fell in love with her until two days after, while we were on a march, we passed Flossie with "her" sleeves rolled up and the sweat pouring from "her" face unloading shells from a motor lorry.

As our section passed her I yelled out: "Hello, Flossie; Blighty—What Hopes?" Her reply made our love die out instantly.

"Ah, go to h—l!"

This brought quite a laugh from the marching column directed at me, and I instantly made up my mind that our sketch should immediately run in opposition to "Blighty—What Hopes?"

When we returned to our billet from the march, Curley Wallace, my theatrical partner, came running over to me and said he had found a swanky place in which to produce our show.

After taking off my equipment, and followed by the rest of the section, I went over to the building he had picked out. It was a monstrous barn with a platform at one end which would make an ideal stage. The section got right on the job, and before night had that place rigged out in apple-pie order.

The next day was Sunday and after church parade we put all our time on a dress rehearsal, and it went fine.

I made four or five large signs announcing that our company would open up that evening at the King George the Fifth theater, on the corner of Ammo street and Sandbag terrace. General admission was one-half franc. First ten rows in orchestra one franc, and boxes two francs. By this time our printed programs had returned from London, and I further announced that on the night of the first performance a program would be given free of charge to men holding tickets costing a franc or over.

We had an orchestra of seven men and seven different instruments. This orchestra was excellent, while they were not playing.

The performance was scheduled to start at 6 p. m.

At 5:15 there was a mob in front of our one entrance and it looked like a big night. We had two boxes each accommodating four people, and these we immediately sold out. Then a brilliant idea came to Ikey Cohenstein. Why not use the rafters overhead, call them boxes, and charge two francs for a seat on them? The only difficulty was how were the men to reach these boxes, but to Ikey this was a mere detail.

He got long ropes and tied one end around each rafter and then tied a lot of knots in the ropes. These ropes would take the place of stairways.

We figured out that the rafters would seat about forty men and sold that number of tickets accordingly.

When the ticketholders for the boxes got a glimpse of the rafters and were informed that they had to use the rope stairway, there was a howl of indignation, but we had their money and told them that if they did not like it they could write to the management later and their money would be refunded; but under these conditions they would not be allowed to witness the performance that night.

After a little grousing they accepted the situation with the promise that if the show was rotten they certainly would let us know about it during the performance.

Everything went lovely and it was a howling success, until Alkali Ike appeared on the scene with his revolver loaded with blank cartridges. Behind the bar on a shelf was a long line of bottles. Alkali Ike was supposed to start on the left of this line and break six of the bottles by firing at them with his revolver. Behind these bottles a piece of painted canvas was supposed to represent the back of the bar, at each shot from Alkali's pistol a man behind the scenes would hit one of the bottles with his entrenching tool handle and smash it, to give the impression that Alkali was a good shot.

Alkali Ike started in and aimed at the right of the line of bottles instead of the left, and the poor boob behind the scenes started breaking the bottles on the left, and then the boxholders turned loose; but outside of this little fiasco the performance was a huge success, and we decided to run it for a week.

New troops were constantly coming through, and for six performances we had the "S. R. O." sign suspended outside.

CHAPTER XIX.

On His Own.

Of course Tommy cannot always be producing plays under fire but while in rest billets he has numerous other ways of amusing himself. He is a great gambler, but never plays for large stakes. Generally, in each company, you will find a regular Canfield. This man banks nearly all the games of chance and is an undisputed authority on the rules of gambling. Whenever there is an argument among the Tommies about some uncertain point as to whether Houghton is entitled to Watkins' sixpence, the matter is taken to the recognized authority and his decision is final.

The two most popular games are "Crown and Anchor" and "House."

The paraphernalia used in "Crown and Anchor" consists of a piece of canvas two feet by three feet. This is divided into six equal squares. In these squares are painted a club, diamond, heart, spade, crown, and an anchor, one device to a square. There are three dice used, each dice marked the same as the canvas. The banker sets up his gambling outfit in the corner of a billet and starts bally-hooing until a crowd of Tommies gathers around; then the game starts.

The Tommies place bets on the squares, the crown or anchor being played the most. The banker then rolls his three dice and collects or pays out as the case may be. If you play the crown and one shows up on the dice, you get even money, if two show up, you receive two to one, and if three, three to one. If the crown does not appear and you have bet on it, you lose, and so on. The percentage for the banker is large if every square is played, but if the crowd is partial to, say two squares, he has to trust to luck. The banker generally wins.

The game of "House" is very popular also. It takes two men to run it. This game consists of numerous squares of cardboard containing three rows of numbers, five numbers to a row. The numbers run from one to ninety. Each card has a different combination.

The French "estaminets" in the villages are open from eleven in the morning until one in the afternoon in accordance with army orders.

After dinner the Tommies congregate at these places to drink French beer at a penny a glass and play "House."

As soon as the estaminet is sufficiently crowded the proprietors of the "House" game get busy and, as they term it, "form a school." This consists of going around and selling cards at a franc each. If they have ten in the school, the backers of the game deduct two francs for their trouble and the winner gets eight francs.

Then the game starts. Each buyer places his card before him on the table, first breaking up matches into fifteen pieces.

One of the backers of the game has a small cloth bag in which are ninety cardboard squares, each with a number printed thereon, from one to ninety. He raps on the table and cries out: "Eyes down, my lucky lads."

All noise ceases and every one is attention.

The croupier places his hand in the bag and draws forth a numbered square and immediately calls out the number. The man who owns the card with that particular number on it, covers the square with a match. The one who covers the fifteen numbers on his card first shouts "House." The other backer immediately comes over to him and verifies the card by calling out the numbers thereon to the man with the bag. As each number is called he picks it out of the ones picked from the bag and says, "Right." If the count is right he shouts, "House correct, pay the lucky gentleman, and sell him a card for the next school." The "lucky gentleman" generally buys one unless he has a miser trace in his veins.

Then another collection is made, a school formed, and they carry on with the game.

The caller-out has many nicknames for the numbers such as "Kelly's Eye" for one, "Leg's Eleven" for eleven, "Clickety-click" for sixty-six, or "Top of the house" meaning ninety.

Empey tells in the next installment how the war is crumbling the British wall of caste, which once was insurmountable.

SIXTY KILLED, MANY HURT IN RAILWAY CRASH

Flying Michigan Central Empty Troop Train Tears Through Circus Tourist Cars.

HALF OF DEAD ARE BURNED

Hagenbeck-Wallace Performers Caught in Holocaust When Locomotive Goes Through Sleepers in Early Morning—Engineer Dead or Asleep.

Gary, Ind., June 24.—Sixty persons are dead and more than 80 are injured as the result of a wreck west of here, in which an empty Michigan Central train crashed into and ripped through the second section of a Hagenbeck-Wallace circus special. Fire broke out almost immediately following the crash, and more than half of the deaths were the results of burns.

Horror ruled at the scene; women pleading for their children lost in one of the four coaches demolished first by the crash, and brought to ashes by the conflagration; men begging to be shot, rather than be left to burn to death; clowns, their jests turned to tears, sobbed for friends of the canvas they could not find.

Engineer Dead or Asleep.

In the roaring tangled mass were many whom rescuers were unable to reach, and who perished, crying vainly for help.

Circumstances surrounding the tragedy have led investigating federal and railway officials to believe the engineer of the empty troop train was either dead or asleep at his post before he struck the train, as he ignored two block signals and ran past the usual flares placed by the circus train crew.

Death List May Run Higher.

It was estimated by some that the dead might run even higher than sixty.

The wreck occurred on a stretch of road that was considered especially well safeguarded with all that modern railroad science could provide.

Officials began searching for the engineer, Sargent of Jackson, Mich., who is believed to have been killed in the crash.

The fireman, who crawled from the wreck, spoke only four coherent words before he ran into nearby woods, babbling and shrieking like a maniac.

"The engineer was asleep," the fireman said.

Brakes Were Not Set.

L. W. Landman, general passenger agent of the Michigan Central, said that his only explanation of the wreck would be the fact that the engineer was dead at the throttle. The brakes in the troop train were not set.

"He ignored all the signals," said Mr. Lindman. "He ran past two block signals, two red light signals, and the usual flares placed by the circus train crew."

There were something like 300 of the circus folk on the wrecked train. The first section of the circus train had gone ahead to Hammond earlier from Michigan City, where the circus played last night. In the first section were most of the animals. A second section carried about 650 performers and help.

The troop train of 24 coaches was returning empty from the East. It was said to be traveling at a speed of sixty miles an hour when it crashed into the circus train.

The casualties were made heavier by the fact that the circus trains were of wood, and because the berths were built three in a section instead of the customary two.

Most of the dead were circus performers of the highest class. Among them were clowns, aerial performers, acrobats, equestrians and animal tamers. One of the women missing was Rosie Roseland, a bareback rider, whose salary was said to be $25,000 a year.

Germans Attempt Raids in Montdidier and in the Upper Alsace Regions.

Paris, June 2.—German troops at night attempted raiding operations in the vicinity of Belloy, southwest of Montdidier. They were repulsed, says the war office report. Similar operations undertaken by the enemy in Upper Alsace were equally unsuccessful.

Alcohol as Source of Power.

Alexander Graham Bell recently remarked that the world will probably depend upon alcohol more and more as time goes on, and that a great field of usefulness is opening up for the engineer who will modify our machinery to enable alcohol to be used as the source of power.

HUMORS OF RENT COLLECTING

Seeming Proof That Stern Gatherer of Landlord's Tribute May Be Human, After All.

A Bostonian, owning houses in a neighboring city, received the following stately letter from the collector of rents. We publish it to show that a collector may be inexorable, yet have a vein of humor in his iron constitution. The letter was written in January:

"The soil-pipe, water pipes and other apparatus in the cellar of the old homestead are in their usual hibernal state—frozen stiff; so Lemuel reports, and adds that he offered to contribute to Bill a ton of coal for the furnace to generate a little warmth and partially overcome the deadly, gravelike chill of that subterranean space; and Bill tells me that Lemuel is a cheerful liar, and made no such offer, and so I tell both what the other says, and leave them to fight it out, impressing on them, however, that the rent must be forthcoming just the same."

Bee-Keeping in New Zealand.

At the late annual meeting of the Waikato Beekeepers' association at Hamilton, an assistant director of the horticultural division of the department of agriculture stated that there were 4,391 apiaries registered in New Zealand, representing 50,523 colonies of bees. One beekeeper last year returned 30 tons of honey, which he sold at $487 per ton, while some was sold as high as $730 per ton, thus making it a very prosperous industry.

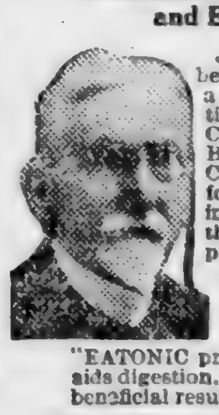
JUDGE DECIDES STOMACH REMEDY A GREAT SUCCESS

Commissioner of Mediation and Conciliation Board Tries EATONIC, the Wonderful Stomach Remedy, and Endorses It.



Judge William L. Chambers, who uses EATONIC as a remedy for loss of appetite and indigestion, is a Commissioner of the U. S. Board of Mediation and Conciliation. It is natural for him to express himself in guarded language, yet there is no hesitation in his pronouncement regarding the value of EATONIC. Writing from Washington, D. C., to the Eatonic Remedy Co., he says,

"EATONIC promotes appetite and aids digestion. I have used it with beneficial results."

Again we are asked to call the people's attention to the supreme importance of preventing new construction. It is not so much that the money should be saved as it is that transportation and labor and materials are desperately needed in doing the things and making the things necessary for the war. No construction work will be tolerated unless it is in a way or for a purpose to help win the war. We hope that the people will bear this in mind and not make any further improvements unless it is a case of dire necessity and then they should consult the war board in regard to this. J. Y. W. McClellan, Chairman DeKalb Co., Council of Defense.

Biliousness

WHEN you have a bilious attack your liver fails to perform its functions. You become constipated. The food you eat ferments in your stomach instead of digesting. This inflames the stomach and causes nausea, vomiting and a terrible headache. Take Chamberlain's Tablets. They will tone up your liver, clean out your stomach and you will soon be as well as ever. There is nothing better.

ST. JOE.

Red Cross Department

The first year of the existence of the St Joe Red Cross chapter is now closed, and its undisputed success is due to the loyal support of the people throughout the entire time. This fact has been recognized and appreciated by the officers, and they extend their sincere thanks to every person who in any way contributed his "bit."

When this chapter was organized, the purpose of the work and the way of doing it were all new, not only to the branch, but to the county chapter as well; and considerable time was spent in getting information. Not only were we without members and funds, but were in debt $5 00 for membership cards which we were obliged to get; and so our first work was to raise funds and canvass for members. Both efforts met with the co-operation of the people, and we finally organized with a class here and at Newville.

Nine shipments were made within the year, and each brought compliments from the county inspector on the quality and quantity of our work. Moreover, we have not had a single garment returned for alteration.

New officers have been elected to serve until January, as follows:

Chairman.—Mrs. Belle Barney.
Vice Chairman.—Mrs. Lora Leighty.
Secretary.—Mrs. Agnes Monroe.

The treasurer will be appointed

At present, there is money on hand to buy material; and 25 per cent. of the war fund secured on the last drive will be returned to this chapter from Auburn. This will amount to about $200

The annual report of the treasurer is as follows:

FINANCIAL REPORT—RECEIPTS

Chapter's share of membership dues	$163 20
Chapter's share of the Red Cross war fund	181 60
Miscellaneous donations & contributions	561 27

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Mrs. Morr Divorced

The divorce suit of Jane Morr vs. Samuel Morr, in the DeKalb circuit court, was settled without going to trial, Tuesday morning. Plaintiff was granted a divorce and $15,000 alimony, the latter consisting of a 140-acre farm, valued at $13 300, and a residence in Auburn. Besides, defendant pays all costs and part of her attorney fees. This is the largest alimony ever granted in a similar action in DeKalb county. Plaintiff was represented by J. M. Life, assisted by Judge Best, of Angola; defendant by Hoffman & Shearer.

The divorce was obtained on the grounds of cruelty, plaintiff alleging that her husband accused her of being intimate with other men; that he called her vile names; that he threatened her with violence; that he struck her, breaking a rib; that his treatment threatened her health. She further alleged that when her husband was enraged, he would tear the bed clothes from the bed and throw them on the floor, tear the curtains from the windows, kick up the carpets, break the furniture, put out the fire in the cooking stove by throwing water on it and come into the house with his shoes clogged with mud.

Mr. Morr is 70 years old; Mrs. Morr, 61. They had been married forty-three years. They have two childret: Mrs. Ella McCrory, of Auburn; Lancaster Morr, who lives on land now owned by his father.

DEMOCRATS STAGE BIG CONVENTION

ADOPTS STRONG STATE TICKET AND WAR PLATFORM.

WOULD RUN WILSON 3RD TIME

Ex-Governor Ralston Mentions President Wilson as Third Term Candidate Amid Cheers from Delegates—H. L. Conter, of Decatur for Secretary of State.

Indianapolis—Declaring that it is the immediate purpose of the democratic party to win the war against Germany and to support President Wilson in every possible manner and without protest, the democrats of Indiana launched their campaign for this year at a convention that was burning with patriotic as well as political zeal from curtain to curtain. The platform, approved by Representative Scott Ferris, chairman of the congressional campaign committee; Vice President Marshall, Acting Chairman W. E. Hollister, of the national committee, and other lesser leaders is expected to become a democratic "keynote" for the nation. Not only did the democrats maintain that it is their duty to stand behind the president that they taunted the republicans for their attitude throughout the war and particularly for their failure in Indiana to take a stand for the repeal of the law for the teaching of German in the public schools. The pinnacle of enthusiasm was reached when former Governor Ralston, permanent chairman, lauding President Wilson eloquently, proposed his renomination in 1920.

The convention attempted then to raise the roof with applause. With a sort of airy persiflage the vice-president dealt with the situation as far as the republicans are concerned. He created much amusement by referring to Will Hays, chairman of the republican national committee, as the "gay Young Lochinvar" who ambled out of the west on the G. O. P.—termed by the vice-president as the grand old palfry—and with force of arms seized the Lady Theodora and carried her off to the medevial castle called republican headquarters, where he set her above the salt and introduced her as a republican vestal virgin. The platform contained a strong endorsement of Secretary of Navy Daniels, Secretary of War Baker and Secretary of the treasury McAdoo. It was, in fact, a strongly pro-Wilson and pro-war platform.

The features dealing with the reconstruction problems that will follow the war pledged the party to a broad, liberal, progressive policy.

On suffrage the democratis went further than the republicans, not only endorsing the proposed federal amendment, but calling for an amendment to the state legislature to permit equal suffrage. The democrats not only adopted a resolution in honor of the late Senator Kern, but in honor of the late Vice-President Fairbanks.

The platform pledged the democrats to stand behind Governor Goodrich in any patriotic effort he may make to aid President Wilson in winning the war. It declared against his program for the centralization of government at the state house by making several offices, now elective, appointive by him. Regarding the teaching of German the platform said "We demand the repeal of the law making compulsory the teaching of the German language in the public schools of Indiana."

Great applause following the reading of this plank. The platform was pledged by Claude Bowers, Fort Wayne, chairman of the resolutions committee. The leaders of the convention were so busy endorsing the president in various terms that they neglected in their platform to adopt the rooster as the party emblem. It was necessary for Chairman Van Nuys, of the state committee, to have an amendment adopted for the platform bringing the rooster into the Indiana campaign.

The flag decorations were lavish. Large pictures of President Wilson, Washington and Lincoln, concealed for awhile beneath flags, were unveiled at a moment calculated to bring applause. The Indiana war mothers and members of Indianas Woman's Franchise league were guests of honor. Mrs. Marshall and other well known Indiana women occupied seats in the gallery. Every delegate and many of the spectators carried small flags that were used effectively in several demonstrations. Former United States Senator Taggart, W. H. O'Brien and many other well known party men occupied seats with the democrats. The attendance was large, being much better than expected, owing to the farmers being engaged in the wheat harvest.

The convention moved with a dash that was very pleasing to the managers. The vice-president in his address asserted that the war is an asset for the democratic party just as the civil war was an asset for the republican party. He explained that it is an asset because the democrats happen to be in power just as it was an asset for the republicans because they happened to be in power in 1861.

He attempted to make it clear that he does not regard the average democrat as being more loyal or patriotic than the average republican, but he dealt vigorously with the politicians who constantly indulge in criticism of the president for his management of the war.

He maintained, however, that this is neither a republican nor a democratic war. Ralston took the same position. He also dealt somewhat with state questions. Representative Ferris spoke briefly, giving interesting statistics on the growing of the army and navy in the past year.

Nominations Follow.

The final vote in the race for secretary of state as announced unofficially by Dale J. Crittenberger, secretary of the convention, was Conter, 943; Dupree, 720.

Two candidates were placed in nomination for auditor of state—Wm. M. Jones, of Fairmont, and Thomas Meeker, of Indianapolis. When Marion county was reached there were cries of "pass" but after a short delay the entire vote was cast for Meeker, 175 votes. Meeker withdrew before the vote was announced and Jones' nomination was made unanimous.

Candidates for nomination for treasurer of state were then called and J. B. McCarthy, of Kempton, was the only man named. On motion of Benjamin Bosse, of Evansville, McCarthy received the nomination.

Myron T. King, of Indianapolis, and Samuel Callaway, of Monticello, were named for the nomination for clerk of the supreme court. Although Marion county voted 175 votes solidly for King Callaway ran ahead and was nominated by a vote of 990 to 738.

Even Stotesenberg was nominated by acclamation for attorney general, there being no other candidate.

Milton B. Hottel, of Salem; E. W. Felt of Indianapolis, and Hugh Wickens, of Greensburg, were placed in nomination for the two places on the appellate court, first division.

It was decided to vote for two candidates on one ballot, and each delegate was given two votes. A tumult arose when the Marion county vote was cast 125 for Felt, 125 for Hottel and 100 for Wickens. The vote being challenged, the delegation was ordered polled by wards. Before the canvass could be completed, Former Lieutenant Governor W. P. O'Neill, who was acting chairman of the convention at the time, had to order the delegates to be seated. The result of the canvass was: Hottel 143; Felt 159; Wickens 33. After the completion of the roll call and before the vote was announced, a supporter of Judge Wickens protested the vote but was satisfied when the result was announced, showing Judge Wickens had won a place on the ticket. The roll call resulted as follows: Hottel, 1,240, Wickens 1,002, Felt 926. Judge Felt then moved that the nomination of Judge Hottel and Wickens be made unanimous.

For the second division of the appellate court, F. S. Caldwell, of Winchester, and Edwin McCabe, of Williamsport, were nominated by acclamation, there being only two candidates.

Indianapolis, Ind. — Declaring in their platform that the immediate purpose of the democratic party, the purpose which takes precedence of every other, is to win the war, the democrats of Indiana in state convention here nominated a state ticket, adopted a platform and listened to addresses by Vice-president Thomas R. Marshall, former Governor Samuel M. Ralston and Representative Scott Ferris, of Oklahoma, chairman of the congressional democratic campaign committee. The contests for places on the ticket were enlivened by squabbles within the delegation from this (Marion) county, the most heated coming shortly before adjournment over the nomination of judges for the appellate court for the first division.

Vice-president Marshall put the delegates in a happy frame of mind by his reference to Will H. Hays, chairman of the republican national committee, as "this young lochinvar," who "ambled out of the west upon the G. O. P.—grand old party—and with force of arms seized the Lady Theodora and carried her off to that medieval castle called the republican headquarters where he set her above the salt and introduced her as a republican vestal virgin."

Former Governor Ralston stirred them to great enthusiasm by declaring that the exigencies of tho time ing that the exigencies of the times demanded the renomination and election of Woodrow Wilson in 1920, regardless of precedent. Representative Ferris quoted statistics to show the preparations made by President Wilson for carrying on the war.

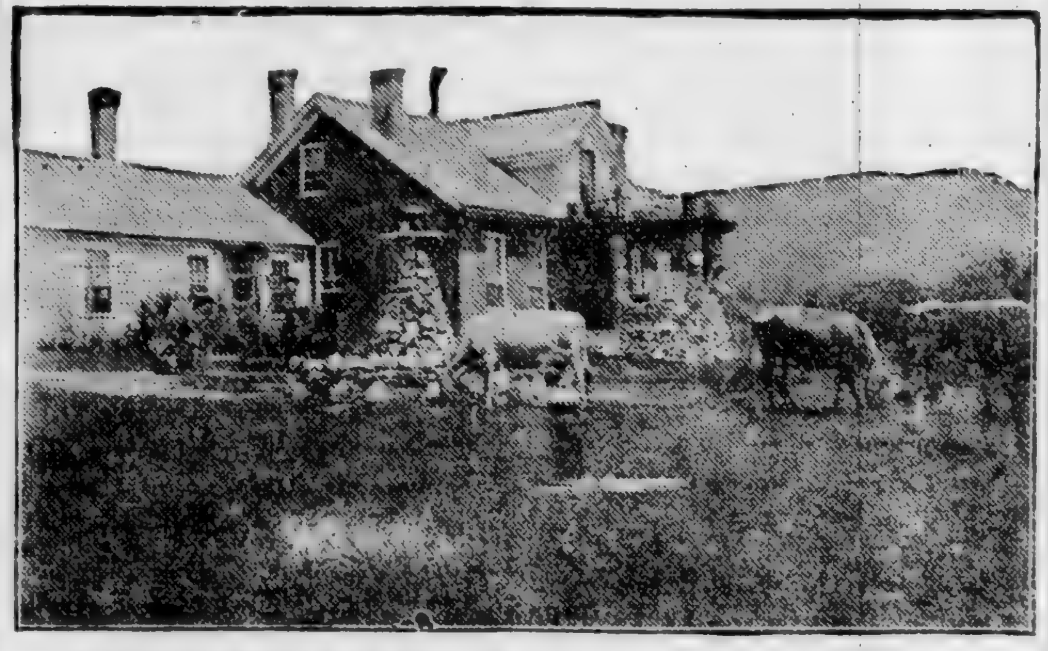
Helping the Meat and Milk Supply

(Special Information Service, United States Department of Agriculture.)

SAVE MEAT WITH MILK.



This Is the Source of the Nearest Approach to a Perfect Human Food.

MILK IS PERFECT FOR HUMAN FOOD

Department of Agriculture Urges More Liberal Use of Product to Save Meat.

IT EXCELS ALL OTHER FOODS

There Are Always Sick Children in All Localities Where Milk Is Scarce—Excellent for Body Building Protein.

Milk is the nearest approach to a perfect human food, and it is by far the best food for children. Children must have milk in order to develop properly, and all persons of whatever age need it in order to keep in proper conditin.

The advice of the United States department of agriculture is: "Save on other things if you can, but not on milk, your child's best food."

Children who do not get milk, but are given tea and coffee instead, are for the most part sickly. There are always many sick children in cities and in countries where milk is scarce. When prices go up and mothers begin to economize on milk, more children become sick. That is one of the things that, under any and every condition, the government regards it as essential to guard against. Food must be saved to feed the army and money must be saved to finance the war, but the nation's children who in a little while will be the nation's men and women must be given their opportunity for health and strength. Incidentally, the liberal use of milk does save meat and other transportable foods.

Needed for Bones and Teeth.

Children, in larger measure than grown persons, require lime. It is needed, particularly, for their bones and teeth, and in smaller quantities for their blood and other parts of their bodies. Milk is the chief food for lime. A cup of milk contains approximately four times as much lime as an egg. It is the cheapest food for lime.

Milk is also an excellent food for body-building protein. In that respect it is like eggs and meat. Milk protein is especially good for children, but it is good for and should be used by everybody.

Milk, in addition, is an excellent fuel food. Children, who are much more active than adults, need more fuel to burn in their bodies to help them run and play and work. The fat and the milk sugar burn up as fuel. A quart of milk gives the same amount of fuel as a pound of lean meat. A quart of milk gives the same amount of fuel as eight eggs. Milk, even at advanced cost, is the cheapest fuel food. Take your pencil and make a little comparison in cents.

Skim Milk Also Good.

Whole milk, of course, is the best food. But skim milk is good food, too. It has the lime, the sugar and the protein of the whole milk. It is deficient in fat and has not much of the growth substances as has whole milk. Use whole milk—but do not throw away the skim milk.

Every child, big or little, should have plenty of milk. The big boys and girls need it only slightly less than do the babies, and grown persons need it only slightly less than the big boys and girls.

Be liberal with the milk ration. Do not think of milk merely as a refreshing drink. Think of it as a good, nourishing food—the best food. The children need other foods, of course—vegetables, fruits, cereals. But, most of all, they need milk.

Be sure that the milk is clean and fresh when it is delivered to you, and that you keep it cold and clean and covered until it is used.

To Extend Motor Service.

Because the motortruck route for eggs recently established between Vineland and Millville, N. J., and New York city—about 140 miles—has proven so successful, plans are made to add more trucks to carry vegetables and fruit throughout the producing season. The truck company has agreed to supply as many trucks as are needed and is glad to get the business, because it fits in with the hauling of merchandise from New York city to Philadelphia, and insures the trucks going back loaded to New York.

DRINK LOTS OF MILK

Be liberal in the use of milk.

It is good food—the best food in the world, in fact—and for all the milk that is used a corresponding quantity of transportable food is saved for overseas.

Give the children plenty of whole milk, and drink a fair quantity yourself. It is one of the best bone and body builders.

Do not throw away the skim milk. It contains the protein, sugar and lime of whole milk.

Get acquainted—unless you already are—with the charms of buttermilk. It is a refreshing cold drink—quite as refreshing as any you could buy at a fountain. And it is a fine food. Men can do hard manual labor on buttermilk alone. That has been demonstrated.

Save, certainly, but save the milk. Do not try to save on milk.

MARKETING BUTTER AND CHEESE BY PARCEL POST

Creameries, dairies and individual farms, in various instances which have been authenticated by the bureau of markets of the United States department of agriculture, have developed a successful system of parcel post marketing for butter and cheese. The conclusion reached by specialists of the department as a result of a number of experimental shipments is that well-made butter, thoroughly chilled before shipping, may be marketed successfully by parcel post when packed in a suitable container and where extremely high temperatures are not encountered. Shipments during extremely hot weather frequently are unsatisfactory.

The bureau of markets received 454 shipments of butter, coming distances of from 187 to 536 miles, during various months of the year. Of these shipments 440, or 96.9 per cent, were received in satisfactory condition. The bureau reshipped this butter to various state experiment stations and the shipments arrived in good condition where the temperature and distance were not too great. In general, shipments from Washington were successful when forwarded as far north as Maine and as far west as Michigan and Indiana. Shipments into the South were successful shorter distances.

Farmers' Bulletin 930, "Marketing Butter and Cheese by Parcel Post," issued by the United States department of agriculture, gives detailed advice on methods which have been found advantageous. The bulletin urges that every care and precaution be exercised in making the butter and preparing it for shipment. The shipping container should properly protect the butter, and packages should be posted as near to mail time as possible in order to obtain delivery in the quickest practicable time.

The postal regulations provide that when butter is so packed or wrapped as to prevent damage to other mail it will be accepted for delivery either at the office of mailing or on any rural route starting therefrom. Butter will also be accepted for mailing to all offices to which, in the ordinary course of mail, it can be sent without spoiling when suitably wrapped or inclosed or when packed in crates, boxes, or other suitable containers.

It is well to stamp or write on packages of butter: "BUTTER—Keep away from heating apparatus."

Isolate Affected Calf.

As soon as scours is discovered it is best to separate the affected calf from the others and carefully disinfect the pen.

Build Up a Valuable Herd.

A valuable herd can be gradually built up by raising female calves from the best cows.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 30

REVIEW: JESUS CHRIST OUR REDEEMER AND LORD.

GOLDEN TEXT—For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3:16.

Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.—Matthew 16:16.

I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth.—Romans 1:16.

The method of review must largely be determined by the individual teacher. For junior and intermediate classes a good way will be by the use of a good map of Palestine, to trace the journeys of Jesus from his birth to his ascension, giving emphasis to some of his vital teachings, deeds of mercy and power, atoning death, triumphant resurrection and glorious coming again. The following day may be suggestive of the latter method:

Lesson I.—As Jesus was passing through the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, he was besought by a Syrophoenician woman to heal her daughter, who was grievously possessed with a demon. After apparent indifference, in order to lead her into an intelligent faith, he healed her daughter. As he further journeyed through Decapolis, a deaf and dumb man besought him for healing.

Lesson II.—As his earthly career was approaching its end, Jesus began to take account of his ministry. He wanted the disciples to have definite and personal knowledge as to his person. He knew that the opinions of others would not suffice them in the hours of darkness which were immediately before them.

Lesson III.—Jesus was transfigured before Peter, James and John, to show them his triumph over death in his glorious kingdom. This occurred at a time when the disciples were sorely tried. Jesus' rebuke apparently estranged them. He was transfigured "before them," showing that the chief object of the transfiguration was to prepare the disciples for the ordeal before them. An inspired commentary upon this translation is found in II Peter 1:16-19.

Lesson IV.—As Jesus was endeavoring to show his disciples how he must be crucified, they were disputing as to who should be the greatest in the kingdom. Jesus taught them that humble, self-denying service is the sign of true greatness. This is a lesson which needs to be learned by most of us today, as despite our best efforts we note insidious self-seeking making itself known.

Lesson V.—A certain rich man inquired of the Lord as to what he must do in order to inherit eternal life. This young man was of an amiable disposition and earnest and sincere, but he had wrong notions as to salvation. Jesus showed him that his supreme need was not doing something to be saved, but to be willing to surrender all things for him.

Lesson VI.—While the Lord was consciously facing the cross, the disciples were concerned about positions of pre-eminence. Jesus taught them that those who would follow him must not seek for greatness or position, but to render lowly service. In this Christ is the grand example. In due time he will exalt those who in lowliness of heart serve him.

Lesson VII.—Jesus drove out the money changers from the temple, and declared that the house of God should be a house of prayer instead of a house of merchandise. This lesson needs to be learned by many churches today.

Lesson VIII.—The scribes sought to entrap Jesus by asking captious questions. To the question as to what was the greatest commandment, he replied that it was love to God with all one's heart, soul, mind and strength. Since this is the first and great commandment, to violate this commandment is to be guilty of the greatest sin.

Lesson IX.—While Jesus sat at meat, a certain woman annointed him with precious ointment in anticipation of his burial. The Lord was pleased with this act, for it was out of a heart of fervent love that she lavished upon him her best.

Lesson X.—In connection with the last Passover, at which Judas betrayed Jesus, the symbols which represent the body and blood of Jesus were introduced. In the emblems of the communion we appropriate the very life and blessings of Christ.

Lesson XI.—Jesus died between two malefactors to make atonement for the world's sin. He gave his life a ransom for many. While on the cross, they mockingly said he saved others, himself he could not save.

He could not save both himself and others, so he chose to save others and give himself to die.

Lesson XII.—Jesus arose from the grave and demonstrated his resurrection with infallible proofs. In this God declared him to be his Son, and set his stamp of approval upon his work. The disciples ought to have rejoiced that the tomb was empty. Had he not arisen, his entire work would have been proven a failure. The resurrection of Jesus Christ, and the bodily resurrection of those who are Christ's, is central to the Christian faith.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

REASONS FOR RATIFYING.

Among seven reasons given by Wayne B. Wheeler, counsel for the Anti-Saloon league, why states should ratify the prohibition amendment are these:

A national evil requires a national remedy. Our interstate relations and the inherent, vicious character of the traffic make it a national evil. The alcoholic may drink liquor in one state and commit crime or become a public charge in another. The remedy must be as far-reaching as the evil. State boundaries are not adequate barriers to moral contagion and no state, careless in such matters, should be permitted to dump its drunks and other derelicts over the border line for a neighboring state to care for.

It will result in team work between the state and nation in dealing with the liquor traffic. The dry states are handicapped in their effort to enforce prohibition as long as the federal government continues to collect revenue from, and recognizes the outlawed traffic in, such states. National prohibition unites the state and federal government in a common policy for the public good.

The purposes of the federal government can be more easily consummated under national prohibition. One of the fundamental purposes of the federal constitution is "to promote the general welfare." The courts tell us this means to protect public health and public morals. The liquor traffic undermines or destroys both. We cannot carry out the fundamental purpose of our government if we foster, protect and encourage crime-producing business, like the beverage liquor traffic.

WHAT NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION MEANS.

From the noise that is made about it among the wets, one might think prohibition meant murder.

It doesn't.

It simply means more food, and that means lower food prices.

It means more efficient labor, and that means greater output, and that means lower prices again.

It means that the men who are now making beer and whisky will begin to make the equivalent of what they consume, and that, again, means lower prices for you.

It means more car space for legitimate commodities, and that means faster handling of freight, and that means lower prices.

It means more ship tonnage to be used in transporting material for our boys in France and for our allies, and that means not only lower prices for our allies, but the lives of American boys saved for America.

Incidentally, it means less crime, and that means less taxes. It means less pauperism, and that means less taxes. It means less insanity, and that means less taxes. It means less disease and death, and that means infinite myriads of things for the good old U. S. A.—Board of Temperance, Methodist Episcopal Church.

COMPENSATION FOR THE BREWERS.

As an example of how a brewery plant may become a constructive instead of a destructive agency—a "win-the-war" aid—we mention the Bellingham (Wash.) brewery. This is now owned by the Royal Dairy Products company and is equipped as a condensery and cold storage plant. Many similar cases might be cited. In wet states, also, brewers, seeing the sure approach of prohibition, are remodeling their plants for better and bigger business. The brewers are finding "compensation."

Incidentally it may be mentioned that the glass works which formerly made beer bottles may now turn its attention to the manufacture of milk bottles. Ice cream may take the place of the "schooner," and instead of the "growler" for the workman's noontide lunch will be used the thermos bottle of milk.

WOULD CUT PRISON POPULATION IN TWO,

"My experience on the state commission of prisons," says Mr. Richard Hurd of New York, "as well as my study of crime in other states, makes me confident that if wartime prohibition should be adopted the population of our prisons and jails would be cut in halves. As the total number of men in prison in the United States averages about 500,000, this would release 250,000 men for useful tasks. I would add that in making requirements for prison or jail accommodations in different counties the state commission of prisons takes official cognizance of whether a county is wet or dry, requiring only about half the accommodation for a dry county."

NO DRUNKENNESS.

In 119 drink-cure establishments in Germany, according to the Press Circular of International Abstaining Physicians, there are 26,316 drunkards receiving treatment—this in the country of beer where the beer advocates claim there is no drunkenness. Drunkenness is so much a public health question that over 200 government officials, leading physicians and social workers met recently in the fourth conference on the care of inebriates, it which the foregoing statistics were reported.

Germany's Treatment of the Workingman

By DANIEL LOUIS HANSON
Of The Vigilantes

Listen to this!

"I look after my dear working people as does a father his children. I build beautiful homes for them, pay widows' pensions; also pension for old age, sickness, loss of work and increases in families. I pay high wages, limit working hours, make loans easy to farmers. I have no slums as do America and Great Britain; I adjudicate all strikes. Mine is the land of the care-free and happy workingman."

That is the boiled-down-to-a-few-sentences propaganda that Germany covered the whole world with before the war with the ostensible purpose of weakening the morale of her enemies in the war she then was planning.

Great credit is due to Chairman Easley of the National Civic Federation in his published refutation of Germany's claims; just a few items from that valuable document will prove illuminating:

Widows' pensions in Germany during a series of years averaged 35 cents a week; sick pensions 95 cents a week; invalidity pension the same; orphans' pensions 37 cents a week. Wages averaged per day for carpenters $1.45; plumbers $1.25; railway employees—engineers and conductors on state railways, 70 cents; shop workers $1.02; male farm labor 72 cents; female farm labor 42 cents.

And this in a land where government statistics placed average cost of keeping families at over $500 per year. How did they make both ends meet? By working the whole family; every second woman in Germany worked during the before-the-war period—nearly 10,000,000 all told—and as the writer can testify from an extended trip throughout the empire, at the hardest labor.

As to hours: those of skilled labor ran about 58 per week, in textile and other lines from 12 to 14 per day. In 1911 the big stores of Berlin kept open till 9 at night and some hours on Sundays—though that last was remedied the following year. The smaller stores were even worse as to hours. A banking concern across from my hotel worked from 7 in the morning to 9 at night.

Regarding strikes which Germany claimed to always adjudicate; that year I saw the beginning of such a disturbance in the Moabit section of Berlin—and the end, for the authorities settled it in true Homestead fashion by shooting down the ringleaders. It lasted only two days and the press was allowed to say nothing about it. However, the Vorwaerts referred to it and was suppressed for three days as punishment. According to Mr. Easley's statistics, more than two-thirds the strikes in 1912 were unsuccessful and labor unions only allowed to meet under government supervision.

As to slums—whoever has smelled the horrible odors in Cologne—until 1914 the filthiest city in Europe in some of its residence sections, will laugh at Germany's claim to being slumless. And what about the foulness of Madgeburg and Dantzig? East London is Paradise alley by comparison. Berlin, the show city of the empire, looks like a town of palaces with the streets lined by stucco-fronted houses, but back of them—and this condition is much worse in Hamburg, Cologne, Frankfort and other large towns—stand the serried ranks of poverty's tenements, row upon row. Berlin has more one-room tenements than any other city in the world. Families of six and seven herding in one apartment and a hall bathroom doing service for half a dozen such families.

As to land distribution: over a third of Germany's farms are less than 1¼ acres in size; 22.6 per cent between 1¼ and 5 acres; 17.5 per cent, 5 to 12 acres; 18.6 per cent, 12 to 50 acres; while 28,566 junkers, the land barons, own nearly 25,000,000 acres, running from 250 to 500 acres and more each.

The above is only a small part of the picture which Germany actually presented to the world in the before-the-war period. Not of course what she claimed, but nevertheless collated from her official records—all except the filth of her large cities. It sounds inviting to an American workingman, does it not! And since then, of course, conditions have gotten even worse with women doing work that would stoop the shoulders of the strongest man.

Oppression of farmers, underpaid workers, enslavement of women and children industrially, shocking housing conditions, chronic underfeeding with resultant fearful infant mortality, counterfeit social insurance—are a few counts in the indictment made by Mr. Easley against Germany before the war.

German efficiency goes to appalling lengths, whether it is breeding German subjects from the enslaved young women of France and Belgium; or in issuing lying propaganda with which to break down the morale of the world's democracy. Nothing is too low, nothing too awful for the Potsdam spawn not to attempt.

Yet fools in America still mouth, "Peace, peace at any price."

Can a man make peace with hell!

It is now possible to make X-ray photographs of the interior of concrete masses, in order that their reenforcement may be inspected by means of a process perfected by a Swiss engineer.

AFTERWARDS

By SAMUEL VALENTINE COLE
of the Vigilantes.

I

When the war's last battle is done and the smoke has rolled away,
And the things that were hidden from sight stand forth in the glare of day;
When reason returns to its place, and you balance accounts again,
The loss and the gain together—pray, how will it seem to you then?

II

When everywhere ruin on ruin comes solemnly out to view,
And the nations of all the earth are pointing the finger at you;
When the vision of souls of the slain rises silent as mist of the sea,
And they ask you the cause of it all,—oh,
what will your answer be?

III

When the records no hand can erase, and the motives all hearts must reveal,
Go up to be judged at last in the Court of the Final Appeal,
Where only the truth will survive, and every falsehood and fraud
Must vanish like chaff in the flame,—then, what can you say to God?

AMERICA AND ENGLAND

By GIDEON HOE
of the Vigilantes.

Chester M. Wright, member of the New York Typographical union, and managing editor of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy, at present in Europe as one of the representatives of labor who went abroad recently to reassure our allies of our temper and sentiment in the war, has been writing some very interesting reports of his present experiences.

The following paragraphs are illuminating. They show the rapid growth of a better understanding and warmer fellowship between the English and American free peoples:

"The English look to America as to brothers; they look upon Americans with affection. And their admiration for our president knows no bounds. When they hear the splendid story of our trade union movement and its firm position they know that America will make good. Having made mistakes themselves, they know we have made them, too, and will make more. They understand us better than we have imagined.

"Here are two indications of the British regard for America. The American mission visited Warwick to be guests for a day at the historic castle, built in the thirteenth century. America is as mythical to the humble folk of Warwick town as Warwick is to most Americans. But the mayor ordered the American flag flown during our visit. It was the first time an American flag had ever flown to the breeze in Warwick. Last night I visited a theater—the Adelphia. A musical comedy was on the boards. Two-thirds of the chorus' costumes contained the American colors. There were Uncle Sams and American cowboys and Goddesses of Liberty. The theaters have been doing this since we came into the war. They overlook no way here of showing affection for America. America must overlook no way of making good!

"We were on the sea on April 6, the anniversary of our entry into the war. The event was celebrated, and those who spoke most feelingly for America were Canadian and British soldiers.

"The same love for democracy and freedom that fires America and thrills her people inspires and thrills the people of England. As many as must will die for the cause. The Hun can never win. Civilization must and will be saved. The free people of the world are bound in a new and indissoluble unity."

COMFORT TO GERMANY

By ROBERT ADGER BOWEN
of the Vigilantes.

It has been cause for amazement mingled with a sharp regret that, during the dark days of the German drive against the British lines in Flanders, following that upon the British lines in Picardy, there should have broken out in press and public alike that narrow and warped antipathy toward England, which if it ever was other than ungenerous and groundless, surely the debt we of America owe Great Britain today should have silenced into a humiliated but very sincere loyalty. On the contrary, there has been far too evident a disposition to attack England. Almost, it has seemed, the disposition in the present instance has been based on a fear that was akin to panic. The fighting quality of the British has been openly belittled, and this in the face of a splendid resistance against all but overwhelming odds that was being exemplified even as these false accusations were made. And this, it may be added, in the face of all that history teaches since the days of Alfred the Great to the present years of this most momentous of wars.

Such prejudice in us of Anglo-Saxon lineage is at any time unworthy of our own best traditions. Today it is contemptible. If the echo of it has reached Germany—and we may be sure it has—it is music to the ears of those who, however they may have looked upon England before this war, have learned to their cost that they can prevail against her only by force of superior numbers and the insensate power of modern artillery—whose hatred of her has become tinged by a deadly fear which is to be measured by the horrible price Germany is willing to pay for the hope of victory.

For those of us in this Anglo-Saxon country whose heritage is British to seek to defame England is truly a graceless act. It smacks not of superior merit upon our own part but of something very different. At least, let us reserve our caustic criticism of her until in this war we have done something that may be compared with what Britain has so nobly done.

Iceland Will Plant More Potatoes.

Iceland will make a new departure this year in the matter of using potato flour. Representatives of that government are sending out propaganda looking to the general and extensive planting of potatoes this year. Since the summer season is so short in Iceland and other Arctic countries, the raising of grain is not possible, but its climate is adapted to the raising of potatoes. Plans are being made for the installation of potato milling machinery, so that in a measure Iceland will in the future be a little more independent of outsiders for its farinaceous foods. Shortages of shipping, with a consequent curtailment of imports has made it impossible to maintain Iceland's wheat supplies.

At present, in the case of American soldiers who die in France, a cross marks the grave. At the transverse of the cross stands a metal shield with a design in low relief revealing a youth with broken sword, his face lifted to heaven. Round the shield runs the inscription: "He died to keep men free." Underneath are his name and regimental status. It is the intention of the Red Cross to remit this shield of glory to his relatives after the war, when some permanent form of remembrance shall have been devised by the war department.—Elizabeth Frazer, in the Saturday Evening Post.

There's the Grip That Will Not Slip

The Square Deal Lock double-grips the one-piece stay wires and the strand wires together so they cannot possibly slip. It locks every joint of every rod of Square Deal Fence so your stock can't spread the stays—

Holds Every Strand With An Iron Hand

Lets you forget you have stock full of life and energy on one side of the fence and fields of growing grain or hay on the other. Every Square Deal Lock is a lasting guarantee of fence satisfaction. There are no brittle welds to snap. No cumbersome knots to hold moisture, gather rust and weaken the wires. The simplest, strongest, safest lock ever used on a wire fence. See it before you buy another rod of fencing.

Square Deal Fence

The Wavy Strand Wires give Square Deal fencing elasticity—make it springy so it will quickly come back into shape after a sudden heavy strain—keep it tight and trim the whole year round. The waves in Square Deal fence are woven into the strand wires. They won't stretch out and let the fence sag between posts. They are like so many steel springs continually stretching the fence tightly, giving your fields a well-kept, prosperous appearance.

The One-Piece Stay Wires Prevent sagging, bagging or buckling to let the pigs under. They help support Square Deal fencing so it requires fewer posts, saving you money, time and labor.

The Girl With Thirteen Daddies.

Story written especially for The News by Local Talent and is worthy of your weekly attention. Back numbers supplied while they last.

CHAPTER II.

Within half an hour after her arrival, little Margaret had been adopted by the thirteen. This done, Deacon was sent after Mrs. Dalrymple, better known by Paradise Lost as Mrs. Dal, whose advice was deemed necessary in determining the course to be pursued in caring for the little girl.

"So your name is Margaret?" As he spoke, Perfessor lowered his voice as if he thought it improper to address the mite of humanity before him in any but the lowest tones.

"That's what Katie called me," replied the waif from her place of security on Dutch's lap.

"An' who's Katie?" interrupted Calamity.

"Calamity," said Perfessor sternly, "don't you shove no chips to the center till it's your turn to bet." Then he turned to the child once more. "What's your other name, little girl?"

Margaret looked up at Dutch apparently at a loss what to say; and seeing no answer there, shook her head.

"How old be you, little girl?" interrupted Calamity once more.

This question being in the regular order in which little children are catechized (name first, age second), Perfessor raised no objection.

The girl drew back closer to Dutch and answered by a second shake of the head.

"Who brought you here, little girl?" asked Perfessor, taking the lead once more.

"Billy," was the reply.

"Who's Billy?" "Where did he bring you from?" These questions came from Peddler and Red simultaneously. Each received for answer a blank stare.

Just then Deacon returned, bringing Mrs. Dal. The woman quickly sized up the situation.

"You chumps know about as much about caring for that little kid as a Digger Indian would running an auto on Broadway," said Mrs. Dal. "You've made a pretty mess of it—pesticating her with fool questions when anyone but thirteen idiots would see that she is starving to death."

"WHAT!" (An agonized chorus.)

"There you go again," exclaimed Mrs. Dal contemptuously. "You dolts don't think of anything but your stomachs. Can't you see? Are you so blind that you can't see that she is starving for love. Give her what she's honing for and you'll loosen her little tongue. Then she'll tell you more about herself in a minute than you can pump out of her in a month of idiotic questioning. Come here, little one."

The last was addressed to the child, who slid from Dutch's lap and went to the speaker. The woman's mother nature asserted itself. She gathered the forlorn stray into her arms, but said not a word. Love is the great Free Masonry of God, meant to bind humanity into a common brotherhood; but it has no fixed signs of recognition nor grips nor passwords. Professions of love are hollow—just make one of the Grand Master's innumerable hailing signs of love, as Mrs. Dal did. The other will understand, as the girl did. A loving woman can speak the language of love with her arms, as Mrs. Dal did; and the child understood. She cuddled up to her protector with a sigh of relief and lay there contented and happy, feeding her starved little soul. The thirteen looked on in silence exchanging nods of approval with one another and regarding Mrs. Dal reverently.

"Boys," said Mrs. Dal in tones they rarely heard coming from her, "you know I say what I please about you—to your faces, too; and what I say isn't always complimentary, either. That's because I like you. You're a bad lot at times. I know it and you can't deny it. You don't know any better. Boys, you are mighty good, too; and I'm not going to ask you to be kind to this poor child. Don't I know you? Why, God bless you! you couldn't be anything else if you tried. Little girl, you're lucky—you've got thirteen daddies, each of them with a heart as big as his feet and with red blood enough in him to thaw out the north pole."

"Katie had a daddy," exclaimed Margaret suddenly, with open-eyed sincerity.

"She did," exclaimed Mrs. Dal with well counterfeited surprise, "and I'll bet he was good to her."

"Uh-huh!" with a dozen confirmatory nods. "He brought her lots of candy, too."

(Exit Fiddler.)

As Mrs. Dal had said, the child's tongue was loosened; but little could be learned of her past although artfully encouraged to talk by the good woman. She told them what they already knew and hardly anything more: that there were Ole Moll, whom she hated; Katie, whom she loved; and Billie, who brought her "Oh! ever so far." Her full name, her age, her relatives (if any) and whence she came could not be learned.

Jedge expressed the sentiments of his partners: "We all don't car whar the pore little maverick pastoored 'r who rode herd on her: she's safe in our corral now an' bars our brand."

"Boys," said Mrs. Dal, "I'm going to help you care for this little kid. You're all right, but she needs a woman to look after her." Then she added quickly: "That is, if you don't insult me by offering to pay me."

Canuck suddenly became inspired. "Pardners," he said, springing to his feet and gesticulating wildly as he spoke, "we all don't want to start Mrs. Dal buckin': we need her. A gal's a hard thing fer men to handle—thar too skittish fer"—

"Grown up gals is skittisher," interrupted Deacon.

"They know more," quickly added Mrs. Dal.

Deacon colored at the roar of laughter that followed.

"Pardners," resumed Canuck, "that thar little lady o' our'n has only got one name—Margert. That's a mighty nice name, but she's a mighty nice kid. She's too nice to hit the trail with but one name. Now, pardners, how would Margert Dalrymple sound to you all?"

"Good boy!" yelled Deacon arising and clapping Canuck enthusiastically on a shoulder. "All who jine me in trailin' along after Canuck stampede to your feet."

"No gun play," cautioned Peddler.

The vote was unanimous and enthusiastic.

"Boys," said Mrs. Dal, beaming her pleasure, "if I wanted pay for helping take care of what Canuck called the 'little lady,' you could not do more than you have done."

Never were twelve people in a more amiable state, Canuck in particular. He had led in naming the child and in expressing the esteem of the men for Mrs. Dal; and the good woman, in turn, had adopted his term, the "little lady," and he was confident it would cling to the girl, and he was not mistaken.

(Enter Fiddler bearing a package.)

"What you got, Fiddler?" inquired Mrs. Dal.

"Candy," replied Fiddler proudly, looking about him with the air of a man who challenges anyone to assert that he has not done the right thing. He was the object of a circle of admiring glances, in which all but Canuck joined. The latter felt that the room was in danger of becoming overcrowded with distinguished men.

"Oh, dear! Oh, dear!" and the woman laughed until the tears rolled down her cheeks, while Fiddler looked on foolishly. "What did you get such a little bit for? Why didn't you get enough for the kid to begin on?"

"Thar's ten pounds thar," protested Peddler.

"Only ten pounds!" shrieked Mrs. Dal. "Oh, my! Oh, dear! You foolish fellow, why didn't you get a freight wagon?"

(Canuck secretly elated.)

Perfessor brought the candy episode to an end. "Pardners, we all will back any play Mrs. Dal makes in carin' fer our little lady, but she oughtta have help. You know the old sayin', 'What's ev'rybody's bizness is somebody's bizness.' I'm the one to help Mrs. Dal, fer I had a sister an' am tharfore acquainted with gal's ways."

"Huh!" grunted Fish Hook, "she was eighteen yars older'n you, an' was married before you was big 'nuff to fall out o' bed."

"I might play the violin fer her," ventured Fiddler before Perfessor could reply to Fish Hook.

"Fiddler," said Calamity ironically, "I haven't observed that our little lady is unfortunit 'nuff to be deef. If she was, she might enjoy seein' you play. Them facial contortions o' your'n is shore amoosin'. I'm old an' tough an' can stand fer most anything from a buckin' broncho to a galoot holdin' out kyards 'r runnin' in a cold deck; but that thar fiddlin' o' your'n is the only thing that makes me study on the longest and painfulest way o' committin' murder."

"Boys, boys," admonished Mrs. Dal, "do you think I've nothing to do but sit here and hear you wrangle? Why, this little lady on my lap should have been in bed an hour ago. When you boys get so you can't abuse one another, I'll become alarmed. Calamity and Fish Hook, there, are the two most amiable grouches I ever saw; and the rest of you are close seconds to them. Either of them would fight to the death for any one of the others, and then die railing at the one he had saved. Don't add lying to the rest of your sins, Calamity and Fish Hook, by denying what I say; and the others are just as inconsistent as you are. Oh! I know you, boys. But I wouldn't for all the world have you anything else than what you are. You're ALL RIGHT! Now, little girl, bid your daddies good night."

Mrs. Dal placed Margaret upon the floor. The child gazed into faces softened by love and inviting confidence. She extended her wasted arms toward the thirteen with a look of pathetic appeal that none of them ever forgot and had occasion to remember afterwards.

"You'll be good to me—won't you, daddies?"

A Sluggish Liver Needs Attention

An Inactive Liver Affects the Kidneys and Deranges the Stomach and Bowels.

Too much stress can not be placed on the necessity of keeping the liver in good condition; upon it the health of the body largely depends. When the liver becomes sluggish, the kidneys are overworked, the digestive fluids are not properly secreted and a languid, bilious, nervous or sick headachy condition results. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body. Constipation, bloating, dizziness, belching, pain or soreness in the right side, impaired vision and, in fact, most diseases have their origin in an inactive liver. An inactive liver is easily corrected if taken in time, but the only way to doctor is to get at the cause. Glando Tonic is a liver remedy that has a splendid record for renewing activity, removing the poisons and building up the system. For bilious attacks, it can not be beaten. Mothers who are nursing a baby should take Glando Tonic to keep the bowels well regulated. This will keep baby's bowels in a good condition. Glando Tonic is a three-in-one treatment that brings results. A trial will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials will be furnished upon request. Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be obtained by sending 50c direct to the Grand-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

VOL. XXXII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JULY 4 1918 NO. 27

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 16.
DEAR PARENTS:—

Your most welcome letter received. This is Sunday morning, and a fine one, too. Most of the boys are out at work; but as I am horse shoer, I get Saturdays and Sundays off. We have about 8,000 horses and mules now on the reservation. It sure takes some feed.

Some of the boys are practicing baseball. The Remount team is going to play the Aviation team here this afternoon. We have a fine athletic field. The Y. M. C. A is sure a great thing in the camps.

I am glad that Earl and Levon are doing well. I wish them the best of luck.

Well, mother dear, when I come come out of the army, I will no doubt be an expert at horse shoeing, as a fellow is taught to do it just right. Then I can make money, too.

Plums and peaches have been ripe here for a long time and they are about all gone now. We have plenty to eat all of the time. Don't you worry abont that at all.

I do wish I could be with Brother Byron, but maybe it is God's will the way it is.

Dear mother I am putting in for a furlough the first of July. Karl left for Hicksville last night. He will come to see you.

Your Loving Son,
DEWEY MILLER.

HOTEL DE DUGOUT,
SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE,
April 30, 1918.
DEAR SISTER AND ALL:—

Have received three or four letters from you, and was sure glad to know that you are still among the living. Am well and O. K., and hope you are the same. Just got through writing a long letter to pa.

It is 2 o'clock in the morning here and about 8 o'clock by your time. So I suppose you are about ready to go to bed. I wish I was there to go to bed also. I have seen no good bed with springs on for a long time—only boards and strgw and sometimes a little mud mixed in, but can't say I slept cold any time so far.

Was over to the Y. M. C. A. last evening; and, on the wav over, I saw a big bunch of fellows standing around. So I hurried to see what the excitement was. When I got there, there were two REAL AMERICAN GIRLS. Say, but they looked good. They sang at the Y. in the evening for the boys, and had a eood time.

Life is not so bad on the front—only at times, when the Boches think we are asleep; and then we have to let them know we are still around and show them we can shoot and hard and fast as they can.

Have changed quite a bit since you saw me last. I weighed only 170 then, but now weigh around 200 and getting fatter every day. So you know we are not starving; but candy and chocolate, which we all crave, are hard to get here; but we get white sugar and white bread nearly every meal. Sometimes we get hard tack, when the rations are late getting to us.

It will be nine months next Sunday since I left home. It does not seem that long. I have traveled quite a few miles in that time; and expect to travel that many more and some besides, if nothing happens.

We are having fine weather—nice and warm. When not on duty, we go swimming in the evening in a stone quarry just a few steps from our position. We take a bath every time we get a chance to try and get rid of the crumbs, but it is impossible to keep from getting them all of the time. We get them. Then boil up and get rid of them for a few days. Then have to do the same thing over again. It is a great life, if you don't weaken; but I think I have weakened (Ha! ha!). But I am willing to stick it out until I can help lick the kaiser and pass review in Berlin.

Your Brother,
ARTHUR D. LONG.

The foregoing letter was written to Mrs. Eva Miller, residing a mile west of town.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., June 20.
EDITOR NEWS:—

Will now try and give you a few minutes describing my trip. Left Chicago Saturday morning and had a very pleasant trip. Had as a traveling companion a former graduate of Moody Bible institute. He told me of son e of the "A" grades he used to get, and I confessed to some of the "F's" I received when at Moody. However, I found that he did not know everything before we reached our destination. We were riding along looking at the crops, and he said, "They raise lots of potatoes in this country; and I, who claim to be somewhat of a farmer myself, said: "Man, they're not potatoes. That's a bean field." So we had our discussion and called the brakeman to settle it; and he, with a smile, said: "Men, you are both wrong. That is a cotton field." We looked at each other, but said nothing.

San Antonio is a nice place—seductive, charming, ever old but always new; the city of the greatest historic import of any in the union; called the Sunset city, because of the golden splendor of her skies and climate. It is probably the most interesting of all the southern cities and of the American continent. The city limits, as defined by charter, are 36 square miles in extent. This space is embraced in a circle, whose diameter is 6 miles. Its center is at old San Pedro cathedral, one of the interesting and historic buildings, whose twin towers and moresque cupola are conspicuous and noteworthy objects, her elevation ranging from over 600 to nearly 800 feet above the sea level.

San Antonio extracts her water supply from several hundred artesian wells having depths ranging from 600 to over 800 feet. Has a very low death rate. There is no spot on earth where there are more objects of historic merit. One spot alone holds the distinction of being the place where the sublimest examples of valor ever enacted were given as an example to all posterity. All of them deserve perpetuation as monuments. But the most conspicuous of them all is what is known as the Alamo, which is the old Franciscan mission of San Antonio de Valero. There are others, such as Mission Conception, built in 1713; Mission San Jose, in 1720; Mission San Juan, in 1731. It is a military center—Camp Travis, Fort Sam Houston, Kelly field, Leon springs; also ostrich and alligator farms. Soldiers abound in and around San Antonio.

On Wednesday evening, the assistant dean called me into his office and asked me to talk to the soldiers. I tried to get out of it, saying there were other men better qualified; but he said I was the man. I talked to them, and want to say that the response from the soldiers increased my enthusiasm and broadened my vision in the possibility of Christian service. On last evening, I was in one of the camps and they wanted someone to lead the singing and they said: "Let the Moody man do it." They seem to think that a Moody man can do anything. I can imagine the smile of Dr. Towner, our musical director, if he should happen to see these lines. However, I am grateful to him for some of the things he used to tell me to do, and I trembling would make such a mess of it before the choir. In time of need, his instructions came back to me. At any rate, I got by. That is not the way the English teacher, Miss Williams, would say it; but that's my sentiments.

I am glad for the training I had with the Newlin evangelistic party; and will thank God as long as I live for the privilege of fourteen months in the Moody Bible institute—not only for the course of instruction, which can not be duplicated, but for the lives of the faculty and student body, the fellowship of some of the classes, especially the English class and the life of our teacher, Miss Williams, and the words of encouragement from some of the faculty. I am sure I will be a better man.

I saw Morris Curie yerterday. He is in camp right across the road from the Y. M. C. A. training school. Sure was glad to see him. He is looking fine.

We had roasting ears for dinner today. This is a fine country and the crops are good. However, the sun is very warm. In other words, it is hot.

When we go out in the morning and afternoon in our calisthenics, you see 128 men of all professions lined up for athletics, and we have some exciting times. Everyone of them is enthusiastic and willing to go over the top for God and country.

Yours sincerely.
O. E. GINTHER.

To the American People!

Since President Wilson appointed the War Council, May 10, 1917, Americans have contributed more than one hundred million dollars to the Red Cross. Since that date also more than twenty-two million Americans have signified their desire to aid in the Red Cross work by becoming members. Virtually all of the first fund has now been appropriated, and most of it actually disbursed in such ways as the war council has deemed most effective in maintaining the morale of the armies of our allies, in humanitarian work among the civilian war victims, and in promoting the welfare of the American soldiers and soldiers at home and abroad. To do this we must give until it hurts, and to do that we must save.

2. To form organizations in the various townships of DeKalb county for the purpose of cultivating a deeper spirit of patriotism and to discourage and prevent disloyalty.

A Word to Coal Buyers.

The Government through the fuel administration has advised everybody to lay in their coal as much as possible during the spring and summer months. The dealers also are urged to lay in their supply now.

The reason for this is, the government will need the coal as soon as cold weather sets in more than now and the car supply will be short, therefore they ask domestic consumers to buy now. This we are doing and we hope to continue doing. But we must have our coal bills paid promptly as most of this coal is paid for before we unload it and it takes money to buy coal.

We ask you to give this your attention us we will have to insist that all back bills are paid at once as coal is CASH with us. We have kept St. Joe in coal during the worst coal famine the country has ever known and we will try to keep on doing so, but we must have your co-operation, we mean PAY UP.

Let every citizen do his duty—We are doing ours.

DRAFT NUMBERS ARE ALL DRAWN AT WASHINGTON

Figures Determine How Youths of Military Age Are to Be Called to the Colors.

First Capsule, 246, Drawn by Secretary Baker, and the Rest Proceeds in Order—How New Registrants Will Be Placed.

Washington.—The drawing of numbers to determine the order in which youths of the classes of 1918 will be called into military service was conducted here June 27 with much the same ceremony as marked the great drawing of a year ago.

The figures show you at a glance in what order your number is drawn. The registration numbers—"your number" comes first. The figure accompanying it tells the order in which it was drawn and therefore the order in which you will be called for service.

All youths whose numbers were drawn will be assigned to the various five classes on the basis of information furnished in the questionnaire now being mailed out.

New registrants will be placed at the foot of the list in each class in the order their numbers are drawn.

Indications are that all new registrants placed in Class 1 will be called before the end of the year and that only a few months will elapse before those whose numbers are drawn last will be called.

Steady Hand Imperative.

A steady hand in military affairs is more requisite than in peace, because an error committed in war may prove irremediable.—Bacon.

FEEDING SOLDIERS ON THE TRANSPORTS

MESS OFFICER OF THE VESSEL MUST PROVIDE 210,000 MEALS AT SEA.

SOME OF THE 180 VARIETIES

Money Instead of Merchandise Should Be Sent to the Troops in France—Dental Corps Can Care for 5,000,000 Men.

An account of how soldiers are fed at sea is given in the daily newspaper published on a transport:

"Outside of providing 210,000 meals at sea, the mess officer of the ship has very little to do. Very little.

"He is only called upon to provide, by the regulations, 180 different varieties of food. That's all. Every try to order 180 different things to eat? Yet this is the authentic list.

"The food needed to feed several thousand men at sea ranges beyond the glutton's dreams. You get the answer in the ship down below the water line, where 7,200 loaves of bread have been baked in one day, and where you stumble over every variety, from 60,000 pounds of beef to 132,000 eggs, or a compartment of brick ice cream in a ten-degree-above-zero vault.

"And if this doesn't suit, you can bump along into 49,324 pounds of potatoes, 7,100 pounds of ham and bacon, 7,800 pounds of butter, 9,200 pounds of sugar, and 61,500 pounds of flour.

"If you can't get a meal out of this you can fall back on 4,600 pounds of sausage, 3,000 pounds of sauerkraut, 26,000 pounds of apples, 19,800 pounds of oranges, and 4,200 pounds of onions. And this leaves out 1,000 pounds of jam and 9,400 pounds of lima and navy beans."

The original order that the approval of a regimental or higher commander was necessary before packages might be sent to members of the expeditionary forces has been modified so officers with the rank of major and higher may approve shipments. The approval of a company commander is not sufficient.

The question of the shipment of parcels to France first came to the attention of the war department when the commanding general of the expeditionary forces cabled that congestion of such articles had reached such a point that French railroads were unable to handle the load. A board appointed by the secretary of war and the postmaster general examined 5,000 sacks of parcel-post mail, and found that the articles being sent not only, in the main, were absolutely unnecessary, but undesirable. The investigation showed that the amount of such mail had reached a total of 500,000 pounds a week, and was steadily increasing.

Relatives and friends, according to a recent statement by the war department, will find they often can do a greater service to soldiers by sending them money for the purchase of articles. Tobacco is now being supplied as part of the army rations, and merchandise of nearly all kinds may now be purchased in France through the huge general store established by the quartermaster corps at lower prices than charged by retailers here.

The dental requirements of an army of more than 5,000,000 men can now be met by the present force of the dental corps of the United States army. Examinations have been closed and no further additions will be made to the corps for some time. The number of dental officers has expanded since war was declared from 58 to 5,810. Commissions were offered to 5,467 dentists in all parts of the country, and all but 271 were accepted.

The average number of tooth fillings in the army ranges from 225,000 to 250,000 a month. Special dental infirmaries have been established in the camps and cantonments, to which newly inducted soldiers are sent for examination shortly after arrival in the camps.

A school for dental instruction has been established, where 85 officers are assigned each month to take the two months' course.

The box-car situation is better at present than it has been at any time during the last three years, according to advice received by the department of agriculture from the railroad administration.

On May 1 box cars began to move into wheat territory, and wheat-carrying roads are expected to have on their lines more than the normal amount of cars owned by them. Cars are being parked in wheat-loading territory, which was impossible last year. The railroad administration will continue to move cars into wheat districts as long as there is any indication that additional cars will be needed.

Special attention is being given by the medical department of the army in all camps to cleaning up spots where mosquitoes and flies breed. In some cases it has been necessary to dig channels in streams, drain swamps, and put in elaborate ditching systems to clean up stagnant pools and streams. In cases where it has been impossible or impracticable to drain swamps and do similar work, there has been installed a system for keeping slow-moving streams and still bodies of water covered with oil. At all points within the camp where there is the slightest possibility of mosquitoes or flies breeding daily spraying of oil is done.

Arrangements have been completed with the federal public health service to carry out a similar program in the territories adjacent to the camps. The health service has agreed to fill bogs, open streams, and drain swamps, and continue the oil spraying for a distance of 1 mile around each camp.

Special precautions have been taken to prevent the spread of disease by flies. Instructions were given on the disposal of materials that were likely to become breeding spots. Arrangements were made to protect all food from flies. With this end in view, all buildings in which food is prepared or stored were screened. Entrances to the buildings have been vestibuled. An average of 6,000 flytraps have been placed in each camp. More than 22,700,000 square feet of screening has been placed in all camps.

To assist in meeting the present shortage in unskilled labor restrictions have been temporarily removed on the importation of Mexican labor to be used in certain occupations. This step supplements the order by which the department of labor has arranged to bring Porto Rican laborers into this country for work on government contracts. It is estimated that 75,000 islanders can be brought in while transportation is available.

New regulations on the subject of Mexican labor contain rigid provisions to prevent any attempt at exploitation on the part of prospective employers. Wage rates current for similar labor in the localities in which the admitted alien is to be employed are assured, as well as good housing and sanitation conditions.

The quartermaster's department is now supplying gas-proof food containers to the soldiers in the zone of operations in France. These containers prevent seepage of gas into the containers and guard against contamination of the food. The men carry their emergency rations in the containers and all food brought up to the trenches is carried in the new tins.

After the food is packed in the containers they are hermetically sealed. It is planned to use paraffin for sealing, as it settles in the crevices in such a way that it must be cut before the lids can be taken off. It can be applied by running the containers through a paraffin bath.

Because the supply of tin is limited and there may not be enough to supply the needs of the army the quartermasters' department is experimenting with the wax paper box. Tests made show that these boxes meet all conditions satisfactorily. The tins and boxes both are vermin and water proof.

There are now 42 theaters, which cost over $500,000, in operation in camps and cantonments throughout the country. Nearly 100 vaudeville acts have been brought from the large circuits to play in these theaters only; about 50 acts have been secured from Chautauqua and lyceum bureaus; 35 comedy companies are playing in these theaters exclusively. Some of these are original New York companies, playing the summer season only, with expenses reduced about two-thirds.

The camps have been divided into two circuits. In one the Liberty theaters seat 3,000, in the other the houses are smaller, having a capacity of about 1,000 each. It takes from 14 to 25 weeks for a production to be staged in each house of either circuit.

"Smileage" books, sold throughout the country under the direction of the commission on training camp activities, contain coupons good for admission to all attractions in camp theaters.

Forty-six societies representing 22 nationalities of foreign-born citizens are planning monster celebrations, pageants, parades and speech-making in the principal cities of the United States for July 4. Represented in the groups are Armenians, Assyrians, Belgians, Chinese, Czecho-Slavs, Danes, Dutch, Finns, French, French-Canadians, Germans, Greeks, Hungarians, Italians, Japanese, Lithuanians, Norwegians, Poles, Portuguese, Russians, Roumanians, South Slavs, Swedes and Swiss. In May these societies appealed to President Wilson to issue a proclamation calling upon all native Americans to unite with the foreign-born in observing the national holiday, and plans for the many celebrations developed after the proclamation was issued.

Three temporary office buildings, providing working space for 6,250 persons, have been built in ten weeks in Washington, D. C., by the construction division of the army, without the employment of a contractor. One, a three-story structure, 491 feet long, 260 feet wide, with a floor space of 270,000 square feet, was ready for occupancy 24 days after the first spadeful of earth was turned.

Woman stenographers and typists are now being enrolled in the naval reserve as yeomen.

LESSON FOR JULY 7

BEGINNING THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:13-34.

GOLDEN TEXT—Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.—Revelation 22:17.

DEVOTIONAL READING—John 15:4-16.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Acts 2:37-47; 8:26-40; Romans 5:1-11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Loving and trusting Jesus.—John 1:35-51.

MEMORY VERSE—We love because he first loved us.—1 John 4:19.

I. How Lydia Began the Christian Life (vv. 13-15).

Lydia was the first convert to Christ in Europe. Hers was a typical conversion. Note the steps therein:

1. Attendance at the place of prayer (v. 13).

The accustomed place here was at the river side. The accustomed place today is in church. God can and does save men and women without any seeming connection with places of established worship, but he appears to most people at such places. The very fact that he has established and sustains churches here and there is an urgent call to all men and women to place themselves in the way of salvation. While no one can save himself, yet all can put themselves in the way of salvation by attending church, reading the Bible, etc.

2. Listening to the preaching of the Word of God (vv. 13, 14).

Paul took advantage of the opportunity which was given him by the assemblage of this group of devoted women to preach Christ to them. He was alert for and prized highly the opportunity to tell the people about Christ. He knew also how perilous it was to neglect to witness for Christ at a time when unsaved people are together. The opportunity is God's call to preach Christ.

3. Her heart was opened by the Lord (v. 14).

The individual may place himself in the way of salvation by coming near to the means of grace, and the preacher may preach the Word of God, but there is no hope of salvation until the heart is opened by the Lord (John 6:44, 45). While the salvation of every one is dependent upon this sovereign act of the Lord, yet we can be sure that he is willing at all times to do this for those who, like Lydia, place themselves in the way of his saving grace.

4. She was baptized. (v. 15).

This ordinance follows belief in Christ. The invariable rule in the early church was for believers to be baptized. While there is no salvation in the water of baptism, yet hearty obedience should be rendered in this respect (Acts 2:38-41; 8:12; Mark 16:16). Lydia brought her household to Christ. This is as it should be. She showed signs of the new life, in that she expressed gratitude toward those who had been instrumental in her conversion (v. 15) by constraining them to share the hospitality of her home.

II. How the Philippian Jailer Began the Christian Life (vv. 25-34).

1. The occasion (vv. 25, 26).

The casting out of the spirit of divination from the damsel landed Paul and Silas in prison. The pain of bleeding backs, and of feet in stocks, kept them from sleeping; but not from praying and singing. The Lord heard their prayers and sent an earthquake which shook the jail, opened the doors of the prison, and loosed the bonds from the prisoners' hands.

2. The method (vv. 27-34).

(1) Visitation of the supernatural (vv. 27-29). The jailer was awakened from his sleep by the earthquake. This earthquake was unusual in that it loosed the bonds from the prisoners' hands. In his desperation the jailer was about to commit suicide. This was averted by Paul's assurance that all were safe. The fact that the doors were opened and the prisoners free and yet no one escaped, showed him that something unusual had occurred. Therefore, he came trembling and prostrated himself before Paul and Silas.

(2) The great question (v. 30). In the presence of the supernatural he cried out, "What must I do to be saved?" One's salvation is not far off when he utters this cry with sincerity.

(3) The vital answer (vv. 31, 32).

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," is the only way to be saved. (Acts 4:12). Though the way of salvation is restricted, it is simple and easy. No one who has believed on Christ has failed to receive it. The jailer's faith was not blind faith, for they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. They were taught the meaning of belief in Christ.

(4) The evidence of a transformed life (vv. 33, 34).

(a) He was baptized (v. 33). As soon as one believes on Christ he wants to be baptized.

(b) He tenderly washed the stripes of Paul and Silas, showing that he was no longer the brutal jailer (v. 34).

(c) He rejoiced (v. 34). The one who really accepts Christ is filled with joy.

(d) A transformed home (v. 34). He believed on Christ and was baptized, and his household.

"OVER THE TOP"

By An American Soldier Who Went

Arthur Guy Empey

Machine Gunner, Serving in France

Copyright 1917, by Arthur Guy Empey

WAR IS CRUMBLING THE WALL OF CASTE THAT HAS STOOD SO LONG IN BRITISH ARMY.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Chaplain distinguishes himself by rescuing wounded men under hot fire. With pick and shovel Empey has experience as a trench digger in No Man's Land. Exciting experience on listening post detail. Exciting work on observation post duty. Back in rest billets Empey writes and stages a successful play.

The game is honest and quite enjoyable. Sometimes you have fourteen numbers on your card covered and you are waiting for the fifteenth to be called. In an imploring voice you call out, "Come on, Watkins, chum, I'm sweating on 'Kelly's Eye.'"

Watkins generally replies, "Well, keep out of a draft, you'll catch cold."

Another game is "Pontoon," played with cards; it is the same as our "Black Jack," or "Twenty-one."

A card game called "Brag" is also popular. Using a casino deck, the dealer deals each player three cards. It is similar to our poker, except for the fact that you only use three cards and cannot draw. The deck is never shuffled until a man shows three of a kind or a "prile" as it is called. The value of the hands are, high card, a pair, a run, a flush or three of a kind or "prile." The limit is generally a penny, so it is hard to win a fortune.

The next in popularity is a card game called "Nap." It is well named. Every time I played it I went to sleep.

Whist and solo whist are played by the highbrows of the company.

When the gamblers tire of all other games they try "Banker and Broker."

I spent a week trying to teach some of the Tommies how to play poker, but because I won thirty-five francs they declared that they didn't "fawney" the game.

Tommy plays few card games; the general run never heard of poker, euchre, seven up, or pinochle. They have a game similar to pinochle called "Royal Bezique," but few know how to play it.

Generally there are two decks of cards in a section, and in a short time they are so dog-eared and greasy, you can hardly tell the ace of spades from the ace of hearts. The owners of these decks sometimes condescend to lend them after much coaxing.

So you see, Mr. Atkins has his fun mixed in with his hardships and, contrary to popular belief, the rank and file of the British army in the trenches is one big happy family. Now in Virginia, at school, I was fed on old McGuffy's primary reader, which gave me an opinion of an Englishman about equal to a '76 Minute Man's backed up by a Sinn Feiner's. But I found Tommy to be the best of mates and a gentleman through and through. He never thinks of knocking his officers. If one makes a costly mistake and Tommy pays with his blood, there is no general condemnation of the officer. He is just pitied. It is exactly the same as it was with the Light Brigade at Balaclava, to say nothing of Gallipoli, Neuve Chapelle and Loos. Personally I remember a little incident where twenty of us were sent on a trench raid, only two of us returning, but I will tell this story later on.

I said it was a big happy family, and so it is, but as in all happy families, there are servants, so in the British army there are also servants, officers' servants, or "O. S." as they are termed. In the American army the common name for them is "dog robbers." From a controversy in the English papers, Winston Churchill made the statement, as far as I can remember, that the officers' servants in the British forces totaled nearly two hundred thousand. He claimed that this removed two hundred thousand exceptionally good and well-trained fighters from the actual firing line, claiming that the officers, when selecting a man for servant's duty, generally picked the man who had been out the longest and knew the ropes.

But from my observation I find that a large percentage of the servants do go over the top, but behind the lines they very seldom engage in digging parties, fatigues, parades or drills. This work is as necessary as actually engaging in an attack, therefore I think it would be safe to say that the all-round work of the two hundred thousand is about equal to fifty thousand men who are on straight military duties. In numerous instances, officers' servants hold the rank of lance-corporals and they assume the same duties and authority of a butler, the one stripe giving him precedence over the other servants.

There are lots of amusing stories told of "O. S."

One day one of our majors went into the servants' billet and commenced "blinding" at them, saying that his horse had no straw and that he personally knew that straw had been issued for this purpose. He called the lance-corporal to account. The corporal answered, "Blime me, sir, the straw was issued, but there wasn't enough left over from the servants' beds; in fact, we had to use some of the 'ay to 'elp out, sir."

It is needless to say that the servants dispensed with their soft beds that particular night.

Nevertheless it is not the fault of the individual officer, it is just the survival of a quaint old English custom. You know an Englishman cannot be changed in a day.

But the average English officer is a good sport. He will sit on a fire step and listen respectfully to Private Jones' theory of the way the war should be conducted. This war is gradually crumbling the once insurmountable wall of caste.

You would be convinced of this if you could see King George go among his men on an inspecting tour under fire, or pause before a little wooden cross in some shell-tossed field with tears in his eyes as he reads the inscription. And a little later perhaps bend over a wounded man on a stretcher, patting him on the head.

Meeting a Gas and Infantry Attack.

More than once in a hospital I have seen a titled Red Cross nurse fetching and carrying for a wounded soldier, perhaps the one who in civil life delivered the coal at her back door. Today she does not shrink from lighting his fag or even washing his grimy body.

Tommy admires Albert of Belgium because he is not a pusher of men; he leads them. With him it's not a case of "take that trench," it is "come on and we will take it."

It is amusing to notice the different characteristics of the Irish, Scotch and English soldiers. The Irish and Scotch are very impetuous, especially when it comes to bayonet fighting, while the Englishman, though a trifle slower, thoroughly does his bit; he is more methodical and has the grip of a bulldog on a captured position. He is slower to think; that is the reason why he never knows when he is licked.

Twenty minutes before going over the top the English Tommy will sit on the fire step and thoroughly examine the mechanism of his rifle to see that it is in working order and will fire properly. After this examination he is satisfied and ready to meet the Boches.

But the Irishman or Scotchman sits on the fire step, his rifle with bayonet fixed between his knees, the butt of which perhaps is sinking into the mud—the bolt couldn't be opened with a team of horses it is so rusty—but he spits on his sleeve and slowly polishes his bayonet; when this is done he also is ready to argue with Fritz.

It is not necessary to mention the colonials (the Canadians, Australians and New Zealanders), the whole world knows what they have done for England.

The Australian and New Zealander is termed the "Anzac," taking the name from the first letters of their official designation, Australian and New Zealand army corps.

Tommy divides the German army into three classes according to their fighting abilities. They rank as follows: Prussians, Bavarians and Saxons.

When up against a Prussian regiment it is a case of keep your napper below the parapet and duck. A bang-bang all the time and a war is on. The Bavarians are little better, but the Saxons are fairly good sports and are willing occasionally to behave as gentlemen and take it easy, but you cannot trust any of them overlong.

At one point of the line the trenches were about thirty-two yards apart. This sounds horrible, but in fact it was easy, because neither side could shell the enemy's front-line trench for fear shells would drop into their own. This eliminated artillery fire.

In these trenches when up against the Prussians and Bavarians, Tommy had a hot time of it, but when the Saxons "took over" it was a picnic; they would yell across that they were Saxons and would not fire. Both sides would sit on the parapet and carry on a conversation. This generally consisted of Tommy telling them how much he loved the kaiser, while the Saxons informed Tommy that King George was a particular friend of theirs and hoped that he was doing nicely.

When the Saxons were to be relieved by Prussians or Bavarians, they would yell this information across No Man's Land and Tommy would immediately tumble into his trench and keep his head down.

If an English regiment was to be relieved by the wild Irish, Tommy would tell the Saxons, and immediately a volley of "Donner und Blitzens" could be heard and it was Fritz's turn to get a crick in his back from stooping, and the people in Berlin would close their windows.

Usually when an Irishman takes over a trench, just before "stand down" in the morning, he sticks his rifle over the top, aimed in the direction of Berlin, and engages in what is known as the "mad minute." This consists of firing fifteen shots in a minute. He is not aiming at anything in particular—just sends over each shot with a prayer, hoping that one of his strays will get some poor unsuspecting Fritz in the napper hundreds of yards behind the lines. It generally does; that's the reason the Boches hate the man from Erin's isle.

The Saxons, though better than the Prussians and Bavarians, have a nasty trait of treachery in their makeup.

Empey, questioning a German prisoner, finds he's from New York. The interesting interview is related in the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Theory May Yet Be Proved.

According to one theory, primitive man came to America by a land bridge from the tablelands of Asia, in search of new hunting grounds. "It is not to be inferred," says Professor Wissler "that the new world native is a direct descendant of the present Asiatic Mongolian, for the differentiation is evidently remote." Is it not possible we shall find that it was the American type that diverged into strains that passed to Asia?—Chicago Examiner.

Indiana News Tersely Told

Hammond.—Exoneration of all connected with the operation of the trains in the Ivanhoe circus train wreck with the exception of Engineer Alonzo Sargent of the deadhead equipment special, who slept at the throttle, resulted when the interstate commerce commission and the public service commission of Indiana conducted a joint hearing behind closed doors in the courthouse at Hammond. Only commissioners and the attorneys for the Michigan Central railroad were permitted to attend the investigation. After working without sleep for 48 hours, Ed Ballard, general manager of the Hagenbeck-Wallace circus gave out his check on the dead, dying and missing. He declares the total is 89. Forty-four bodies in all, were burned beyond recognition.

Seymour.—Farmers in Jackson county are protesting against the prices for threshing which have been approved by a special committee acting under the authority of the state food administration. The threshermen, under the agreement, are permitted to charge 8 cents a bushel for wheat, 5 cents for oats and 10 cents for rye when the farmers provide meals and lodging for the threshermen and their employees. When the outfits provide their own commissary the scale is 8 cents for oats, 12½ cents for wheat and 15 cents for rye. The farmers declare that these charges are much higher than in adjoining counties and are unreasonable.

Indianapolis.—Charges of "profiteering" are being made by many patrons of alleged "blind tigers" in various parts of Indiana, according to reports reaching the state capital. Indianapolis' price for high-proof fluids is said to be about $2 a half pint while at Anderson police records show that two offenders of the state-wide prohibition law sold strong liquor for $1 a pint. Terre Haute prices are quoted as being $5 a quart for medium quality "refreshments" and a dollar more for the bonded varieties.

Greencastle.—Professor Sipher of Purdue university and County Agent Fouts of this city have made a partial canvass of the wheat fields of the county, selecting five fields that will be recommended for seed. Professor Sipher pronounced the field of N. L. Hammond "the prettiest field in Indiana." Other crops chosen for seed are those of John McCammack, E. R. Arnold, A. E. Neier and Will T. O'Hair. It was estimated all would average 30 bushels an acre.

Columbus.—The Bartholomew County Brotherhood of Thrashermen was organized at a meeting here. The prices for thrashing this year were fixed as follows: Oats, four cents a bushel; wheat, eight cents and rye ten cents, when the thrashers furnish only the machine crews. Some of the thrashermen announced at the meeting that they had contracted with their patrons at prices lower than those fixed at the meeting and would carry out their contracts.

Evansville.—At a conference of farmers in Union township, Vanderburg county, and Ross N. Atkinson, county agent, it was decided to wage war on grasshoppers, which have become a plague in that township. By the farmers cutting around the fields the pests will be driven to the center of the fields and there will be treated to a preparation containing paris green.

Winchester.—Threshermen in Randolph county met with 200 farmers here to devise means to save the wheat and oats crop and to fix prices for threshing. The resolutions adopted by the state threshermen's convention were approved. An attempt to fix the price of threshing oats at four cents, wheat at six cents and rye at seven cents a bushel was defeated. A motion to permit each thresher ring to fix its own price carried unanimously.

Noblesville.—At a meeting of the threshers of Hamilton county, held in this city recently, 8 cents was agreed on as the price that should prevail for the threshing of wheat. The county council of defense regarded the price of 8 cents excessive. The council then reduced the price to 7 cents. The prices which will prevail in this county are: Wheat, 7 cents; oats, 4 cents; barley, 7 cents; rye, 9 cents.

Frankfort.—The Clinton county food administration has set the following thrashing prices for this county: Three cents for oats, six cents for wheat and seven cents for rye. These prices were announced at a meeting of the thrashermen held in this city. Thrashers are organized throughout the county.

Lafayette.—The recent frost cost Indiana farmers millions of dollars. Estimates at the Purdue university agriculture experiment station placed the total loss at more than $10,000,000. The loss on corn alone was nearly $8,000,000, 125,000 acres being lost. Truck crops were damaged to the extent of several million dollars.

Greenfield.—In an inspection of wheat fields in this part of the county by county agent Cromer and Ernest Thornburg, of Winchester, state inspector, only five were found sufficiently good for seed wheat, that is, free from rye, cheat, cockle and weeds. All fields, however, were not inspected. "The wheat fields of Hancock county are conspicuous by their absence," Mr. Thornburg said. "There isn't one-third the wheat grown in Hancock county that there is in either Shelby or Johnson county. More wheat should be grown."

Indianapolis.—"In every way the medical profession of Indiana has maintained its traditions of the past," says a letter from Surgeon-General Gorgas to Dr. J. R. Eastman, of Indianapolis chairman of the Indiana committee, medical section, national council of defense. Doctor Eastman is directing the recruiting campaign among the physicians of the state and the letter from General Gorgas complimented Indiana, and asked that the state continue to contribute to the nation's need of physicians. Although many physicians in the state have enlisted for service since the last official publication of the names of enlisted physicians, more will be needed to care for the large number of drafted troops that are expected to be called soon.

Indianapolis.—County food administrators who have been authorized to exercise a general supervision over the harvest and storage of grain, to prevent loss by fire, have been directed by Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, to follow the example of John M. Thompson, food administrator for Bartholomew county, who has required that no farmer stack wheat within 75 feet of a railroad line, and where the field is along a railroad that the farmer plow a furrow between the first row of shocks and the tracks. This is one of the precautionary measures such as were suggested by the governor, state fire marshal, chairman of the state council of defense, head of the food production and conservation committee and the food administrator.

Indianapolis.—Reports that have been brought to Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist, by his deputies who go into every part of Indiana, indicate that Indiana need not suffer from the sugar shortage this year, if Hoosiers will turn to a larger yield of the state's honey yield. The most remarkable honey yield in the history of the state is now in prospect, according to the reports from apiarists in all parts of Indiana. A yield that apparently will reach a total of between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 pounds of honey of fine quality is in immediate prospect, and prices probably will be little higher than last year, Mr. Wallace said.

Indianapolis.—A secret conference of a number of threshermen representatives, with Governor Goodrich and M. E. Foley, chairman of the state council of defense, was held in the governor's office. Both the governor and the chairman are seeking to force down alleged exorbitant threshing prices about to be charged in some counties. It was intimated that the threshermen may have been threatened with action under the federal antitrust law, which carries heavy penalties, because of their alleged illegal combine. The authorities are insisting upon a threshing price of 7 cents a bushel for wheat.

Kokomo.—Arrangements have been completed for the construction of a large shell plant here by the government, the cost to be approximately $2,750,000. It is to be built and operated by the Kokomo Steel and Wire company, but the money will be provided by the government. Another open-hearth furnace, in addition to the three already operated by the company, will be constructed. The factory is to have a capacity of 3,000 shells a day.

Indianapolis.—Indiana will contribute 7,700 men to the call of July 22 for selective service registrants. Maj. Robert C. Baltzell, state conscription agent, received a telegram authorizing him to issue the call and entrain men for Camp Zachary Taylor during the five-day period beginning July 22. If necessary a number of men to whom deferred classification has been granted on agricultural grounds may be inducted into the service July 22.

Indianapolis.—Following an analysis of milk at the Central Hospital for the Insane and at the Girls' school at Clermont, by Harry E. Barnard, state chemist, who is also federal food administrator for Indiana, Gov. James P. Goodrich commissioned the Indiana state board of health hereafter to make an inspection of the foods bought at state institutions and make note of their preparation. This is in order to get a maximum of value in both processes.

Pettersburg.—Wheat thrashing will begin the latter part of next week. There are only a few fields of good corn in Pike county. The crop may run 75 per cent normal. Oats are looking fine, and harvest will begin about July 1. The clover is the best in years but owing to a scarcity of labor many farmers will not cut their clover hay but will let it lie and use it for fertilizer. The blackberries, it is said, will be sold in Petersburg this summer.

Jeffersonville.—Another transfer of inmates of the Indiana reformatory to the state penal farm at Putnamville was made when 25 were sent. This is the second transfer to the farm and 200 prisoners were sent to the state prison recently. The roster has been reduced from 1,300 to little more than 800. The recent transfers have been rather for the benefit of the penal farm than for relief.

Meron.—Approximately 50 woman suffragists started to school here when the Woman's Franchise league of Indiana opened a five days' course of instruction at the Union Christian college. The visitors took over the college dormitories for the week and regular courses in campaign work and suffrage history were begun.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana state-wide prohibition law was upheld by the state supreme court here. The decision was 4 to 1, Judge John W. Spencer of Evansville casting the only dissenting vote.

London's Old Constables.

Sir Spencer Ponsonby-Fane must have been nearly the oldest special constable. In company with thirty other foreign office clerks he was sworn in at the time of the Chartist trouble in 1848.

"We clerks," records Sir Spencer, "were assembled in the cabinet room, the largest room in the old foreign office, and harangued as to our duties by the chief clerk, a most energetic old gentleman, with only one leg.

"We were armed with new service muskets and ball cartridges from the tower and instructed that they were not to be used until it became absolutely necessary for defense.

"This was rather an unnecessary proceeding, for the locks wree so stiff that we could not cock or uncock them and the ramrods were almost immovable.—London Chronicle.

NEWVILLE

Elmer Wyatt and wife were the guests of George Simanton and family, of St. Joe, on Tuesday of last week.

A. I. Richmond, who has employment at Peoria, Ills., is here on a three-week visit. A. I. has a car, and is enjoying his vacation.

Rev. Edward Hively helped William Smith in his hay field last week, and Mrs. Hively assisted Mrs. Smith with the cooking. No one dare accuse our preacher or his wife of being slackers.

Mrs. Ollie Smith visited friends at Huntington the first of the week.

Rev. and Mrs. Hively had for over-Sunday guests the latter's mother and a brother and his family, all of Columbia City.

Cards from Byron Miller and Omar Avres read: "The ship on which I sailed has safely arrived over seas." So we know that they, with many others, are "over there."

Did you hear the church bell ring Friday night between the hours of 11 and 12? It rang for victory: Newville township went over the top. We have not got the complete figures, for statements vary; but Newville went over the top.

The U. B. ladies' aid met with Mrs. John Miller last Wednesday afternoon. There was nothing more than devotional meeting, owing to the busy time. No officers were present. The collection was 50c. Eight ladies were present, including the hostess.

ON A TORPEDOED BOAT

D. D. Loomis has received a letter from his sister, Mrs. Cassie Peterson, of Seattle, Wash., a portion of which will be of interest to the people of this community, as Mrs. Peterson was a Newville girl and has many friends here. The part that will interest people here is as follows and refers to her 17-year-old son, Thad, who was born at Orangeville:

"Well, we have had some trouble and I guess Thad has, too, for he was torpedoed in the war zone. The boat he was on was sunk. All were saved but three, and they were killed by the explosion of the ammonia tanks which they keep for making ice and keeping meat. Thad sent us a telegram as soon as he arrived in New York that he was safe. Then, in a few days, we had a letter telling of his experience and how it feels to be submarined. They were picked up in a little while and taken to a place near Edinburgh, Scotland, and fitted out with clothing. Then they went to Liverpool and from there to New York on a big liner."

Florence Buchanan went to Butler Monday evening for a short visit with their daughter, Mrs. John Sturgis, and family.

Firemen at Kendallville

Thirteen members of the St. Joe fire department attended the firemen's tournament at Kendallville last Thursday, as follows: Henry C. Hathaway, chief; Grover C. Curie, assistant chief; F. R. Bowman, Vern Coburn, Elmer Hart, James Harter, E. R. Kinsey, Frank Kinsey, Roy Kinsey, Derwood Ridgway, C. H. Sailer, Roy Wade and Ward Whodcox.

There were five others who were there in spirit only—five boys who are serving their country. A five-starred flag represented them. They are Paul E. Curie, Vernie C. Monroe, Paul Perry, Harry Shuff and Frank Ulm.

The St. Joe boys did not return with any prizes; and they were not disappointed, because they did not expect to. One thing they did do, however: they showed Kendallville a bunch of boys that any town might be proud of.

They got special mention by the state fire marshal for the work they did in patrolling the streets of our town at night, and were the only company mentioned for a like service. That's better than winning a prize when on dress parade.

Next year's tournament will be held at Warsaw.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

Beginning July 1, Indiana goes on a strict sugar ration. In addition to statements of quantities of sugar on hand, dealers and manufacturers using or handling this commodity, will be required to give detailed information concerning their requirements, and subject themselves to still further radical restrictions in the consumption of sugar for the months of July, August and September.

To expedite the distribution of sugar, all of which under the new regulations comes under the jurisdiction of the federal food administrator, J. E. Larger, head of the sugar division, in the office of Dr. Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, has prepared a classification supplementing that effective heretofore, and will require all distribution hereafter (except that for household consumption) to be on a certificate basis. The classification is as follows:

A. Candy makers, soft drinks, soda fountains, chewing gum, chocolate and cocoa manufacturers, tobacco manufacturers, flavoring extracts, invert sugar, syrups, sweet pickles, wines, etc.

These must show the amount of sugar used during the months of July, August and September, 1917, and certificates issued to them, if the statements are found correct, will be based upon 50 per cent. of such average use. Ice cream makers will be entitled to 75 per cent. Certificates will be issued separately for each month's supply.

B. Commercial canners.

These will be given certificates for their necessary requirements, but any resale of sugar by them except under the express direction of the local food administrator, will constitute a violation of the regulations, and subject them to closing of business for the period of the war. Any sugar on hand at the end of the season must be placed at the disposal of the food administrator. A special appeal is made to this group to economize in every possible direction.

C. Hotels, restaurants, public eating houses (serving twenty-five or more persons).

These will receive certificates on the basis of three pounds for each ninety meals served.

D. Bakers.

These will receive certificates for 70 per cent. of the average amount used during July, August and September, 1917, or alternatively, 70 per cent of that used during June, 1918.

E Retail Stores.

These will receive for July purchases, certificates based upon the average of sugar sold during the combined three months of April, May and June, 1918. Retailers must not sell sugar to any of the other groups; that is, to none except householders, without taking up the certificates of such purchases. Sales to town customers are limited to 2 pounds, and country customers to 5 pounds. The retailer is admonished not to sell more than 3 pounds per person per month to householders, whose co-operation with the retailer is earnestly sought.

Retailers may, as at present, sell 25 pounds of sugar to any one household for home canning, upon the householder certifying that he has not bought elsewhere, and his agreement to return any balance not used for canning purposes. Householders, on certificate, may obtain more than 25 pounds, for home canning where need is shown, but in no instance will a sale of more than 100 pounds for home canning purpose be permitted without the approval of the local food administrator.

No wholesaler or refiner will be permitted to sell any sugar whatsoever except on the certificate basis. Any person in any of the above five groups, who does not file his statement promptly, will not be permitted to buy sugar for the period of the war, and action will at once be taken against any sugar he may have on hand in excess of 30 days' supply, and he will be charged with hoarding.

No firm will be permitted a stock in excess of a 3 months' supply on the basis outlined above. Any stock in excess of 30 days' supply, but less than 90 days' supply must be held subject to the local food administrator, for distribution if necessary, depending on the remoteness from the source of supply. The food administration will construe any attempts by dealers and manufacturers to lay up a supply, as hoarding, and upon conviction, this offense is punishable by fine and imprisonment.

"While in law the same rule might be applied to householders, the food administration proposes to rest upon the honor and co-operation of the householder not to hold more than a 30 days' supply, upon the basis of 3 pounds per person in the household," said Dr. Barnard.

In explanation of the more stringent regulations of the sugar supply and its distribution, Dr. Barnard said: "A number of causes have cumulated to make our sugar position more difficult than we could have anticipated at the beginning of the year. The increased shipping needed by our growing Army in France has necessitated the curtailment of sugar transportation, particularly from the longer voyage, and has thus reduced supplies both to the allies and ourselves from remote markets. Some of the accessible sugar producing areas have proved a less yield than was anticipated, such as certain West Indian Islands. The domestic beet and Louisiana crops have fallen below anticipation. There has been some destruction of beet sugar factories in the battle area of France and Italy. We have lost considerable sugar by submarines.

"As close an estimate as we can make indicates a reasonable expectation from all sources of about 1,600,000 tons of sugar for United States consumption during the last half of the present year. This is based upon the maintenance of the present meager allied ration. An improvement in shipping conditions would, of course, relieve this situation, as quantities of sugar are in unavailable markets. We must however, base the distribution of sugar during the next six months upon the above footing. After that period, the new West Indian crop will be available.

"This supply of 1,600,000 tons necessitates a considerable reduction in our consumption. To provide three pounds of sugar per month per person for household use, to take care of our army and navy, and to provide for the necessary preservation of fruit, milk, etc., will require about 1,500,000 tons of sugar for the six months. A household consumption of 3 pounds per month per person, together with the special allowance for home canning, means a reduction of some 25 per cent. in these branches of consumption from normal, but it is still nearly double the ration in the allied countries and is ample for every economical use."

Vive La France

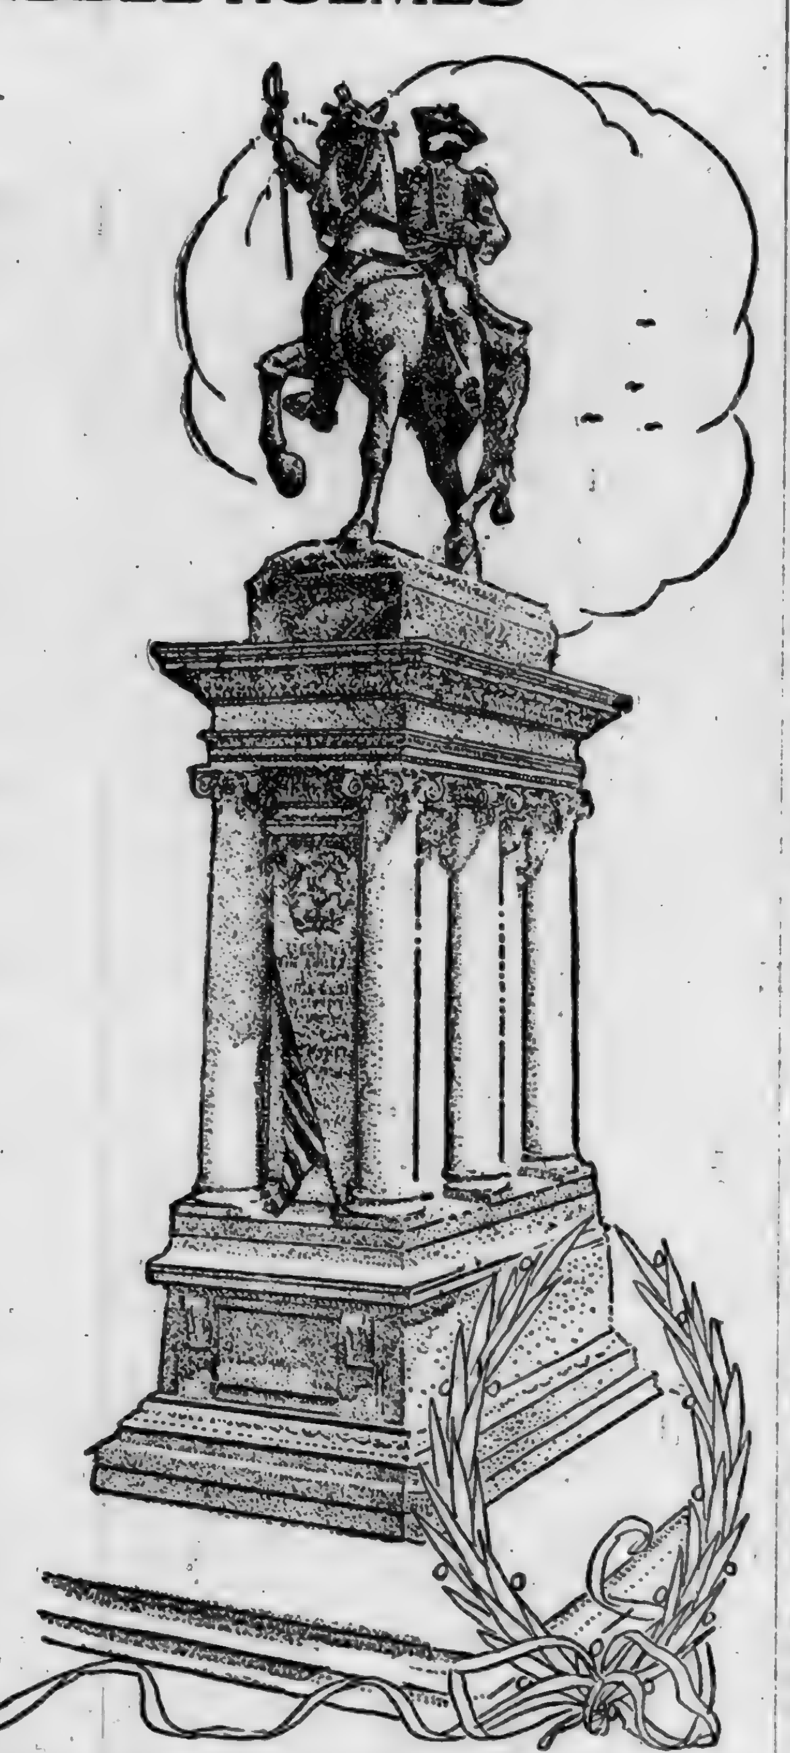
By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

THE land of sunshine and of song!
Her name your hearts divine;
To her the banquet's vows belong
Whose breasts have poured its wine;
Our trusty friend, our true ally
Through varied change and chance;
So, fill your flashing goblets high,
I give you, VIVE LA FRANCE!

Above our hosts in triple folds
The selfsame colors spread,
Where Valor's faithful arm upholds
The blue, the white, the red;
Alike each nation's glittering crest
Reflects the morning's glance,
Twin eagles, soaring east and west:
Once more, then, VIVE LA FRANCE!

Sister in trial! who shall count
Thy generous friendship's claim,
Whose blood ran mingling in the fount
That gave our land its name,
'Till Yorktown saw in blended line
Our conquering arms advance,
And Victory's double garlands twine
Our banners! VIVE LA FRANCE!

O land of heroes! in our need
One gift from heaven we crave
To stanch these wounds that bravely bleed—
The wise to lead the brave!
Call back one captain of thy past
From glory's marble trance,
Whose name shall be a bugle blast
To rouse us! VIVE LA FRANCE!



The statue of Lafayette, presented to France in 1900 by the school children of America, stands in the court of the Louvre. It is the work of the sculptor Bartlett.

Lafayette's Name Honored by All Free Men

SEPTEMBER 6th is the 107th anniversary of the birth of the great French soldier who was America's friend in her hour of need.

Lafayette was a mere boy of twenty when he left his young wife in France and at his own expense came to this country and presented himself to congress and offered his services where they would be best suited for the cause in hand.

Lafayette received his first impressions of the American struggle for liberty while he was stationed at Metz. Undoubtedly he was led to apply to the American commissioners at Paris, among whom was Franklin, through his recollection of the loss of Canada to France. It was at the same time that he, an aristocrat, began to understand the common people. Certainly from the first moment of his landing in America until the end of his days he was most democratic in his dealings with all men.

When he appeared before Franklin and Deane and desired to offer his sword to America he was dissuaded. He was told that, in the first place, there was no ship to take him, and to that he answered that he would charter a vessel himself and at the same time supply it and also take any communications the commissioners had for America.

Won Commissioners' Sanction.

There was no other answer to a persevering, courageous and generous young soldier than to accept his offer. He gladly embraced the opportunity to lend his aid and also invited several other dashing young Frenchmen to accompany him.

He was as good as his word, and in due time he and his ship arrived on this side of the Atlantic. Congress read with interest his recommendations from Franklin, and they agreed to the single proviso in his offer, which was that he, on account of his position, was to receive the commission as a general officer and he was to be free to answer any summons of his king. But at the same time he stipulated that he was to serve without any emolument.

It was about the middle of April, 1777, that the young nobleman arrived in South Carolina, and it was in July that congress gave him his commission as major general, although he was then some weeks less than twenty years of age.

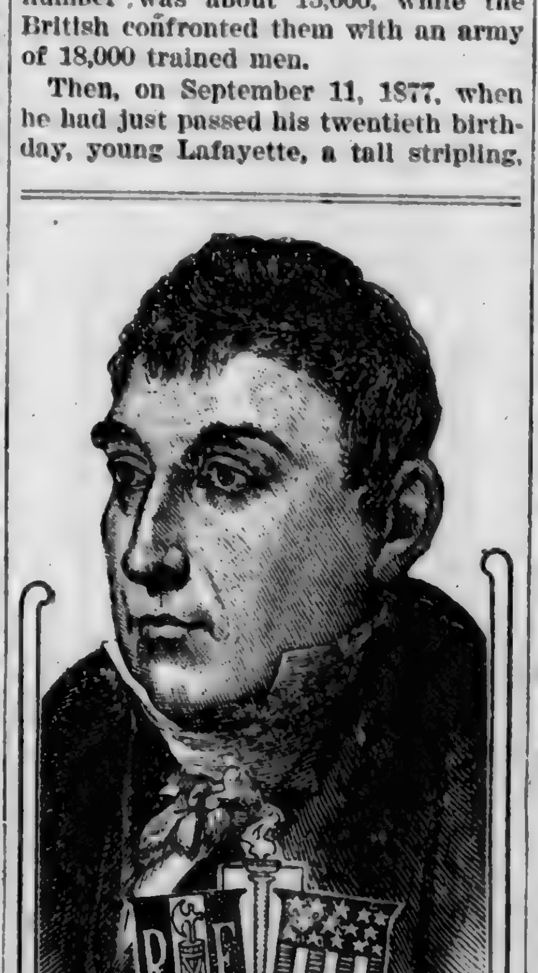
Placed under the personal care of Washington, the great commander in chief soon became attached to the young officer. The feeling of admiration was mutual, and Lafayette until the day of his death regarded his mentor and friend as the greatest American.

Gladly Gave His Services.

From the first he was convinced of the justness of the American cause, and he fought for it as if it were his own. He not only served without pay, but actually lent assistance to the struggling colonies out of his own private means. In all, he advanced about $140,000 to the American cause, and in those days that was an immense sum of money.

Less than two months from the day he received his commission he was in command of a body of troops in the army that engaged the British at the battle of the Brandywine. The Americans numbered in all about 11,000 effective troops, although their total number was about 15,000, while the British confronted them with an army of 18,000 trained men.

Then, on September 11, 1877, when he had just passed his twentieth birthday, young Lafayette, a tall stripling, received his baptism of fire. He received more than that, for one of his legs was so badly wounded by a bullet that he had to be carried to Bethlehem, where he lay for weeks, attended tenderly by the Moravian sisters.



1757—LAFAYETTE—1834.

For a time Lafayette was under General Sullivan, and he saw much hard service. When the Rhode Island campaign was drawing to a close and D'Estaing's fleet and 4,000 French troops were withdrawn, it became evident to those who thought on the subject that the patriot army was in a sad quandary. It needed supplies and it needed assistance in men, and it needed the alliance of a powerful nation. It was true that the badly clothed and sadly supplied little straggling army of the colonists could hold out for a long time; but it was evident that help was needed if a peace was to be signed that would guarantee their liberty.

Lafayette was one of those who saw that the patriots must have help. He had been absent from home and his young wife for two years, and he asked for a leave of absence to visit France.

Toward the end of the year 1778 he returned home and congress, although it was poor in resources, did prove its gratitude by ordering Franklin, then American envoy in France, to have a sword made and presented to the distinguished young soldier.

Made Victory Sure.

Lafayette returned again, and this time France sent over an army and, what was more valuable, a fleet to co-operate with it, and with these new forces in the field against her the British began the final chapter of the war.

After the war Lafayette visited the United States and was everywhere received with welcoming hands.

Toward the evening of his life the great Frenchman was in need, having lost his property and having been otherwise deprived of his patrimony. It was at this time that congress voted him money and lands, which he sold for $100,000, and at the same time invited him to revisit the scene of his youthful victories.

His tour of the country lasted fourteen months, during which period he visited each of the then twenty-four states, and in every town and city he was the object of a splendid welcome.

He died in France in 1834 and there was general mourning and many tributes to his memory in the United States.

The present war has caused his name to be illuminated again, for once more France and America are fighting a common foe, but this time the country which France helped to free is returning to assist her in freeing the world for democracy.

Lafayette True Republican.

The republicanism of Lafayette astonished two continents in his day and set the chancellories of Europe by the ears. It abides still as an inspiration to the world in these days of the Battle for Liberty. The man represented in his youth the struggle for the highest ideals of our country and in his maturer years he became an embodiment of the struggle against the greed of the Hun. The hero of Brandywine, whose vision was prophetic, was also the foe of Prussian militarism. As the "Prisoner of Olmutz" his spirit was not broken when he came to us after having suffered the indignities and cruelties heaped upon him by the Teuton. Were he living now he would be as ardent against the Hohenzollerns as he was against George III of Hanover.

Whole World Turns to America.

In the providence of God and by the light of our loyalty toward the original convictions of liberty and humanity upon which we have founded we are today with garnered wisdom and with stored wealth and with disciplined strength standing in the vortex of universal waters as at once the lighthouse of hope and the anchor of liberty for all the world.

Paying Nation's Debt to France.

Nearly a century and a half have passed since France and America last fought side by side. It is inspiring to any American to realize that we are now paying—in part at least—the debt we owe to this glorious people who sent Lafayette when we sorely needed

Feathering His Nest

By WILLIAM HAMILTON OSBORNE
Of The Vigilantes

Hardshell Hopper is an unpatriotic cynic. He admits he is, himself. It's only recently he came into the limelight. Old Hezekiah Hopper died a year or so ago and left two million dollars. He left half his fortune to his nephew, another young man of the name of Latimer Cobb, and the other half he left to his other nephew, Hardshell Hopper. Hardshell is called that because he's got that kind of a shell, or so it would seem. The testator had this money all nicely invested in good paying five and six per cent securities. For about a year the young man clipped their coupons and collected their dividends. The war was in their midst, and young Latimer Cobb subscribed to everything in sight, and got his name in the papers and kept it there. He must have given up as much as fifty thousand dollars out of his million, to the Liberty loan, the Red Cross, the Red Triangle and other things that came along.

"But what I really want to do," said Latimer Cobb, "is to double or treble my money—then I'll give twenty-five per cent of all I make to furthering our interests in the war."

He looked about him. He picked out a good likely looking munitions stock. If money had to be made out of the war by munitions concerns he might as well make some of it, then, as he said, he would turn around and give a lot of it to the war, and get his name in the papers and keep it there, right along. He was a patriot, he knew he was a patriot, and he kept saying so. He was proud of it, in fact.

But Hardshell Hopper wasn't—he admitted that he wasn't. A friend of Hardshell's who was going around selling Liberty bonds went to see Hardshell about buying some of the bonds.

"Now, that's a pity," groaned Hardshell Hopper, "but fact is, Steve, just this morning I invested my whole pile in first-class, gilt-edged securities. I ain't got a dollar left. Now, if you'd been around here yesterday—"

Next night Steve, his friend, came around again. Steve shook him earnestly by the hand. "Why, Hardshell," he cried, "you're the biggest patriot in this town. You've invested all your money—a million or more in the Liberty loan. You're the biggest man we've got—the foremost of our patriots."

Hardshell Hopper shook his head. "Don't get off your trolley, Steve," he said, "I ain't a patriot. My cousin, Latimer Cobb—he's a patriot—everybody says so. But I ain't. Why, bless you, man, I've only been feathering my nest."

"You've put one million dollars into this war," said Steve.

"I've tucked one million away where its safe and sound," drawled Hardshell Hopper, "where I don't have to worry about it. I got a security that won't be taxed, and that's as gilt-edged as they make 'em, backed by about three hundred billion dollars' worth of assets—and that's enough for me. But don't you go calling me names I don't deserve. I ain't no patriot. I'm only feathering my nest. If you want a patriot you go to my cousin, Latimer. He's the boy for you."

Steve went around to see Hardshell's cousin, Latimer.

"At any rate," he said to Latimer, "I can sell some bonds to you."

Latimer glowed with patriotism. "Steve," he said, "I promise you you'll be the boy I'll buy 'em of. And I'm going to buy a lot. But just now I haven't got a dollar to my name. I've plunged on some munitions stock—there's been a flurry—it's gone down on me, and I can't get out without a most tremendous loss. All I can do is to hang on like grim death. But the minute that I make a handsome profit, Steve, I'm yours. There's no man for five hundred miles around that's got a warmer feeling for the old flag than Latimer Cobb. I can tell you those."

But Latimer didn't make a handsome profit—he didn't make any profit. Instead, one fine morning his shares of stock turned worthless on his hands. The concern whose stock he'd bought was as worthless as the stock.

As in a flash, one day, he found himself penniless. He had to turn to and earn his living. Hardshell Hopper gave him a job that kept body and soul together. But one day something happened. It must be remembered that Latimer Cobb, like his cousin, Hardshell Hopper, had received for one year at least, the income on those five per cent securities that their dead uncle had invested in. So Latimer Cobb had had an income—and he had filed an income tax return. His income had been about fifty thousand for the year—and the present income tax on fifty thousand dollars is considerable. But Latimer Cobb, the young patriot, whose intentions had been so good, and who was going to do so well by the government, found himself without money to pay this tax. He was a patriot, and he had had a large income—but he couldn't pay his income tax. The government jailed him—a very proper thing to do. Hardshell Hopper raised some money on his Liberty bonds, and went around and got Latimer Cobb out of jail. Then he took him back to his office.

"Latimer, son," said Hardshell Hopper, taking a sheaf of Liberty bonds out of his safe, "here are the bonds that your million dollars bought."

"Your bonds, you mean," moaned Latimer, "bought with your million."

"No," returned Hardshell Hopper, "bought by your million. And they're yours, but with a string attached to them. You plunged on Wall street, and went broke. I knew you would. I knew it had to be. So, to save your money for you, I engineered that munitions stock deal that you tangled yourself up in—you see?"

"You?" exclaimed Latimer Cobb.

"Yep," returned Hardshell. "I knew you'd get trimmed—so I thought I might as well do the trimming—and I did. I wanted to feather your nest for you, Latimer. So I bought Liberty bonds with the money that you lost—and there's the bonds, all standing in your name."

"You bought 'em in my name?" faltered Latimer Cobb.

"In your name," echoed Hardshell Hopper. "Chiefly because I couldn't get anything better or solider to buy—and then, you won't have any trouble any more with that income tax. But that ain't all, Latimer," went on Hardshell. "I want to ask you how much it costs you now to live?"

"You're paying me two thousand a year," said Cobb.

"And you're living on it," went on Hardshell, "and I'm living on another two thousand. And yet our combined income from these bonds 'll come near to being seventy-five thousand dollars a year. So I'm giving you these bonds with the idea that you and me 'll keep on living on our two thousand a year apiece—and the rest of the income we'll hand over to the Red Cross and the Triangle, and buy War Savings stamps, and such.

"Not so you can notice it," yelled Latimer Cobb, "what's mine is mine."

"Oh, well," said Hardshell Hopper, thrusting back the bonds into the safe, "as a matter of fact I haven't put 'em in your name—they're only yours if you'll consent to what I said."

"Well," finally conceded Latimer Cobb, "if you'll put my name in the paper as a big subscriber so that folks will know what kind of a good patriot I am."

"You ain't a patriot, Latimer," said Hardshell Hopper, "get that through your head. We're only protecting our own interests in loaning this money to the government. We're doing not a blamed thing but feathering our nests."

You can't knock that queer idea out of Hardshell Hopper's head.

WHERE BELGIUM STANDS

By HON. E. DE CARTIER,
Minister of Belgium.

His excellency, E. de Cartier, Belgian minister to the United States, has sent the Vigilantes the following expression of the attitude of his country:

The principles which you have always stood for, and for which you are again fighting, are the principles which have always animated my little country and for which we, too, are fighting, shoulder to shoulder, with your own brave boys. We are fighting for freedom and independence. Your soldiers will not come back until it is all over, over there; neither will ours lay down their arms until the world is made safe for honest people.

Germany offered us a shameful bargain. She offered to spare our country and to indemnify us, if we would let her pass through to accomplish her crime against our neighbor and her neighbor, France. She wished to make us an accomplice in her crime, and she gave us twelve hours in which to make up our minds. That was eleven hours and fifty-nine minutes too much. We spurned her base offer. We have suffered, but we have no regrets.

Having tried in vain to bribe us by offers of immunity, the Germans resorted to violence and intimidation. You all know the story, although many of the details cannot be told until our witnesses are freed from the menacing claw of the German eagle. I say to you that whoever undertakes to write the history of the horrors committed by the Huns of the twentieth century will have a task that will turn his soul sick.

One of the greatest of the crimes of Germany was to attempt to enslave our workmen and to force them to work for our enemy and against their own brothers. Tens of thousands of honest workmen were torn from their wives and families, loaded on trucks like cattle and deported to Germany. There they were tempted by offers of high wages to work for our enemy and to sign a so-called "voluntary contract" to engage in such work—but they would not sign. They were subjected to starvation—but they would not sign. They were tortured — but they would not sign.

The Germans tried to divide our house against itself—but they "imagined a vain thing." In the early part of the war, after having ravaged and massacred in Flanders as well as in the Walloon district, after finding that our people could not be intimidated, the Germans sought to separate Flanders from the rest of Belgium by flattering the Flemings and pretending to be their special protectors. But the only result of the effort to divide Flanders from the rest of our country has been to arouse the most intense unity throughout the land. All our people immediately rallied in defense of the unity of our country, whose motto is like your own. You have the motto "E Pluribus Unum"—"One Composed of Many," and ours is "Union Fait la Force"—"In Union There Is Strength."

CONSERVE! CONSERVE!

Oh, yes; oh, yes;
Dear Uncle Sam,
We women are willing
To help all we can.
We'll eat less bread
And save the wheat,
Add fish to our diet
To save the meat;
We'll use less sugar
And still keep sweet—
And
We'll save our money and buy a bond
For Liberty's cause the world around;
But, Uncle Sam,
Please, won't you close the breweries?
Oh, yes; oh, yes;
We hear the cry
For conservation
We'll do or die—
We'll talk and try,
We'll skimp and save
And work and slave,
Corn bread for every meal we'll eat,
And give our allies the best of the wheat,
We'll save our money for stamps of Thrift
To give Liberty's cause a hearty lift—
But, Uncle Sam,
We can't understand
Why you don't close the breweries?
—Margaret B. Platt.

WHAT LIFE INSURANCE RECORDS TELL.

The Life Extension institute, of which Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale is chairman, and ex-President William Howard Taft is president of the board of directors, published a report of the actuaries of 43 American life insurance companies covering a period of 25 years from 1885, showing the increased mortality of moderate users of alcoholic liquors. These records were kept without any reference to the prohibition issue, and reveal that:

1. Very moderate users of liquor increased their death rate by 18 per cent over the normal rate.

2. Moderate users of liquor with an occasional excess, increased their death rate by 50 per cent over the normal rate.

3. Those who drank more than two glasses of beer or more than one glass of whisky per day and yet were considered acceptable standard risks for insurance, increased their death rate by 86 per cent above the normal rate.

These three classes of insured moderate drinkers increased their mortality by an average of 51 1-3 per cent.

The death rate recorded by these companies includes only men sufficiently temperate to secure a life insurance policy. If we add the thousands of heavy drinkers who cannot get life insurance the death rate from liquor will be largely increased.

The comparisons in this report are with the average mortality of all insured men, including the users of liquors. If it had been made with the total abstainers the difference in mortality would have been even greater.

THE LUMP IN HIS SIDE.

A workingman, almost ruined by drink, was induced to sign the pledge for a year. When the year was out, he went and renewed it for life. He had just received his wages, and had the money in a bag in his inside pocket, when he met the saloonkeeper at whose place he used to drink.

"Well, old fellow," said the saloonkeeper, "how do you do?"

"Pretty well," the workingman answered, "only I've got a hard lump here on my side."

"Oh!" said the other, "it's cold water does that; if you'd drink some good liquor, it would soon take the lump away."

"But," said the man, "I have just renewed the pledge for life, and I can't do it."

"Then, mind what I say," said the saloonkeeper, "that lump will go on increasing, and very likely before another year you'll have another on the other side."

"I hope so," said the workingman, taking out his money bag and shaking it. "It's cold cash."

THE BUSINESS VIEW.

The time is not far distant when a prohibition zone will surround mills and factories, even as schools and churches are now protected, within which no liquor will be sold. It is big business that is now talking, not merely preachers and reformers. Large financial interests are at stake. Competition is so close that the very existence of factories in the race for trade and maintenance is threatened unless the field be a clear one with no mill discounted by lower standards of efficiency than another. No business will tolerate the drink habit today. Trust companies presided over by boozers are tabooed by the investor. Time was when the brilliant alcoholic could hold his place in almost any job or profession. That time is past. Industry and education have come to realize that dependability is better than brilliancy itself and that brilliancy is more common with men of clear heads than with those whose brains are muddled with alcohol.—Yarmouth Times.

PREPARING FOR PROHIBITION.

The directors of the California Wine association included in their last annual report recommendations that wine stocks be disposed of and that wine men prepare for prohibition. The report declares the directors have decided that further pursuit of a business with a future so uncertain is not wise. Wise men!

Women of the suffrage states, when the wets solicit your votes just remember that, if they had their way you would have no votes to give.

Hadn't Much to Spare.

In an Italian field hospital a story is told of a surgeon who called out to the soldiers:

"Boys, is there anyone among you willing to give a little of his skin to this wounded man?"

"That wounded man," one of them called out, "is the son of the usurer who has always skinned me; but he has fought well and it is only right that I should give him what little cuticle his father has spared."

The Effects of Opiates.

THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations, all of which are narcotic, is well known. Even in the smallest doses, if continued, these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility, mental perversion, a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life. Nervous diseases, such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying powers are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy. The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable.

The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cordials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it. Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them willfully with narcotics.

EXPLAINING ONE FARM PROBLEM

The County Agent Is Telling His Farm and City Listeners the Importance of Good Seed Corn and How to Select It.

COUNTY AGENT BECOMES LEADER

Has Come to Act as Clearing House of Co-Operation Between City and Country.

CAN DIRECT WHERE NEEDED

None of His Time Can Be Devoted to Work That Does Not Concern Agricultural Development—Likely to Be Busy Man.

The growth and the strengthening of the county agent system has resulted in almost all cases in the county agents coming to be recognized as the agricultural leaders in their counties, according to reports to the United States department of agriculture.

Help for City and Country.

The county agent has come to act as the clearing house of co-operation. He is available to both the city man and the country man and can transmit from one to the other requests for help and offers of help. He can direct, to places where it is needed, farm labor offered; he can assist farmers in their problem of co-operative marketing; he can inform chambers of commerce, county councils of defense, merchants' associations and other urban bodies, of the problems before the farmers in his county; in general he is in a position to act as the medium through which the town will meet the needs of the country and the country will meet the needs of the town.

Must Concentrate Efforts.

Every county agent is required to know and observe that his services belong to all the people in his county, but it is evident that none of his time can be given to work that does not concern agricultural development. He is placed in the county to stimulate good farming. Therefore, he must confine himself to work on definite problems affecting farmers. It is necessary for him to utilize the aid of community organizations to the fullest extent and it is within his duties to impress upon the town people how vital their interest and help is to the farmers.

In the war emergency the county agents are not only representing the agricultural colleges and the department of agriculture, but are assisting the food administration, the treasury department, the war department, the navy department, the department of justice and the department of labor.

Help in Direct War Work.

They have aided, in addition to their regular activities, in such work as food surveys, seed surveys, seed distribution, obtaining credit for farmers, selling Liberty bonds, eradication of live-stock diseases, surveys of livestock diseases, surveys of insect pests and campaigns for their destruction, marketing farm products, preferential or priority shipments by railroads of farm products and all farm supplies, and the dissemination of information given out by the war department, the council of national defense and the committee on public information regarding the war and other matters affecting the national policy under war conditions.

Thus it can be seen that the county agent is likely to be a rather busy man.

In Food Production Army.

More than 6,000 men and women—6,166 June 1—are carrying to every community in the United States the food production and food conserving knowledge that has been tested by federal specialists. They are extension workers of the United States department of agriculture and the state colleges.

The number now at work represents an increase of more than 4,000 over those at work July 1, 1917. About 600 emergency agents over the number working in May, 1918, were at work in June, 1918.

This is the strength of this division of the food production forces:

	Regular.	Emergency.	Total.
County agent work	1,016	2,129	3,145
Home demonstration work	407	1,500	1,907
Boys' and girls' club work	163	951	1,114
Total	1,586	4,580	6,166

RED CROSS PIG CLUB

The county agent in Carroll county, Mississippi, started out last winter to combine pork production and Red Cross work. He tried to get 2,500 people each to raise one pig to be known as a Red Cross pig. Instead of 2,500 members, he got 3,000 in a county that has only 1,600 voters. In September the club members are to send 3,000 hogs to the St. Louis market. This will mean a contribution estimated at $10,000 to the Red Cross, in addition to more pork for the country and more money for Carroll county. A $25 registered pig is given each month as a prize to the member whose pig has made the greatest gain.

Aid Farmers.

When a business concern wants to borrow money it makes a business statement showing the inventory—or money invested at the beginning and end of the year—the money taken in during the year, the expenses and the profits. With this statement a banker knows whether or not it is safe to loan money to this company—in other words, whether the company has a good chance of securing profitable returns from a further investment in their business. A company with a good business, as shown by such a statement, usually has good credit and can borrow money cheaply.

There are many farmers in this country who keep records of what they have on hand at the beginning and end of the year and of what they take in and what they spend. These men can borrow money more easily and cheaply than most farmers because they have the figures to show the banker.

But before a farmer borrows any money he should have very clearly in mind what he wants to use it for, and be very sure that in the end it will pay him to borrow.

Rice in the United States.

During the last two years the production of rice in this country has been at its maximum, between 36,000,000 and 40,000,000 bushels or, roughly, one and one-fifth billion pounds. So far as climate and soil are concerned, the rice acreage in the United States might be increased many fold, according to the United States department of agriculture, since in the states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and California, as well as in small areas in Missouri, millions of acres are adopted to the cultivation of this crop, while less than one million acres located within a comparatively few states are now occupied by rice. One of the quickest ways of increasing the crop, the federal specialists say, is to expand the acreage in the areas where rice is already profitably grown.

Lemon Juice For Freckles

Girls! Make beauty lotion at home for a few cents. Try it!

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle, sunburn and tan lotion, and complexion whitener, at very, very small cost.

Your grocer has the lemons and any drug store or toilet counter will supply three ounces of orchard white for a few cents. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands and see how freckles, sunburn and tan disappear and how clear, soft and white the skin becomes. Yes! It is harmless.—Adv.

ALL WORN OUT

Doan's, However, Restored Mr. Roulston to Good Health. Results Have Lasted.

"Mornings I was so stiff and sore I could hardly get up," says A. C. Roulston, prop. blacksmith shop, 2840 Washington St., Roxbury, Mass. "The sharp pains through my kidneys were so bad I often thought I wouldn't be able to get to work. I couldn't rest comfortably and turned and tossed from one side to the other, with a dull, dragging backache. There were puffy spots under my eyes and I felt worn out all the time. The kidney secretions passed too often and were otherwise unnatural. Four or five boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills cured me. I can honestly recommend Doan's for they have surely done me a world of good.

Mr. Roulston

Mr. Roulston gave the above statement in 1915 and in March, 1917, he said: "My cure is still lasting. I take Doan's occasionally, however, to keep my kidneys in good working order. One can depend upon Doan's to cure kidney ills."

HAARLEM OIL CAPSULES IF YOUR BACK ACHES

Do you feel tired and "worn-out?" Are you nervous and irritable? Don't sleep well at night? Have a "dragged out," unrested feeling when you get up in the morning? Dizzy spells? Bilious? Bad taste in the mouth, backache, pain or soreness in the loins, and abdomen? Severe distress when urinating, bloody, cloudy urine or sediment? All these indicate gravel or stone in the bladder, or that the poisonous microbes, which are always in your system, have attacked your kidneys.

You should use GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules immediately. The oil soaks gently into the walls and lining of the kidneys, and the little poisonous animal germs, which are causing the inflammation, are immediately attacked and chased out of your system without inconvenience or pain.

Don't ignore the "little pains and aches," especially backaches. They may be little now but there is no telling how soon a dangerous or fatal disease of which they are the forerunners may show itself. Go after the cause of that backache at once, or you may find yourself in the grip of an incurable disease.

Do not delay a minute. Go to your druggist and insist on his supplying you with a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. In 24 hours you will feel renewed health and vigor. After you have cured yourself, continue to take one or two Capsules each day so as to keep in first-class condition, and ward off the danger of future attacks. Money refunded if they do not help you. Ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL brand, and thus be sure of getting the genuine.—Adv.

The Girl With Thirteen Daddies.

CHAPTER III.

Crowned heads claim to rule by divine right. Sensible people, however, know better: they owe their positions to the fortune of birth. When the little outcast first entered the home of the thirteen, they pitied her; and pity is a twin sister of the noblest impulse that can animate man, charity. Hence her adoption followed quite naturally; for rough natures like those of the thirteen, when they follow the promptings of their hearts, act spontaneously. When Margaret appealed to them to be good to her, each of them secretly swore fealty to her; and then and there she became their queen, ruling by the only divine right—love. The finger of God at that moment may have touched their hearts—who knows?—and they became the subjects of a child that, in the end, was to lead them to higher and better lives.

For several weeks after the coming of Margaret, there were no busier men in Paradise Lost than the thirteen. They were building a castle for their queen and arranging for her formal crowning. All that they did could have been effected within a day or two had they been engaged in any ordinary matter; but a momentous work like that of serving their queen required deliberation. Frequent councils, at which they gravely discussed every detail, consumed most of the time. When they were unable to agree, which was generally the case, Mrs. Dal was consulted. The good woman berated, ridiculed and praised them, and they were as thankful for the one as the other; and, in the end, she aided them in determining what to do.

The castle was completed at last. It was in the form of a wing to their own home and was given the place of honor, the front. This necessitated the moving of the main building or the castle would have extended into the street. This was a labor of love and was enthusiastically performed. A door communicated between the two parts The question of a second one opening on the street was seriously debated. The absence of such a door would give the castle the appearance of a prison and the presence of one would endanger the safety of the queen. A plan was matured that was satisfactory to all: a door was put in—a massive steel one, provided with three locks and with a burglar alarm system that created a noise not unlike the anvil chorus, with explosive variations, within their own apartment. Then, with amazing inconsistency, the men that balked at a door for fear of giving the castle the appearance of a prison, put heavy iron bars to the windows. The exterior was painted white, and over the door was this warning (in red letters):

"The little lady lives here—the end of the road is further on."

The interior of the castle was a blaze of glory: Joseph's coat of many colors would have looked like a faded rag beside it. It reflected the united taste of the thirteen, and they regarded it with pride bordering on exultation. It was divided into a sitting room and a bedroom, each as gorgeous and many hued as the other.

When the castle was completed, a trip over the mountains to secure furniture and otherwise to provide for the comfort of the queen became necessary. This mission was entrusted to Jedge and Calamity. They departed with full power to "bet nothing but blue chips and to go the limit." They were gone two weeks; and, when they returned, a heavily loaded freight wagon was evidence that they had not been idle. A conclave was assembled to hear their report, and at this Mrs Dal was present. Jedge was spokesman for the committee, and he set about his duty about as solemn-visaged as if he were about to sentence a murderer to death.

"Pardners," he said, "I am glad to inform you all, in the fust place, that little Margaret is our'n jest as tight as the laws o' Califyrny can make her. That thar paper Mrs. Dal drawed up an' you signed, givin' me an' Calamity the right to put your brand onto any docyments—power o'"— Here he stopped and looked at Mrs. Dal.

"Attorney," she prompted.

"That's it, power o' attorney—war all right. So the law sharp said. Me an' Calamity giv' him ten dollars more than he asked fer not to leave a single 'said,' 'wharas' 'r 'wharfore' out o' the docyment he drawed up fer us; an' the jedge said the sharp done the work all O. K I've got the paper in my pocket the jedge signed makin' me an' you all the daddies o' that thar little lady on Mrs. Dal's lap, an' the said paper has been recorded by the dooly censtitooted authorities o' the state o' Californy. She's our'n, an' 'To who it may concern' can pull his freight. We'll hustle fer her an' turn out a million heiress that'll make all them others look like a bunch o' she pikers."

Here Jedge was forced to stop while the enthusiasm of his hearers exhausted itself in a torrent of cheers, in which gun play was replaced by throwing up of hats and the exchanging of resounding kicks and whacks. Mrs. Dal became infected with the spirit of the occasion, standing on a chair and holding up the little girl. This caused a fresh outbreak, and three cheers were given for Mrs. Dal, for the little lady, for Jedge and Calamity and for nothing in particular.

"Pardners," resumed Jedge, after quiet had been restored, "I'll now report what me an' Calamity bought. I'll pull up at the end o' each one; an' if none o' you coyotes yell, I'll reckon no one's hurt. Said report is in the follerin' words an' figgers, to-wit: Fust, three stoves."

Jedge, who had but recently been among lawyers, rolled out the last sentence, couched in legal phraseology, with evident satisfaction. He paused and waited for an objection. There was none, but a suppressed titter came from Mrs. Dal's direction.

Jedge continued: "Six rockin' chairs. Six—eh—eh—well—jest chairs. Two sofys. What did that thar sharp call 'em, Calamity? Settease, yes, that's it; but me an' Calamity calls 'em sofys. Sixty yards o' carpet. Say, pardners, that thar carpet has got anything beat you can draw to. It took gold dust to get it; but me an' Calamity's no pikers, an' nothin's too good fer our little lady. One iron bedstead, painted white. Me an' Calamity rode up and down the range tryin' to rope down a gold one, but they don't herd none. We thought o' buyin' two; but as the little lady can't sleep on but one at a time, we only bought one. Any ways, it'll be an easy matter to git another at the end o' a year 'r two when this un's wore out. Six mattresses. Two dozen sheets. Two dozen blankets. Two dozen pil"—

Mrs. Dal could restrain herself no longer. She rocked back and forth and shrieked with laughter. One convulsion followed another, caused by the look on Jedge's face, at which she could not resist an impulse to look from time to time. At last, she sank back exhausted, concluding with a prolonged and faint "O-h-h!"

"What you laughing at?" demanded Jedge, endeavoring to speak indignantly, but feeling that he had made a fool of himself.

"You should have bought more pillows," replied Mrs. Dal ironically.

"That little lady can sleep on nothin' but pillars if she wants to," declared Jedge, upon whom Mrs. Dal's irony was not lost. "She can carpet the floors with pillars—use 'em to kindle fire with. Can't she, pardners?"

"YES!" (Emphatic chorus)

"Jedge," said Mrs. Dal, "you and Calamity are two of the most darling dunces ever turned loose without a guardian. I laughed at you two because you are a pair of fools, and I admire you for the same reason. Your foolishness is the result of your kindness of heart: you bought too much because you were afraid you might not buy enough Boys," addressing the others, "stand by everything Jedge and Calamity did. If they bought a circus—ticket wagon, clowns and all—don't go back on them."

The advice was approved with a whoop.

"Any dolls?" queried the lady.

"You bet!" replied Jedge brightening. "It's human natur fer kids of the feminine sect to want to play with dolls, an' me an' Calamity pervided fer them wants."

"Good!" was the response.

Jedge was relieved: he had refrained from giving the number of dolls, fearing he and Calamity had overdone the matter and hoping to escape Mrs. Dal's ridicule.

"How many?" inquired Perfessor, whose curiosity had been aroused.

"War you addressin' me, Perfessor?" asked Jedge with poorly feigned carelessness, conscious that he had talked too much and hoping that the question would not be renewed.

"I asked how many dolls," was the reply.

"Twenty-five."

As he spoke, Jedge looked helplessly at Mrs. Dal. He escaped, but he could see by the twinkle of her eyes and the expression of her face that his escape was a narrow one. His relief was of but short duration, however.

"Any clothes?" she asked.

Jedge's jaw fell and he stared blankly at Calamity, and the latter returned the look.

"Calamity," said Jedge, "on the evening our little lady fust come, you called me an ediot. You shore addressed the right man."

"Jedge," was the reply, "on that same auspeecious occasion, you made some remarks reflectin' on my not compos mentis. Solomon wasn't deuce high beside you when you ventoored them same remarks."

PRIMER FOR RECRUITS.

Questions Are Answered for Would-Be Merchant Sailors.

The U. S. Shipping Board Service issues a little book called a "primer," containing 60 questions that are usually asked by would-be merchant sailors at the Board's drug-store recruiting stations, and answers to them.

Among the important answers are the following:

If you have reached your twenty-first birthday and have not reached your thirtieth birthday, you are eligible to enter the training service of the Merchant Marine.

If you are a registrant, and have not received a pink card calling you to camp, you are free to enter the Merchant Marine training service, and will receive exemption on so doing.

Your exemption will begin as soon as you go on board a training ship of the U. S. Shipping Board.

This service has no connection with the navy.

You do not enlist, but sign a contract to serve in the Merchant Marine during the war

Promotion in the Merchant Marine is rapid to men with an aptitude for sea life. Jobs will be permanent after the war.

The government does everything possible to give its recruits in the Merchant Marine a thorough working education in the business of a sailor.

Previous experience is not necessary to enter the training service.

If you do not know where the nearest recruiting station of the Merchant Marine is, ask your druggist. He will know the nearest druggist conducting an official station, and will be glad to tell you.

There are 6,854 of official enrolling stations in the country.

An apprentice who chooses the engine room branch of the service may advance from fireman to oiler or water tender, and after two years' service become eligible for a license as third assistant engineer.

DeKalb Co. Raises Quota

DeKalb county went over the top in the war savings drive, exceeding her quota of $501,000 by about $75,000. The exact figures are not known, but it is certain that every township but Keyser has raised its quota, and she may do so. Keyser over-subscribed the Liberty loan to such an extent that this last drive was hard to make. Waterloo and Richland carried off the honors, exceeding their respective allotments by 50 per cent.

A Sluggish Liver Needs Attention

An Inactive Liver Affects the Kidneys and Deranges the Stomach and Bowels.

Too much stress can not be placed on the necessity of keeping the liver in good condition; upon it the health of the body largely depends. When the liver becomes sluggish, the kidneys are overworked, the digestive fluids are not properly secreted and a languid, bilious, nervous or sick headachy condition results. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body. Constipation, bloating, dizziness, belching, pain or soreness in the right side, impaired vision and, in fact, most diseases have their origin in an inactive liver. An inactive liver is easily corrected if taken in time, but the only way to doctor is to get at the cause. Glando Tonic is a liver remedy that has a splendid record for renewing activity, removing the poisons and building up the system. For bilious attacks, it can not be beaten. Mothers who are nursing a baby should take Glando Tonic to keep the bowels well regulated. This will keep baby's bowels in a good condition. Glando Tonic is a three-in-one treatment that brings results. A trial will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials will be furnished upon request. Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be obtained by sending 50c direct to the Grand-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

WASHINGTON, D. C.

I sure have been gone from home a long time. I am well, and the boys say I am getting fat. I don't see how I can, for we take a hike every week from 7 to 10 miles, with a heavy pack which contains a shelter tent, two blankets, underwear, two pairs socks towel, comb, soap, tooth brush, five tent pegs, rope and tent pole, mess kit, canteen, bacon can and a can for sugar salt and coffee. That is about all besides our rifles. That pack I call my "home, sweet home" We have to cook our meals while we are out, but we don't have much to cook. We don't go hungry, though, for if there is no store close, we go to a farm house. Any farmer will give or sell anything he has to a soldier. They never turn us down. Where we camped last week, a farmer close by gave away all the fruit he had, I guess; and his wife had a colored woman helping her, and they baked biscuits for us just as fast as they could. My partner and I got two cans of peas and a dozen hot biscuits. Believe me, that was the best I have had to eat since I have been in the army. They wouldn't take a cent from any of us.

We have lots of fun here at times, not saying anything about the other times. But I have forgotten about home until after the war. A fellow pretty near has to.

I sure have a good captain and the higher officers are just fine.

Well, Sis, I had to stop writing and listen to a sermon. Of course, it didn't hurt me; and you wouldn't have known that I stopped if I hadn't told you.

I went down to the river this morning and tried to wash some clothes, but the water was so dirty that I will have to wash them over again. That doesn't matter, as I found two bars of soap. So I can give them a good soaping, and it will not take me long.

I am proud of my job now. When I see a fellow without a uniform on, I hardly notice him. I feel a lot better than he looks. So you and Everett had better not come down and see me, for I would hardly recognize you. To lay all jokes aside, I don't want too see any of my friends until I can stay with them.

HOMER A. DONLEY.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE,
May 26, 1918.

DEAR PAPA, MAMMA AND ALL:—

We arrived safely and had a fine trip—no storms and only a few days of rough seas. I fed the fish about three times. We had a band concert on the ship every day while coming. The weather is fine, but a little bit cool.

I am just fine so far. It seems as though we were out for a picnic, as we are camping in a grove.

You can look most any way and see a town, but they are different from our towns. The farms are very small, but seem to be well tended. I guess the people mostly live in the towns. The buildings are mostly of stone and brick. I don't believe I have seen one that is over four stories high. The street cars look as though they would not hold over two dozen people.

Just think, the first auto I saw was a Ford. So I felt at home right away.

There is quite a difference in the dress of these people and those at home. It is nothing to see a young lady wearing wooden shoes.

I bought some strawberries from a native girl this morning. They were large ones and, gee! but they were good.

We had church out in the open this morning, followed by a band concert.

Last night was my first in a dog tent. Its lots of fun so far. My buddy's name is Maddox from Hartford City. He is a fine fellow. Forrest Moore, who worked for Grover Poper, is in the next tent.

There are customs practiced here that would be very striking to the people at home. I will sure have a lot to tell you when I get home.

I remain, as ever, your son,

ALVY J. PLACE.

EVERYONE MUST HELP.

Wars cannot be fought without money, and upon the Treasury centers every financial demand upon the Nation.

The rich of this country cannot alone meet the needs of the Nation; the men of the country cannot do it alone; the women of the country cannot do it alone; but all of us, the people of the United States, disregarding partizanship, forgetting selfish interests, thinking only of the supremacy of right and determining to vindicate the majesty of American ideals and secure the safety of America and civilization, can do the great and splendid work which God has called upon us to do.

Obituary

LINA S., the eldest child and only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. B. S. Sheffer, was born in Cleveland, Ohio, on Dec. 5, 1876; and died died at her home, 3 miles northwest of St. Joe, at 4 a. m. on July 9, 1918, aged 41 years, 7 months and 4 days.

In April, 1882, her parents came to St. Joe, their daughter accompanying them, and here the remainder of her life was passed. Here, on April 16, 1902, she was united in marriage to John B Knight. To them five children were born—three sons who died in infancy and two daughters (Leora E., aged 13; and Dorothy A., aged 8). The latter, with their father, survive to mourn the loss of her whom inexorable death so suddenly took from them. Besides these, are the parents and one brother, Craig Sheffer, of Butler, and other relatives.

Mrs. Knight was a member of the Church of Christ, uniting when but a girl and continuing it its communion until her death. Funeral sevrices, conducted by her pastor, Rev. L. W. Spayd, will be held in the church at this place at 2 p. m. Friday. Interment will be at Alton cemetery.

Mrs. Knight's death came after a brief illness of only three days, and was due to pneumonia. She was attacked last Saturday morning shortly after breakfast; and the efforts of her father, assisted by Dr. B. O. Shook, were in vain, the end coming early Tuesday morning.

The remains were brought to the home of her parents Tuesday evening, and there they have been and will be until the funeral, giving all friends of the deceased lady an opportunity to take a last farewell.

Mrs. Knight's earthly work is done: nothing we can say can add to it; nothing we can say can take from it. The chrch, where she was faithful and active; the home, where she loved and was beloved; the community, where she was known and highly respected—all unite in telling her life's story.

Joins the Y. M. C. A.

O. E. Ginther made a flying visit home within the past week: he came Saturday evening and left on Monday morning. He came from San Antonio, Tex., where he had taken three weeks' work in the Y. M. C. A. traing school; and went to Camp Sherman, Chillicothee, Ohio, where he will enter the army service of the great Christian organization. His family expects to join him soon.

Mr. Ginther is well fitted for his new work: he has a pleasing personality, being what is commonly termed a "good mixer;" is a zealous Christian, with experience in the Newlin evangelistic company; and has been a student at Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, which he quitted to go to San Antonio.

Draft Men Organize

The selective draft men (classes 2, 3 and 4) met at the town hall last Monday evening and organized by electing the following officers:

Chairman.—Ray Herrick.
Vice President —Fred B. Leighty.
Secretary.—Merritt M. Maxwell
Treasurer.—Elmer Hart.

The object of the organization is a patriotic one. It is to unite the members so that they can more thoroughly do their bit here at home before being called upon to do it abroad. It is, strictly speaking, an anti-slacker, anti-disloyalty association. Thirty-two took the oath (a patriotic one) and subscribed to the constitution.

A Son Is Born.

Word was received here Monday morning by Mrs. Ella Patterson of the birth of a baby boy (weight, 7¾ pounds) to Ralph Patterson and wife, of Springfield, Ohio.

PRESIDENT SAYS PRUSSIAN RULERS FEAR OWN PEOPLE

Wilson Declares U. S. Will Not Consider Peace Until Foe Is Crushed.

SPEAKS AT MOUNT VERNON

Executive in Independence Day Address at Mount Vernon Asserts Kaiser Has Roused Forces Which He Knew Little Of and Which When Roused Can Never Be Crushed to Earth.

Mount Vernon, July 4.—That George Washington and his associates spoke and acted, not for a class, but for a people and that it has been left for us to see to it that it shall be understood that they spoke and acted, not for a single people only, but for all mankind and were planning that men of every class should be free and America a place to which men out of every nation might resort who wished to share with them the rights and privileges of free men, was the gist of a speech delivered by President Wilson at Washington's tomb today.

In the course of his address the president asserted that in the present world struggle the peoples of the world find themselves confronted by a selfish group of nations who speak no common purpose but only selfish ambitions of their own and by which none can profit but themselves and whose people are fuel in their hands.

Text of Address.

The text of the president's speech follows:

"Gentlemen of the Diplomatic Corps and My Fellow Citizens: I am happy to draw apart with you to this quiet place of old counsel in order to speak a little of the meaning of this day of our nation's independence. The place seems very still and remote. It is as serene and untouched by the hurry of the world as it was in those great days long ago when General Washington was here and held leisurely conference with the men who were to be associated with him in the creation of a nation. From the gentle slopes they looked out upon the world and saw it whole, saw it with the light of the future upon it, saw it with modern eyes that turned away from a past which men of liberated spirits could no longer endure. It is for that reason that we cannot feel, even here, in the immediate presence of this sacred tomb, that this is a place of death. It was a place of achievement. A great promise that was meant for all mankind was here given plan and reality. The associations by which we are here surrounded are the inspiring associations of that noble death which is only a glorious consummation. From this green hillside we also ought to be able to see with comprehending eyes the world that lies about us and should conceive anew the purposes that must set men free.

"It is significant—significant of their own character and purpose and of the influences they were setting afoot—that Washington and his associates, like the barons at Runnymede, spoke and acted, not for a class, but for a people. It has been left for us to see to it that it shall be understood that they spoke and acted, not for a single people only, but for all mankind. They were thinking, not of themselves and of the material interests which centered in the little groups of landholders and merchants and men of affairs with whom they were accustomed to act, in Virginia and the colonies to the north and south of her, but of a people which wished to be done with classes and special interests and the authority of men whom they had not themselves chosen to rule over them. They entertained no private purpose, desired no peculiar privilege.

Sought Freedom for All Men.

"They were consciously planning that men of every class should be free and America a place to which men out of every nation might resort who wished to share with them the rights and privileges of free men. And we take our cue from them—do we not? We intend what they intended. We here in America believe our participation in this present war to be only the fruitage of what they planted. Our case differs from theirs only in this, that it is our inestimable privilege to concert with men out of every nation what shall make not only the liberties of America secure but the liberties of every other people as well. We are happy in the thought that we are permitted to do what they would have done had they been in our place. There must now be settled once for all what was settled for America in the great age upon whose inspiration we draw today. This is surely a fitting place from which calmly to look out upon our task, that we may fortify our spirits for its accomplishment. And this is the appropriate place from which to avow, alike to the friends who look on and to the friends with whom we have the happiness to be associated in action, the faith and purpose with which we act.

"This, then, is our conception of the great struggle in which we are engaged. The plot is written plain upon every scene and every act of the supreme tragedy. On the one hand stand the peoples of the world—not only the peoples actually engaged, but many others also who suffer under mastery but cannot act; peoples of many races and in every part of the world—the people of stricken Russia still, among the rest, though they are for the moment unorganized and helpless. Opposed to them, masters of many armies, stand an isolated, friendless group of governments who speak no common purpose but only selfish ambitions of their own by which none can profit but themselves, and whose peoples are fuel in their hands; governments which fear their people and yet are for the time their sovereign lords, making every choice for them and disposing of their lives and fortunes as they will, as well as of the lives and fortunes of every people who fall under their power — governments clothed with the strange trappings and the primitive authority of an age that is altogether alien and hostile to our own. The past and the present are in deadly grapple and the peoples of the world are being done to death between them.

Settlement Must Be Final.

"There can be but one issue. The settlement must be final. There can be no compromise. No halfway decision would be tolerable. No halfway decision is conceivable. These are the ends for which the associated peoples of the world are fighting and which must be conceded them before there can be peace: 1. The destruction of every arbitrary power anywhere that can separately, secretly and of its single choice disturb the peace of the world; or, if it cannot be presently destroyed, at the least its reduction to virtual impotence.

"2. The settlement of every question, whether of territory, of sovereignty, of economic arrangement, or of political relationship, upon the basis of the free acceptance of that settlement by the people immediately concerned, and not upon the basis of the material interest or advantage of any other nation or people which may desire a different settlement for the sake of its own exterior influence or mastery.

"3. The consent of all nations to be governed in their conduct towards each other by the same principles of honor and of respect for the common law of civilized society that govern the individual citizens of all modern states in their relations with one another; to the end that all promises and covenants may be sacredly observed, no private plots or conspiracies hatched, no selfish injuries wrought with impunity, and a mutual trust established upon the handsome foundation of a mutual respect for right.

"4. The establishment of an organization of peace which shall make it certain that the combined power of free nations will check every invasion of right and serve to make peace and justice the more secure by affording a definite tribunal of opinion to which all must submit and by which every international readjustment that cannot be amicably agreed upon by the peoples directly concerned shall be sanctioned.

U. S. Can Never Be Crushed.

"These great objects can be put into a single sentence. What we seek is the reign of law, based upon the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind.

"These great ends cannot be achieved by debating and seeking to reconcile and accommodate what statesmen may wish, with their projects for balances of power and of national opportunity. They can be reached only by the determination of what the thinking people of the world desire with their longing hope for justice and for social freedom and opportunity.

"I can fancy that the air of this place carries the accents of such principles with a prouder kindness. Here where started forces which the great nation against which they were primarily directed at first regarded as a revolt against its authority but which has long since seen to have been a step in the liberation of its own people as well as of the people of the United States—and I stand here now to speak, speak proudly and with confident hope—of the spread of this revolt, this liberation to the great state of the world itself. The blinded rulers of Prussia have aroused forces they knew little of—forces which, once aroused, can never be crushed to earth again—for they have at their heart an inspiration and a purpose which are deathless and of the very stuff of triumph."

U. S. TROOPS LAND IN WAVES

Khaki Seen Everywhere at French Port—Even Americans Surprised at Speed.

At a French Port, July 5.—Americans stationed at this port are themselves astonished at the speed with which the American troops are arriving here. Wave after wave of men swarm ashore, sliding down the gangplanks, forming on the docks and marching to the camps with identification tags fluttering from the muzzles of their rifles.

The transports bring all the needed equipment, even to barracks in sections, with corrugated iron roofs. The negro stevedores pause in their work of handling the cargoes to swap jokes with the new arrivals over the termination of their cruise.

The whole of the big harbor is filled with transports, lighters, destroyers, tugs and unloading ships. The French are astonished at the number of U. S. troops arriving here in the last month.

WILL LOAD 52,000 SHELLS EACH DAY

GREAT GOVERNMENT PLANT IN NEW JERSEY TO START SHIPMENTS BEFORE LONG.

IS LARGEST IN THE WORLD

Three Others Like It Being Constructed—Medical Department Has Mobile Apparatus to Provide Pure Drinking Water in France.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—Quantity if not capacity shipments will start soon from a new government shell-loading factory in New Jersey, one of four such government plants each of which is larger than any similar plant in the world.

When turning out 52,000 loaded shells a day under full operation the plant will use 2,000 tons of shells and explosives daily, the products of some 75 factories. More than 5,000 workmen will be required. Plans contemplate the employment of a large number of women. The marking of shells to designate size, load and range will require 250,000 operations each day.

The plant has a total area of approximately 2,500 acres. More than 100 buildings, with an aggregate floor space of 1,300,000 square feet, will provide storage for shells and parts and for material. A small city, with heating and lighting plants, water and sewage systems, hospitals, fire-fighting plant and restaurants, was built to house the employees. There is equipment to protect the health of those who work with poisonous gases, and a school for instruction in the loading of artillery ammunition with high explosives.

The operating plant consists of 13 shell-loading units, each independent of the other, with equipment for loading 13 sizes of shells, ranging from the recently developed 7-millimeter to 16 inches. On two sizes of shells the propelling charge also will be loaded, the shell and cartridge case being assembled at the plant. All other shells are assembled in France.

In the construction of the shell-loading units the problem was far greater than one of mere building. Immense fans have been installed to dispose of the poisonous fumes from the high explosives. When a unit is in operation the air in the loading room is changed every few minutes.

The American soldier in France gets pure drinking water from mobile water trains. The trains are under the jurisdiction of the army medical department. They are miniature waterworks, which chemically treat, filter and sterilize water, making it fit for consumption. What municipal waterworks do to insure healthful water to the people of a city these trains do for the soldiers.

A number of purification units with attached motor-tank trucks constitute a train. Each unit is a complete filtration plant, including laboratory. Arriving at a stream it sets hose into the water and pumps the water through a pressure tank. Before the water passes through a sand filter it is treated chemically to rid it of disease germs. The pure water is pumped into tanks mounted on trucks, which carry the water to the soldiers.

Each mobile water unit carries an expert chemist, bacteriologist and pumpman. There is a complete laboratory in the front of the machine for the testing of the water. Tests are made every two hours or more often when it is thought necessary. The water is lifted into the filter by a gasoline pump engine and a complete supply of extra pipes and tools are carried so that all repairs, either from accident or shell fire, can be made on the spot. The trucks are equipped with electric lights so that the work can be carried on at night. Many of the chemists and bacteriologists assigned to the mobile laboratories were formerly connected with municipal waterworks and filtration plants.

Every community will be combed for war workers. War industries are short nearly 400,000 common laborers and lack of workers in the coal-mining industry is imperiling all war production. There is also a serious shortage of skilled labor. One of the largest munition plants, turning out heavy caliber guns, is short 2,000 machinists. The war plants of Connecticut and Maryland are undermanned 35,000 machinists.

The United States employment service will begin an intensive recruiting of workers for war work from the nonessential industries. Employment offices will be increased and the force of local agents and traveling examiners will be enlarged and sent into every community that relief may be given before the ban against private labor recruiting goes into effect on August 1.

Nearly 2,000,000 girls and boys have volunteered for the United States garden army in the department of the interior. Their service flag bears a crossed rake and hoe with the letters U. S. S. G. in blue on a field of white with a red border. The enlistment entails a pledge on the part of the child to use efforts to increase food production by cultivating one or more crops under a garden supervisor or teacher chosen for this work and to make such reports as may be required. The success of the garden army plan is most gratifying.

Ensign Stephen Potter, United States Naval Reserve force, killed in action with German planes April 2 last, was the first American naval aviator to shoot down and destroy a German seaplane, according to a navy department statement.

The report states that on March 19, 1918, a long-distance reconnaissance of the German coast was made by large American flying boats operating from a British Royal Air force station. Ensign Potter was one of two American naval aviators accompanying this expedition and Potter was successful in shooting down a German seaplane which attacked the reconnaissance formation. A second enemy seaplane found safety in running away.

Potter's death reflects credit on his courage. He was killed in a fight with seven enemy single-seaters. He was second pilot to a British air force captain, who was with him when he shot down the German plane in March. Two British planes had flown to a point six miles from Hinder light, when two enemy planes headed toward them. The British planes closed on the nearest German and opened fire. Two more hostile planes then appeared overhead and attacked vigorously while three other enemy planes passed astern. The two British planes dived and speeded westward under continuous volleys from the rear. One of the Germans disappeared.

Of the seven Germans in action four were attacking Potter, who fell behind his companion and began to zigzag. Potter dodged, but was broadside to all the enemy machines and under their fire only 50 feet from the water. His companion, 250 feet above, saw Potter's machine burst into flame, come part of the way under control, then crash on the port wing tip. Potter was seen last on the surface of the water amid flames, which turned suddenly to a huge cloud of smoke. When the pall had cleared not even wreckage was visible and the circling enemy disappeared.

German timidity before American pistol fighters armed with American .45-caliber automatic pistols has brought about a change in the equipment of the American Expeditionary forces by the war department and the ordnance department is rushing production of these weapons. About 3,000 are turned out daily and production is increasing. The impression exists that a shot from an American .45 takes a man out of action completely. Men hit from the smaller German pistols frequently continue in action effectively. The .45 caliber was adopted by the United States army in 1911.

Despite the heavy increased demand for these pistols the ammunition branch of the ordnance department has effected a saving during the past two calendar months of nearly $2,000,000, mostly on small-arms ammunition.

The total savings by the ordnance department for these two months through salvage, waste prevention and the utilization or sale of discarded materials have aggregated $8,757,025. Cost of Vickers machine guns has been reduced $322.35 each; Colt machine guns, $284.16 each; Lewis machine guns, $22 each. Government rifles now cost $22 each, a reduction of $13 each.

Health of women workers in munition plants will be looked after by woman health officers who are to be trained under the direction of the women's division of the industrial service section of the army ordnance department.

An eight weeks' course of study for carefully selected woman health officers has opened at Mount Holyoke college, Massachusetts. The course is under the general direction of Dr. Kristine Mann, health supervisor of the women's branch of the ordnance department. The staff of lecturers and instructors includes well-known specialists in physiology and hygiene, physical education, factory organization and labor.

Women taking the course are college graduates or of equivalent technical education. Almost all of them have had experience in dealing with working women. First requirement for admission to the course is perfect health and only those were selected who will inspire wholesome living among the munition workers.

The army has sufficient veterinarians, Surgeon General Gorgas announces. Examinations for commissions in the veterinary corps have closed. There is a waiting list of those eligible to commissions and until this list is exhausted there will be no more examinations. The corps has 1,700 officers and 10,000 enlisted men on active duty.

Veterinary graduates called by the draft will enter the army service as privates. Later they will be allowed to take examinations for veterinary officer commissions to fill vacancies. Men over the draft age and under forty may enlist as privates and secure an equal chance with selected men for commissions. One hundred men are graduated each month from the training school for commissioned veterinary officers on active duty at Camp Greenleaf, Chickamauga Park, Ga.

The department of labor reports adjustment of 30 industrial disputes during a recent week. This is a record. Eleven strikes and two threatened strikes were adjusted. Included in the strikes settled was that of machinists at the Curtiss Airplane company plant, Buffalo, where 300 men quit and 15,000 were affected indirectly.

The division headquarters at Camp Lee is within a stone's throw of the spot where the house stood that housed Grant and his staff during the siege of Petersburg.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Indianapolis. — The Indiana state board of pardons has recommended to Governor Goodrich that paroles be granted three life-term murder prisoners in Indiana's penal institutions. It also has recommended a pardon for a paroled "lifer." In the strongest report sent to the governor in many terms the pardon board, following its June session, has recommended two pardons, eighteen paroles and four commutations of sentences. Governor Goodrich has approved the recommendations. The three life prisoners, for whom parole is recommended, are Rufus Warren, convicted as a party to killing a policeman in Madison county; George Stroud, sentenced to prison for life from Madison county, and who saved the life of a guard at the Michigan City prison some time ago when another prisoner sought to kill the guard, and John Fenninger, sentenced from Vanderburg county, December 1, 1902, for life for murder. Oscar Savage, sentenced from Knox county in 1910 for life for murder, will obtain release under a commutation of sentence recommended by the board, the sentence being two to twenty-one years.

Indianapolis.—County school superintendents have been instructed by Horace Ellis, state superintendent of instruction, to discontinue using school money to pay teachers engaged in agricultural instruction in the summer vacation. Mr. Ellis has received an opinion adverse to this practice from Ele Stansbury, attorney general, who takes the attitude that although federal necessity is apparent for the conservation of food products, no such necessity should break down the statutes of the state. The attorney general is of the opinion that public schools can be maintained only when they are open to all pupils, and this would not be the case if faculties for instruction were afforded children on farms and in gardens.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich expressed satisfaction when told that the Indiana supreme court had upheld the constitutionality of the state prohibition law. He sounded a warning to public officials in certain part of Indiana, who are charged with the duty of enforcing the law's provisions, and who have not been enforcing the statue. The governor said: "If the law is strictly enforced, I have no doubt but that the benefits thereby flowing to the people of the state will amply justify the wisdom of the general assembly in passing it. In case local authorities refuse to do their duty, the attorney general has ample power to step in and enforce the provisions of the law."

Indianapolis.—At a meeting here between E. I. Lewis, chairman of the public service commission; coal operators and miners, high officials of Indiana railroads, representatives of the federal fuel administration and J. W. Coneys, representative of the federal railroad administration for Indiana, it was decided that Chairman Lewis should direct a communication to the national railroad administration on the shortage of coal cars in the Indiana field, and particularly on shortages on the Pennsylvania lines in Indiana.

Gary.—An unknown person entered the home of John Forsgren in Tolleston and attacked his wife, Myrtie, and his three-year-old son with an ax. Mrs. Forsgren is dead of her injuries and a new-born son also is dead. The older boy is in a critical condition. A neighbor found the mother and child and reported the discovery to the police. A man about forty years old, with a kaiser mustache, was seen to leave the Forsgren house.

Lafayette. — More than 800 wheat fields of pure varieties, free from disease and weeds, have been located in every county in the state and will be used for seed purposes this fall. These fields were located and inspected by represntatives of the Purdue department of agricultural extension United States department of agriculture, and county and emergency agents and wheat committees. This is the first step in the 1919 wheat production campaign.

Terre Haute.—With the end of the fiscal year, collections of internal revenue from the seventh internal revenue district totaled $21,585,154.52, the largest collection of any year in the history of the office. Collections during the month of June this year were the largest of any month in the history of the office, a total of $5,739,-

Terre Haute.—Coal production in Indiana for the week ending June 29 showed a slight increase over the previous week, it is announced here at the office of the Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' association. A total of 589,395 tons were hoisted during the week. The report, however, also shows an increase in the car shortage which was 14.21 per cent, in comparison to 13.33 per cent for the preceding week. The additional tonnage possible to mine with a full car supply was 122,600 tons.

South Bend.—Detachments of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh field artillery and One Hundred and Fifty-first infantry, composed of soldiers from South Bend, Elkhart, Warsaw, Plymouth, Laporte, Michigan City and other northern Indiana cities have landed in France. Messages announcing the arrival of the men in the war zone are being received by the parents of the men who for the last three weeks were puzzled because of the nonarrival of mail from Camp Shelby, Miss., where the soldiers had been stationed. Further good reports are daily expected.

Indianapolis.—There is usually a friendly rivalry among millers of a community to get the first new crop wheat. In Indianapolis the honor this season goes to the Acme-Evans company, and among the growers to Henry L. Harding, former county commissioner, whose farm is west of the city. He delivered the first wagon load early last week. It was good-looking grain, large and of fine quality. It was accepted as the customary top grade, No. 2 red, and the owner received $2.08 a bushel for it, the prevailing price of old crop wheat last season. Tested afterward, it was found to be in reality No. 3, the moisture content being slightly above the figure entitling it to grade No. 2. Millers say this shows effects of recent heavy rains and indicates that farmers should give their fine crop plenty of time to dry out before marketing. July 2 is an unusually early date for wheat to arrive at Indianapolis. Millers have to go back ten years or more for earlier delivery. They recall that one year in this period of distant past the first load of wheat arrived at an Indianapolis mill June 28.

Indianapolis.—Among the appeals which will be heard by the state tax board during its present session, which will continue until July 13, are some of the largest public utilities operating in Indiana, who are seeking a lower appraisement than that placed upon them by the various county boards.

Lafayette.—Because of war conditions the executive board of the Indiana Horticultural society has decided not to hold an apple show this year. This show, which has been an annual event, has been a potent factor in the aggressive campaign of the society during the past eight years for more and better Indiana apples. The society will not relax its educational efforts. The annual meeting will be held as usual and a special meeting for gardeners and truck men from the north part of the state will be held in Elkhart county in August.

Indianapolis.—Indiana is on a strict sugar ration. In addition to statements of quantities of sugar on hand, dealers and manufacturers using or handling this commodity, are required to give detailed information concerning their requirements, and subject themselves to still further radical restrictions in the consumption of sugar for the months of July, August and September. J. E. Larger, head of the sugar division in the office of Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, has prepared a supplementary classification that will require all distribution hereafter (except that for household consumption) to be on a certificate basis.

Indianapolis. — Deep concern for the corn crop in Indiana, which was frosted June 23, especially in the northern section and extending as far south as Indianapolis, was expressed during a conference between M. E. Foley, chairman of the state council of defense, and T. A. Coleman, head of the agricultural extension department of Purdue university. Mr. Foley, who has visited a number of northern Indiana counties, said the situation was desperate and that immediate steps would have to be taken if the farmers of the section affected were to grow enough feed to last them through the coming winter.

Muncie.—The average damage to the corn crop as a result of the frost June 23 will be only 10 to 15 per cent. Farmers are surprised at the rapidity with which supposedly dead stalks are coming out. Practically no damage was done to corn on clay ground. Wheat stacking will be generally done in Delaware county while the public elevators are crowded in getting wheat to market. There are numerous elevators, but they have insufficient capacity to take care of the harvested crop. Only a few farmers have enough bin space to store wheat.

Salem.—Farmers estimate that recent rains will be worth thousands of dollars to them. Corn and garden products were beginning to suffer severely from the continued drought. The first wheat has been thrashed and shows a yield of 24 bushels per acre. Practically all the wheat and rye in the county has been cut.

Seymour.—Hundreds of bushels of new wheat are being received at the elevators and mills in this city. Most of the grain that has been marketed has tested 58 to 61 pounds a bushel and has been graded as standard No. 2. The local price is $2.08. In a few parts of the county the yield has been reduced by the work of the red weevil.

Jeffersonville.—Hugh A. Stevens, county agricultural agent, estimates the wheat acreage of Clark county 15 per cent above normal, which is 15,000 acres. He says that the yield should run 20 per cent better than normal, which is 14 to 15 bushels to the acre. Thrashing is in progress. It is fully a week earlier than normal.

Shelbyville.—The first wheat thrashed in Shelby county this year has been marketed here. It was from a field of 17 acres and averaged 18 bushels to the acre. It weighed 60 pounds. Grain dealers estimate the average yield in Shelby county at 20 bushels to the acre.

South Bend.—The Sixth congressional district was reported by the state war savings committee as having raised its entire quota for the year in War Savings stamps, sales and pledges. The quota for the district was $2,650,090. District Chairman R. B. Ayres of Fortville expects that the final tabulation will show a large oversubscription. While plans for the future are not fully developed by the Indiana war savings committee it was announced here that for the remainder of the year greater emphasis will be laid upon the war savings societies and stales stations.

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

MACHINE GUNNER, SERVING IN FRANCE

©1917 BY ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

EMPEY, QUESTIONING A GERMAN PRISONER, FINDS HE IS FROM NEW YORK.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Chaplain distinguishes himself by rescuing wounded men under hot fire. With pick and shovel Empey has experience as a trench digger in No Man's Land. Exciting experience on listening post detail. Exciting work on observation post duty. Back in rest billets Empey writes and stages a successful play.

At one point of the line where the trenches were very close, a stake was driven into the ground midway between the hostile lines. At night when it was his turn, Tommy would crawl to this stake and attach some London papers to it, while at the foot he would place tins of bully beef, fags, sweets, and other delicacies that he had received from Blighty in the ever looked-for parcel. Later on Fritz would come out and get these luxuries.

The next night Tommy would go out to see what Fritz put into his stocking. The donation generally consisted of a paper from Berlin, telling who was winning the war, some tinned sausages, cigars, and occasionally a little beer, but a funny thing, Tommy never returned with the beer unless it was inside of him. His platoon got a whiff of his breath one night and the offending Tommy lost his job.

One night a young English sergeant crawled to the stake and as he tried to detach the German paper a bomb exploded and mangled him horribly. Fritz had set a trap and gained another victim which was only one more black mark against him in the book of this war. From that time on diplomatic relations were severed.

Returning to Tommy, I think his spirit is best shown in the questions he asks. It is never "who is going to win" but always "how long will it take?"

CHAPTER XX.

We were swimming in money, from the receipts of our theatrical venture, and had forgotten all about the war, when an order came through that our brigade would again take over their sector of the line.

The day that these orders were issued, our captain assembled the company and asked for volunteers to go to the Machine Gun school at St. Omar. I volunteered and was accepted.

Sixteen men from our brigade left for the course in machine gunnery. This course lasted two weeks and we rejoined our unit and were assigned to the brigade machine gun company. It almost broke my heart to leave my company mates.

The gun we used was the Vickers, Light .303, water cooled.

I was still a member of the Suicide club, having jumped from the frying pan into the fire. I was assigned to section 1, gun No. 2, and the first time "in" took position in the front-line trench.

During the day our gun would be dismounted on the fire step ready for instant use. We shared a dugout with the Lewis gunners. At "stand to" we would mount our gun on the parapet and go on watch beside it until "stand down" in the morning. Then the gun would be dismounted and again placed in readiness on the fire step.

We did eight days in the front-line trench without anything unusual happening outside of the ordinary trench routine. On the night that we were to "carry out," a bombing raid against the German lines was pulled off. This raiding party consisted of sixty company men, sixteen bombers, and four Lewis machine guns with their crews.

The raid took the Boches by surprise and was a complete success, the party bringing back twenty-one prisoners.

The Germans must have been awfully sore, because they turned loose a barrage of shrapnel, with a few "Minnies" and "whizz bangs" intermixed. The shells were dropping into our front line like hailstones.

To get even, we could have left the prisoners in the fire trench, in charge of the men on guard and let them click Fritz's strafeing but Tommy does not treat prisoners that way.

Five of them were brought into my dugout and turned over to me so that they would be safe from the German fire.

In the candlelight, they looked very much shaken, nerves gone and chalky faces, with the exception of one, a great big fellow. He looked very much at ease. I liked him from the start.

I got out the rum jar and gave each a nip and passed around some fags, the old reliable Woodbines. The other prisoners looked their gratitude, but the big fellow said in English, "Thank you, sir, the rum is excellent and I appreciate it, also your kindness."

He told me his name was Carl Schmidt, of the Sixty-sixth Bavarian Light infantry; that he had lived six years in New York (knew the city better than I did), had been to Coney island and many of our ball games. He was a regular fan. I couldn't make him believe that Hans Wagner wasn't the best ball player in the world.

From New York he had gone to London, where he worked as a waiter in the Hotel Russell. Just before the war he went home to Germany to see his parents, the war came and he was conscripted.

He told me he was very sorry to hear that London was in ruins from the Zeppelin raids. I could not convince him otherwise, for hadn't he seen moving pictures in one of the German cities of St. Paul's cathedral in ruins.

I changed the subject because he was so stubborn in his belief. It was my intention to try and pump him for information as to the methods of the German snipers, who had been causing us trouble in the last few days.

I broached the subject and he shut up like a clam. After a few minutes he very innocently said:

"German snipers get paid rewards for killing the English."

I eagerly asked, "What are they?"

He answered:

"For killing or wounding an English private, the sniper gets one mark. For killing or wounding an English officer he gets five marks, but if he kills a Red Cap or English general, the sniper gets twenty-one days tied to the wheel of a limber as punishment for his carelessness."

Dead Bodies Everywhere.

Then he paused, waiting for me to bite, I suppose.

I bit all right and asked him why the sniper was punished for killing an English general. With a smile he replied:

"Well, you see, if all the English generals were killed, there would be no one left to make costly mistakes."

I shut him up, he was getting too fresh for a prisoner. After a while he winked at me and I winked back, then the escort came to take the prisoners to the rear. I shook hands and wished him "The best of luck and a safe journey to Blighty."

I liked that prisoner, he was a fine fellow, had an Iron Cross, too. I advised him to keep it out of sight, or some Tommy would be sending it home to his girl in Blighty as a souvenir.

One dark and rainy night while on guard we were looking over the top from the fire step of our front-line trench, when we heard a noise immediately in front of our barbed wire. The sentry next to me challenged, "Halt, who comes there?" and brought his rifle to the aim. His challenge was answered in German. A captain in the next traverse climbed upon the sandbagged parapet to investigate—a brave but foolhardy deed—"Crack" went a bullet and he tumbled back into the trench with a hole through his stomach and died a few minutes later. A lance corporal in the next platoon was so enraged at the captain's death that he chucked a Mills bomb in the direction of the noise with the shouted warning to us: "Duck your nappers, my lucky lads." A sharp dynamite report, a flare in front of us, and then silence.

We immediately sent up two star shells, and in their light could see two dark forms lying on the ground close to our wire. A sergeant and four stretcher-bearers went out in front and soon returned, carrying two limp bodies. Down in the dugout, in the flickering light of three candles, we saw that they were two German officers, one a captain and the other an "unteroffizier," a rank one grade higher than a sergeant general, but below the grade of lieutenant.

The captain's face had been almost completely torn away by the bomb's explosion. The unteroffizier was alive, breathing with difficulty. In a few minutes he opened his eyes and blinked in the glare of the candles.

The pair had evidently been drinking heavily, for the alcohol fumes were sickening and completely pervaded the dugout. I turned away in disgust, hating to see a man cross the Great Divide full of booze.

One of our officers could speak German and he questioned the dying man.

In a faint voice, interrupted by frequent hiccoughs, the unteroffizier told his story.

There had been a drinking bout among the officers in one of the German dugouts, the main beverage being champagne. With a drunken leer he informed us that champagne was plentiful on their side and that it did not cost them anything either. About seven that night the conversation had turned to the "contemptible" English, and the captain had made a wager that he would hang his cap on the English barbed wire to show his contempt for the English sentries. The wager was accepted. At eight o'clock the captain and he had crept out into No Man's Land to carry out this wager.

They had gotten about halfway across when the drink took effect and the captain fell asleep. After about two hours of vain attempts the unteroffizier had at last succeeded in waking the captain, reminded him of his bet, and warned him that he would be the laughing stock of the officers' mess if he did not accomplish his object, but the captain was trembling all over and insisted on returning to the German lines. In the darkness they lost their bearings and crawled toward the English trenches. They reached the barbed wire and were suddenly challenged by our sentry. Being too drunk to realize that the challenge was in English, the captain refused to crawl back. Finally the unteroffizier convinced his superior that they were in front of the English wire. Realizing this too late, the captain drew his revolver and with a muttered curse fired blindly toward our trench. His bullet no doubt killed our captain.

Then the bomb came over and there he was, dying—and a good job too, we thought. The captain dead? Well, his men wouldn't weep at the news.

Without giving us any further information the unteroffizier died.

We searched the bodies for identification disks but they had left everything behind before starting on their foolhardy errand.

Next afternoon we buried them in our little cemetery apart from the graves of the Tommies. If you ever go into that cemetery you will see two little wooden crosses in the corner of the cemetery set away from the rest.

They read:

Unteroffizier

Empey and his machine-gun company go "over the top" in a successful but costly attack on the German trenches. The story of this thrilling charge is told in the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Be Above Gossip.

Gossiping is about the most useless kind of work one could possibly engage in. How much better and more charitable it is to turn a deaf ear to cruel truths, to honorably keep silent about what we have heard, and at the same time give the unfortunate person in the case the benefit of our doubt. "Small wits talk much," is an old saying and a true one. The girl or woman who would be truly happy, and who incidentally would make others happy, should wisely think twice before she speaks, and then should put into words only thoughts that are cheering and charitable.—New York Evening Mail.

His Duty Done.

The family is rather demonstrative when the various members of the household come and go. The grandchildren are expected to embrace every one at the beginning and at the end of a visit. Fred and Albert were getting into their clothing and making their hasty adieux preparatory to catching their train home after Christmas. "Hurry up, Fred," Albert shouted; "you're too slow for anything. I've got mine all kissed."

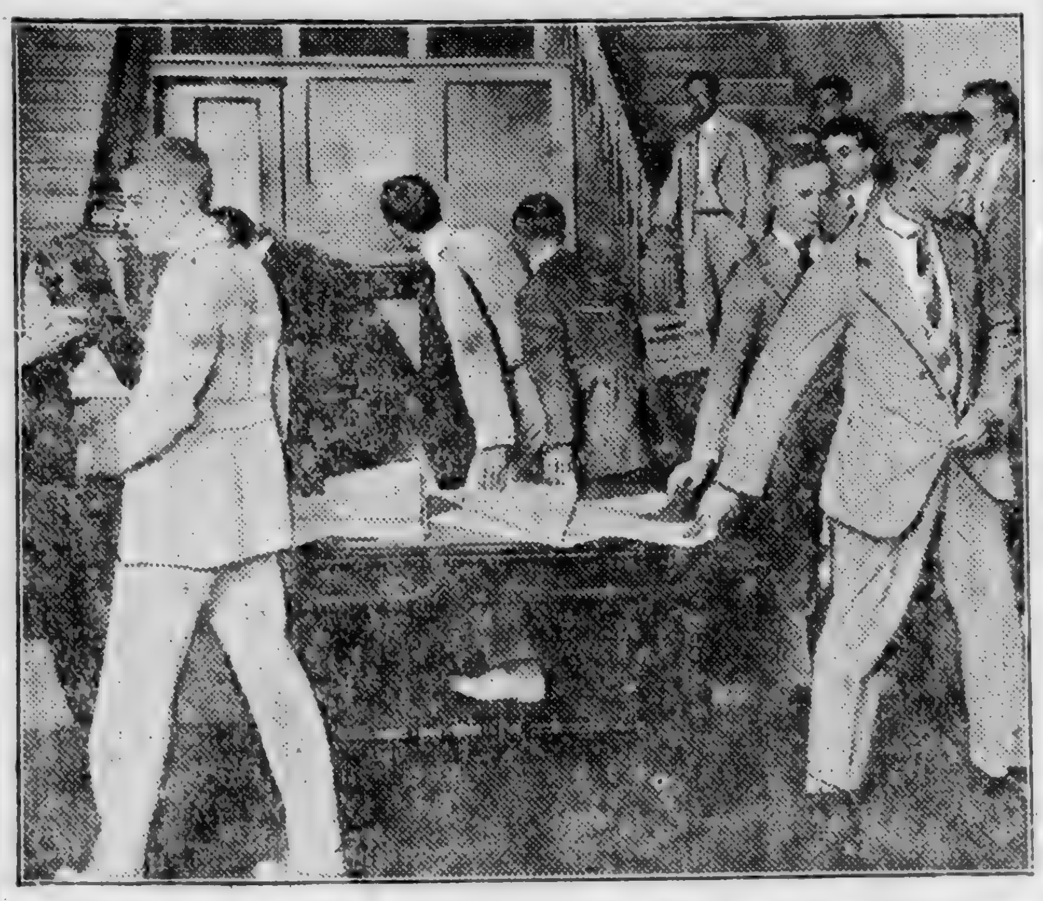
SECRECY GUARDS CROP REPORTS



Press Representatives Awaiting Signal for Release of Crop Report.

ACCURACY IS AIM IN CROP REPORTS

Department of Agriculture Gathers Information on American Food Production.

STRICT SECRECY MAINTAINED

Forecasts Reflect Efforts of Farmers for Maximum Yields and Have Immediate and Marked Effect on Various Markets.

Dependence of a large part of the world upon American farm production has focused public attention upon the crop reports of the United States department of agriculture—reports which the United States government sponsors and protects from illegal use to the ultimate degree.

Just now the crop reports are reflecting the efforts of American farmers for maximum production. When small crops are reported the news serves to prepare the country and enable necessary adjustments.

Strict Secrecy Rules.

The crop reports, too, have an immediate and marked effect upon the markets. Their great importance in this field has made necessary thorough safeguards against premature publication and unauthorized use. Every avenue through which information might be filtered from the locked rooms where the reports are finally prepared is closed and remains closed until the second, when, as shown in the picture, the signal for release is given.

On "crop reporting day" at an hour set months in advance, newspaper and press association representatives gather in the main building of the department of agriculture. Each has near at hand a telephone already connected with his office and at the other end of the line is a man equipped with a blank crop reporting form. Shortly before the moment set copies of the completed crop reports are placed on a table, face down, and each newspaper man gets his hand on one. At the signal, given by a high official of the department, the newspaper men get to their telephones and in a very few minutes more the coveted information is being read in every large market in the United States and the next day, at the latest, it is available in every community of the United States and in the larger markets of foreign countries.

Big Organization Works.

The "release" of the crop reports follows work in which tens of thousands and sometimes hundreds of thousands of persons all over the country have participated.

Distributed over the country are 42 salaried field agents, one in each state or group of small states. The bureau also employs ten crop specialists, one each for cotton, rice and tobacco, who travel through the regions in which their special crops are grown. In addition there are approximately 175,000 voluntary crop reporters, including county and township reporters and producers, buyers and handlers of grain and live stock.

Tabulation of Crop Information.

The returns from each class of reporters are tabulated and averaged separately as a check against the others.

To prevent a total for any of the so-called speculative crops, such as corn, wheat, oats, barley, rye and cotton, from becoming known to any person prior to the time fixed in advance, even the tabulators and computers who make up the totals do not know the states to which they pertain. The final telegraphic reports and comments of the field agents relating to the speculative crops are kept locked in the office of the secretary of agriculture until crop reporting day, when they are turned over to the crop reporting board and the entire board is immediately locked in until the minute that the report is issued, guards being stationed at the doors and all telephones disconnected.

Each member of the crop reporting board prepares his own individual and independent estimate for each crop and state. These are compared, discrepancies are discussed and explained and a final figure is adopted by the board.

Data Complete.

The crop reporting board has before it more complete, detailed and accurate data than any other crop estimating agency in the world. Members of the board and all other department employees concerned with crop estimates are prohibited by law under severe penalties from speculating in any product "of the soil," from giving out advance information and from knowingly compiling or issuing false statistics.

ACCURACY OF CROP REPORTS.

Wherever it has been possible to secure an absolute check the crop reports of the department of agriculture have usually been found to be surprisingly accurate.

Wheat will be added to the few crops for which an additional check will be made available through the new requirements by which all threshermen must report to the bureau of markets of the department the quantity of wheat thrashed and the acreage from which it was produced.

No Open House for Rats.

Do not keep "open house" for rats by leaving basement doors ajar for ventilation without proper safeguards. The management of a large department store in an eastern city recently had a very expensive lesson in this regard. Rats had been doing damage to the extent of nearly $1,000 a month, but by persistent trapping were finally exterminated. The building was then made "rat-proof." But after a time rats were again at their work of destruction.

Puzzled to know how the pests had gained entrance, the management learned that in summer the night watchman was accustomed to leave a basement door open for ventilation. Naturally the rats entered and another campaign of extermination had to be waged. This expense could easily have been prevented, says the bureau of biological survey of the department of agriculture, if a piece of sheet iron three feet high had been placed across the doorway and the sides of the doorway sheeted with metal or otherwise made smooth so that rats could not gain a foothold. Rats cannot climb over such barriers, as they do over mesh or crossed wires.

PACKING FRUIT FOR MARKET

Good, Clean and Attractive Packages Count for More Than Inexperienced Man Realizes.

The commercial grower knows that good clean packages and honest attractive packs count a great deal—more than the inexperienced man realizes. Fruit coming from the Pacific coast, where good packages and professional packers are appreciated, finds a ready sale and good prices. Eastern growers have learned many a lesson in fruit packing from their Western brothers. The Western product outsells that produced in the Central and Eastern states because of the very attractive pack of the former. While the quality of certain classes of the Pacific grown fruit is no better than Eastern grown stock, yet it is so carefully sorted and packed that it at once catches the eye of the fruit purchasers and adds at least 25 per cent to the selling value of Western grown fruit.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

GET OUT OF THE LIQUOR BUSINESS, UNCLE SAM.

In every honest business transaction there are three parties concerned, the seller, the buyer, and the community generally. The business which gives profit or gain to one party and fleeces either of the other two parties is a swindle. Test the liquor traffic by this standard and mark the result. Two men, Brown and Green, each have one thousand dollars. Brown spends his money in whisky. Result: The whisky seller gets the thousand dollars and makes a profit. Brown has parted with his thousand dollars and got—nothing, plus impaired health, ruined character, degraded life, and perhaps a criminal record. The community is impoverished by the amount of waste of wealth of one of its members, plus the poverty, disorder, accident, crime, etc., which attends his drinking, and the consequent taxation involved. Green spends his money in building a house with the following results: The builder gets the money and makes a profit on the transaction; Green has parted with his money, but now has a house equal in value to the money, plus the comfort, increased advantages, social standing and credit which attends a property owner. The community is benefited by the wise expenditure of one of its members, together with the proportion of taxes which the property will pay. Every citizen is interested in every new building, no matter who is the owner. The legislation which gives license to waste, and takes a revenue from it, is doing the worst that can possibly be done for the resources of my country.—Prof. John A. Nicholls.

TWO CARDINALS.

Cardinal Gibbons, America:

"I am opposed to any state-wide or nation-wide prohibition measure. A law of this kind interferes with the personal liberty and rights of the people and creates hypocrisy on the part of the public. The history of the world down to the present time demonstrates the fact that the people have and always will indulge in intoxicants, irrespective of any restraining power that it is attempted to saddle upon them."

Cardinal Mercier, Belgium:

"You who hold the Christian faith look around you at those who suffer from the effect of alcoholism. Can we be insensible to the spectacle of this misery and pass by on the other side? No, indeed! I am only discharging my duty as a Catholic, as a priest, as bishop, in coming to co-operate with you in the struggle against alcoholism. While waiting for our government to take action, we have a right to take action, we have no right to be inactive. Private initiative should act without delay. And first of all be educating public opinion, preparing the way for intervention by law."

Which is the more civilized—the more Christian—view?

COAL VS. BEER.

"It takes almost a pound of coal to produce a pint of beer," asserts E. H. Leach, assistant state fuel administrator of Ohio.

"If the Lusitania were now floating the seas, the coal used annually in the manufacture of beer in this country would furnish fuel for 726 round trips for the giant ship and transport 28,595,000 tons of supplies to the allies.

"Coal used for the manufacture of beer in Ohio alone would furnish more than 60 round trips and carry nearly 2,000,000 tons of supplies a year to the allies.

"It requires 180,000 cars, or 3,000 trains a day to move the raw materials to the breweries.

"We have heard a great deal about the grain in the beer and about the sugar in the beer, but we have heard little about the coal in beer. Coal is one of the principal ingredients."

BUILDING THE CACTUS HEDGE.

While in Arizona I saw the peculiar bird caller a road runner; and I learned that when he meets a rattlesnake, instead of having a bloody encounter with him, he begins to pick off the cactus and surrounds the snake with a circle of cactus pieces; then he picks them up piece by piece and puts them closer to the snake until the poisonous reptile is shut in a close place and, unable to cross the cactus hedge, he stings himself to death. That is what we are doing with the traffic that biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. We are shutting him up in close quarters in a few wet cities and a few backward states; and in this close confinement we are going to let him sting himself to death.—William Jennings Bryan.

NEW MARKET FOR CALIFORNIA GRAPES.

What may prove a death blow to the wine interests of California is the new plan being advocated by the viticulture department of the University of California to extract sugar from grapes. Not only will this new process revolutionize the canning industry of the state but the wine grape growers will have a new market for their product and their chief reason for opposing prohibition will lose its force.—The Union Signal.

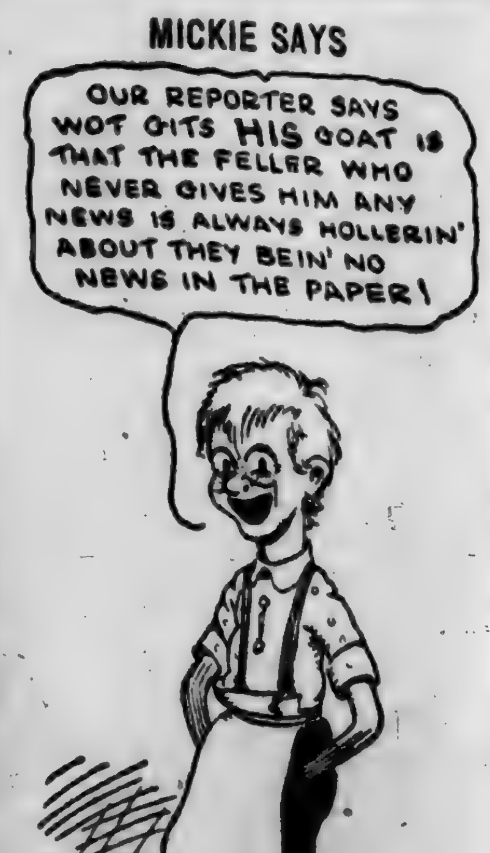
MICKIE SAYS



OUR REPORTER SAYS WOT GITS HIS GOAT IS THAT THE FELLER WHO NEVER GIVES HIM ANY NEWS IS ALWAYS HOLLERIN' ABOUT THEY BEIN' NO NEWS IN THE PAPER!

Important---NEWS Readers.

THE NEWS very reluctantly is obliged to do what nearly all other similar publications are and have been doing—advance its subscription price. This will occasion no great surprise among its readers, who are aware of the great increase in the cost of doing business. Everything that the printer uses is higher. This is especially true of print paper, which has been the subject of congressional investigation. The general rising costs have caught newspaper publishers all along the line. For months, we have been repeatedly asked if the subscription price was still $1.00; and so we know that our forced increase, as previously stated, will occasion no great surprise. We have refrained from taking this action as long as possible, and held the paper at $1.00 per annum until compelled to make an advance.

Subscription Price Will Be Advanced

Beginning July 1, our subscription price will be $1.25 per year—strictly in advance. That our readers may not think we are making this advance without due notice, the new rate, though in effect on July 1, will be waived for all who pay their subscriptions during July. All arrearages must, of course, be paid at time of renewal. If you settle your subscription at any time before Aug. 1, the rate will be $1.00, as heretofore. After that date, all accounts will be figured at $1.25 per year, dating from July 1. A special effort will be put forth to make the paper better than ever before, and we confidently ask for the continued support of our big family of readers.

Advertising rates also will be increased July 1. This is rendered necessary for the same reason that subscription is advanced. The new scale of prices will be made known on application.

Remember, all payments on subscriptions received during the month of July will be at the old rate, $1.00 per year. This applies to new subscribers and to renewals. All accounts unpaid at the end of that time will be left for collection. We have been lenient—too lenient—and a few are indebted to us for subscriptions. They must settle, either voluntarily or forcibly. We hope for no trouble.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

Indiana hotels and restaurants have been directed by Dr. Barnard to refrain from placing on their menus or serving boiled beef for more than two meals weekly, beefsteak for more than one meal a week; and roast beef for more than one meal a week. Householders are asked under no circumstances to buy more than one and one-fourth pounds of beef per week, clear, or one and a half pounds with bone, for each member of the household. The use of pork and pork products in substitution is urged. The rule is expected to hold until September 15.

For making a false affidavit that they had not purchased any sugar on contract, the establishment of Zarafonetis Brothers of Clinton, Indiana, was ordered closed by Dr. Barnard. The firm was found to have 2,000 pounds of sugar in transit from a Chicago wholesale house when it made application for an allotment of 9,100 pounds for ice-cream and candy making purposes. Dr. Barnard directed William C. Walt, food administrator of Vermillion county, to close the place.

George K. Johnson, president of the Indianapolis Retail Grocers' Association, has joined the staff of Dr. Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, to have charge of the retail grocers' division. He will work without compensation, and devote himself immediately to the task of establishing a system of price reporting and interpretation, such as has been effective in maintaining uniform retail prices in other states.

John H. Bergdoll, county food administrator for Ripley county, was authorized by Dr. Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, to seize all sugar in excess of 25 pounds shipped into his county for individual consumption. Mr. Bergdoll reported the shipment of 100 pounds of sugar from the Kroger Grocery and Baking Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, to Mary Shook of Milan, Indiana. The firm has been warned against this infraction of the rule.

Every church and every lodge in Indiana has been asked to nominate a member who shall serve as a deputy food administrator. The chief duty to be asked of these deputies is to assist in the dissemination of information and literature bearing upon the food administration's program.

A Suspicious Character

By WILLIAM HAMILTON OSBORNE
Of The Vigilantes

The other day in the city where I live there was a patriotic parade. It was announced that every patriot was expected to uncover when the Stars and Stripes swept by. During the parade everybody did it.

Standing on the curbstone was an unkempt individual, with straggly hair, and a wild, desperate eye, who kept looking about him uneasily, when the crowd pressed against him he hitched himself away, but he must have seen the hats come off as the colors swept down the thoroughfare. When the flag was only half a block away, this man lifted his hand but instead of removing his hat he drew it farther down upon his head. His action was noticed.

"Uncover!" yelled somebody in the crowd. The crowd, like a lot of children, forgot all about the flag passing, and turned its attention to the man who hadn't taken off his hat.

"Where is he—where is he?" people asked.

"Uncover there—uncover," cried stentorian voices.

The man turned about and his hand strayed to his hat again. It seemed as though he was about to remove it. But three men pressed close to him—threateningly.

"You take your hat off, do you hear!" they shouted at him.

He drew away from them and pulled it more firmly down upon his head.

"Take that hat off—or I'll knock it off," cried one of the three men.

The wild-eyed man shook his head and kept drawing away.

"Uncover," cried the crowd, surging against the four principals, "make him uncover there."

"Slacker," yelled somebody.

"Traitor," cried somebody else.

The three men seized the offender and laid violent hands upon his hat.

The man clung to it desperately, throwing all his strength into his grasp. Then a police officer forced his way through the crowd.

"Officer," said one of the three men, "take this man in charge. We'll come with you. We'll make a complaint."

The officer seized the man by the arm.

"I will go—with you," gasped the man, "but not with them—not with them."

The three men followed the officer. The crowd trailed on behind, until they reached the nearest precinct station.

The culprit was led before the magistrate. As the man entered the courtroom, he took off his hat and bowed. The police officer stated his case—the three men made their complaint.

"Well," demanded the judge fiercely, "is this true?"

The offender bowed. "What they say is true," he admitted.

"Well," demanded the magistrate, impatiently, "what have you got to say for yourself?"

The man bowed. "Judge," he began, "I live all alone—and I am afraid of burglars—"

The crowd that had trailed in laughed. The judge looked sternly at the man.

"Afraid of burglars," sneered the magistrate. "Is that the reason you didn't take your hat off to the flag?"

"No," the man returned, "but I am afraid of pickpockets."

"What's that got to do with it?" demanded the court.

"This," returned the man, "at my room I hide away my securities. But I am afraid if I leave them there they will be stolen, so I put them in my pocket."

"What's that got to do with it?" snapped the magistrate.

"When I saw the crowd," went on the wild-eyed man, "I was afraid my pocket would be picked. So I stepped into a corner and took all my securities and put them in my hat. And then these three men—these three, who look so much like pickpockets, they crowded close to me. And I took them to be pickpockets. And, though I saw the flag coming, I knew what would happen if I removed my hat. I knew these three men would snatch it from me, and take all I have."

The magistrate eyed the wild-eyed man with a cold eye.

"Good story," he said to the officer. "See what he's got in his hat."

The officer jerked the hat away from the offender and turned its contents out on the bench before the judge. The inside rim was stuffed with papers. Then he separated these papers and spread them out upon the desk. This is what he found:

One certificate of membership in the Red Cross.

One Red Cross receipt for a contribution of $100 marked "Thanks" across the bottom.

A letter from the man's boy at the front, saying that he had been pretty badly wounded and was not expected to live.

A newspaper clipping sent out by the war department, announcing his death.

A war department letter confirming it.

A funeral notice, published three months later, announcing the death of the boy's mother here in town.

Five unregistered Liberty loan bonds of the denomination of $100 each.

The magistrate beckoned to the three men. Silently he exhibited the contents of the hat to them.

"Now, gentlemen," said the magistrate, "is there any one of you patriots who invested five hundred dollars in the Liberty loan, or who is a member of the Red Cross, or who has contributed a hundred dollars to the Red Cross, or who has lost a boy at the front, or who has a boy at the front? That's what I'd like to know."

The three patriots looked at each other, looked at the judge, looked at the wild-eyed man, looked at the cop, and then, with a grand manner of pickpockets, softly and silently slunk away.

Moral: How easy it is to make a noise like a patriot! Also, you can't most always tell!

ABOARD THE TRANSPORT

By AUGUSTUS THOMAS
of the Vigilantes.

I haven't told our secret, dear,
  Since my good-by to you;
But flowers and birds were singing it,
  And flags and ribbons flinging it,
And golden sunshine bringing it
  Down every breeze that blew.

It filled me as we crossed the pier
  To march aboard the boat
With every band a playing it,
  The stepping feet a saying it,
The singing tars belaying it;
  Filled eyes and heart and throat.

The story still goes on by night
  Though all the bunting's furled;
The tightening ropes are rattling it,
  The speeding waves are prattling it
The whispering stars are tattling it
  And telling all the world.

I know when we get where they fight
  And beckoning death shall call,
Where bursting steel is shelling it,
  And flaming guns are belling it,
And deadly hate is helling it,
  Our love will last them all.

PHANTOMS

By WILLIAM HAMILTON OSBORNE
of the Vigilantes.

In Seattle, Wash., during one of the Red Cross drives, I was one of an audience of 3,000 people that crowded a huge motion picture theater on a Saturday night. There was a special appeal made from the platform for immediate contributions. The result of this appeal was the immediate subscription of $30,000—or $10 a head, for every man, woman and child in the audience. As that large audience surged out into the brilliantly lighted street I noted that the street was occupied by a goodly company of soldiers, drawn up at attention, saluting the audience as it went by. There must have been 500 of them. I stepped to the curbstone and approached the commanding officer, who saluted as I came.

"Who," I queried, "are these men—what are they doing here?"

The officer smiled—his eyes flashed. "These," he said, "are the 500 members of the National army whose lives are going to be saved because your audience this evening contributed $30,000 to the Red Cross fund."

He finished speaking to me. He turned and gave an order. On the instant the 500 soldiers vanished into thin air. And then I realized that they weren't there—they hadn't been there at all, save in my imagination. They were phantoms.

But—were they phantoms? Do they exist? They were not in that street ranged up before that theater—are they anywhere? They are not phantoms—they do exist—and they are somewhere today either in the trenches or about to enter them. They may be in France—they may be here—but they are real, those 500 men whose lives will be saved by that audience who subscribed that evening their average of $10 apiece. How many men are there whose lives will not be saved because there's nobody to put up the cash? Are they phantoms, too? Let us hope they are.

HOW TO SAVE $1,000,000

By JULIET WILBOR TOMPKINS
of the Vigilantes.

Of course, you bought an extra Liberty bond; that is, one more than you had expected to, or thought that you could afford. You bought it because the need was so rubbed into you that you could not hold back. Now sit down and calculate what it cost to sell you that extra bond. Put down all the items; printing, engraving, advertising, mailing, telephoning, shoe leather, man-power and office-room diverted from their normal earning—the bill is so big that you are appalled at having to pay it. For you do pay it. It has all got to come out of you, sooner or later, somewhere. There is no mysterious well-spring of money to meet such expenditures. The country pays.

Before the next Liberty loan campaign—and there will be a next, and a next, if we don't want to be annexed by Germany—suppose we face that enormous bill, size it up fairly, and decide that we can't afford it. Then let every citizen become his own bondseller. All he has to do is to shout at himself what the sellers of bonds are shouting at him: that it's your money or your life, these days, and that those who, safe at home, give their money, have the easy end of the load. You have to lift yourself by your own bootstraps, that's all. Try it. It's an exhilarating exercise, and far more dignified than being hoisted.

In England and France, you know, they don't have to get up vaudeville shows to sell their war bonds. The Huns attend to all that—they give performances on the roof.

Asparagus waste now furnishes a good quality of cellulose, this having been accomplished through the discovery of a German scientist.

tanned or freckled

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle, sunburn and tan lotion, and complexion beautifier, at very, very small cost.

Your grocer has the lemons and any drug store or toilet counter will supply three ounces of Orchard White for a few cents. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day and see how freckles, sunburn, windburn and tan disappear and how clear, soft and white the skin becomes. Yes! It is harmless.—Adv.

Goose Was a Fighter.

Fighting a goose a man had an exciting experience at Grand Lake, Newfoundland, the other day. The man was goose hunting, and it being after nightfall he had a searchlight rigged upon his boat, when he came upon two geese in the distance perched upon a piece of ice. He fired and struck one of the birds. He hastened to secure it, when the other attracted by the light flew right on board the boat, and for a considerable time both huntsman and bird fought with each other upon the dark waters of Grand lake.

Most people who keep diaries for any length of time keep them for sale.

Paper Fabrics in Norway.

The Nydalens company, one of Norway's leading textile manufacturers, has for some time been experimenting with paper textiles, and the results have been so good that its factory will soon produce these new fabrics on a large scale, according to a commercial agent report from Copenhagen. They consist of 75 per cent paper and 25 per cent cotton and are said to be soft and warm; a little heavier than ordinary cotton goods and not quite so strong, but cheaper. They should be especially suited, says the Norwegian press, for blouses, dresses, curtains, and, in short, as a substitute for cotton goods in general.

The Christiania sejlugsfabrik (sail cloth factory) has also been experimenting with paper as a substitute and has obtained some promising results.

What Made Him Laugh?

An impertinent young man once declared that women positively could not keep a secret, whereupon a would-be youthful lady naturally took issue with him, stating that she had kept one since she was twenty-one.

"But you will let it slip some day," said the impertinent young man.

"No, I won't," she rejoined. "I think that when I've kept it for twenty years I come pretty near knowing how."

He laughted with an air of self-satisfaction.

Are the Packers Profiteers?

Plain Facts About the Meat Business

The Federal Trade Commission in its recent report on war profits, stated that the five large meat packers have been profiteering and that they have a monopoly of the market.

These conclusions, if fair and just, are matters of serious concern not only to those engaged in the meat packing business but to every other citizen of our country.

The figures given on profits are misleading and the statement that the packers have a monopoly is unsupported by the facts.

The packers mentioned in the report stand ready to prove their profits reasonable and necessary.

The meat business is one of the largest American industries. Any citizen who would familiarize himself with its details must be prepared for large totals.

The report states that the aggregate profits of four large packers were $140,000,000 for the three war years.

This sum is compared with $19,000,000 as the average annual profit for the three years before the war, making it appear that the war profit was $121,000,000 greater than the pre-war profit.

This compares a three-year profit with a one-year profit—a manifestly unfair method of comparison. It is not only misleading, but the Federal Trade Commission apparently has made a mistake in the figures themselves.

The aggregate three-year profits of $140,000,000 was earned on sales of over four and a half billion dollars. It means about three cents on each dollar of sales—or a mere fraction of a cent per pound of product.

Packers' profits are a negligible factor in prices of live stock and meats. No other large business is conducted upon such small margins of profit.

Furthermore—and this is very important—only a small portion of this profit has been paid in dividends. The balance has been put back into the businesses. It had to be, as you realize when you consider the problems the packers have had to solve—and solve quickly—during these war years.

To conduct this business in war times, with higher costs and the necessity of paying two or three times the former prices for live stock, has required the use of two or three times the ordinary amount of working capital. The additional profit makes only a fair return on this, and as has been stated, the larger portion of the profits earned has been used to finance huge stocks of goods and to provide additions and improvements made necessary by the enormous demands of our army and navy and the allies.

If you are a business man you will appreciate the significance of these facts. If you are unacquainted with business, talk this matter over with some business acquaintance—with your banker, say—and ask him to compare profits of the packing industry with those of any other large industry at the present time.

* * *

No evidence is offered by the Federal Trade Commission in support of the statement that the large packers have a monopoly. The Commission's own report shows the large number and importance of other packers.

The packers mentioned in the statement stand ready to prove to any fair-minded person that they are in keen competition with each other, and that they have no power to manipulate prices.

If this were not true they would not dare to make this positive statement.

Furthermore, government figures show that the five large packers mentioned in the report account for only about one-third of the meat business of the country.

They wish it were possible to interest you in the details of their business. Of how, for instance, they can sell dressed beef for less than the cost of the live animal, owing to utilization of by-products, and of the wonderful story of the methods of distribution throughout this broad land, as well as in other countries.

The five packers mentioned feel justified in co-operating with each other to the extent of together presenting this public statement.

They have been able to do a big job for your government in its time of need; they have met all war time demands promptly and completely and they are willing to trust their case to the fairmindedness of the American people with the facts before them.

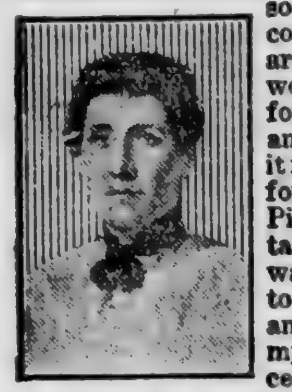
"BEST MEDICINE FOR WOMEN"

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did For Ohio Woman.

Portsmouth, Ohio.—"I suffered from irregularities, pains in my side and was so weak at times I could hardly get around to do my work, and as I had four in my family and three boarders it made it very hard for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me. I took it and it has restored my health. It is certainly the best medicine for woman's ailments I ever saw."—Mrs. SARA SHAW, R. No. 1, Portsmouth, Ohio.



Mrs. Shaw proved the merit of this medicine and wrote this letter in order that other suffering women may find relief as she did.

Women who are suffering as she was should not drag along from day to day without giving this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial. For special advice in regard to such ailments write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of its forty years experience is at your service.

INSTANT ACTION CALLED FOR

Wrangell, Alaska, Said to Be Without a Resident Physician, and That Won't Do.

Members of the medical profession, alert to its interests, should go out of their way to see that the doctorless town of Wrangell, Alaska, is supplied with a physician forthwith, that is, if the void has not been filled within recent days. Wrangell has been without a doctor for some time, and is announcing that a horse doctor will do if the regular kind cannot be supplied.

Every day that Wrangell enjoys robust health without a physician in its midst is a potential menace to the business of all the brethren of the profession. Some man with a nose for news is likely to bore into comparative death rates any day. How would the brethren like to read a calm statement to the effect that Wrangell's death rate has decreased 8 per cent in the last four months? And it might easily happen, Alaska being so blooming healthful, anyway.

How is anybody in Wrangell to know that he has appendicitis, or gallstones, or impossible tonsils, or adenoids, or arteriosclerosis, unless a resident pill sharp is there to tell him?

There are a lot of people who will fret and lose flesh if they are not quite sure what they have to worry about. The reported void at Wrangell should be filled, and forthwith.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

The Piano at the Front.

Lieut. Reginald B. Jones, formerly organist at the Commercial Street Baptist Church, Newport (Mont.), writing from France, says:

"The padre came along on Sunday evening, and our battalion had an open-air service while the shells were whistling over and the German planes hovering. We salved an old piano from a ruined cottage. It had seven notes missing and three holes from shells in it, but we mended the wires with telephone wire and string. I played it for the service, the fitter having 'tuned' it. In spite of the great discords we had fine, hearty singing."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaped Union.)

LESSON FOR JULY 14

READING GOD'S WORD.

LESSON TEXT—Psalms 19:7-11; Acts 8:26-39.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.—John 8:32.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Psalms 37:31; 119:9-16; Proverbs 13:13; Isaiah 55:8-11; John 5:39-46-47; Romans 15:4.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Psalms 119:9-16, 97-105.

I. Characteristics of God's Word (Ps. 19:7-11).

The Psalmist here sets forth six descriptive titles of God's Word, six outstanding qualities, and six resultant effects.

FIRST GROUP—

1. Title: "The Law of the Lord" (v. 7).

By this is meant the fundamental principles which God as a moral being reveals to the consciences of men as binding upon the soul.

2. Quality: "Perfect" (v. 7).

It is free from omissions and redundancies. It is perfect as a moral code, and it perfectly accomplishes man's salvation.

3. Effect: "Converting the Soul" (v. 7).

The practical effect of the law of God is to turn men to God himself, righteousness and holiness.

SECOND GROUP—

1. Title: "The Testimony of the Lord" (v. 7).

It is the witness which God bears as to his attributes, and against man's sins.

2. Quality: "Sure" (v. 7)

It is plain and infallible. We can repose in it our interests for time and eternity.

3. Effect: "Making Wise the Simple" (v. 7).

The simple are those who have humble, open and teachable minds.

THIRD GROUP—

1. Title: "The Statutes of the Lord" (v 8).

These are the principles or charges which the Lord gives to us all, to fit us to rightly perform the duties which the different relations of life make obligatory upon us.

2. Quality: "Right" (v. 8).

They are from the righteous God and are absolutely just and equitable.

3. Effect: "Rejoicing the Heart" (v. 8).

The true heart rejoices in justice and equity.

FOURTH GROUP—

1. Title: "The Commandment of the Lord" (v. 8).

This brings into view the personal God who stands back of his law to enforce its demands—to require obedience to its precepts.

2. Quality: "Pure" (v. 8).

It is free from deceit and error.

3. Effect: "Enlightening the Eyes" (v. 8).

The effect of God's law is to give man ability, not only to understand his love and salvation, but to be wise as to the things about him.

FIFTH GROUP—

1. Title: "The Fear of the Lord" (v. 9).

Reading the Word of God produces reverential fear in the heart of the reader.

2. Quality: "Clean" (v. 9).

It is not only clean in itself, but sanctifies the heart of those who receive it.

3. Effect: "Enduring Forever" (v. 9).

The life and relationship founded upon his law abide forever.

SIXTH GROUP—

1. Title: "The Judgments of the Lord" (v. 9).

By this is meant the sentences pronounced by God's Word.

2. Quality: "True and Righteous" (v. 9).

The penalties prescribed by God are true, conformable to the intuitive moral sense of man.

3. Effect: "Serve as Warnings and Bring Reward" (v. 11).

If the warnings be heeded, shipwrecks upon life's sea will be prevented. Besides God pays a wage for obedience to his laws. Godliness is profitable unto all, having the promise of the life that now is, and that which is to come.

II. A Notable Example of Bible Study (Acts 8:26-39).

1. Who It Was (v. 27).

The Ethiopian eunuch, a man of great authority. He was the secretary of the treasury of the Ethiopian queen. The wisest and best men and women of the earth have been reverent students of the Bible and have testified to its beauty and power.

2. The Circumstances of (v. 28).

It was while traveling that this great man was studying the Bible. This is a most excellent way to improve moments while on a journey.

3. Doing Personal Work (vv. 29-37).

Philip was taken from his great evangelistic work in Samaria and directed to go to the desert. The Spirit directed Philip to join himself to the chariot in which the Ethiopian was traveling. Philip ran in obedience to the Spirit's command. One should be alert for the Spirit's direction as for the individual with whom to do personal work. The eunuch was inquiring after the way of life. But still he needed the help of a Spirit-taught man.

ON THE FUNNY SIDE

HE WAS GLAD.

An aching tooth is not the best friend in the world, and this fact was demonstrated by a country justice of the peace when, suffering with the trouble, he was called upon to unite a rural couple in marriage.

The justice's irritability was not lessened any when the prospective husband informed him that he would not be expected in this case to kiss the bride.

"Thank you," snapped the justice. "Under those circumstances I shall charge you only one-half the usual fee."

He Found It.

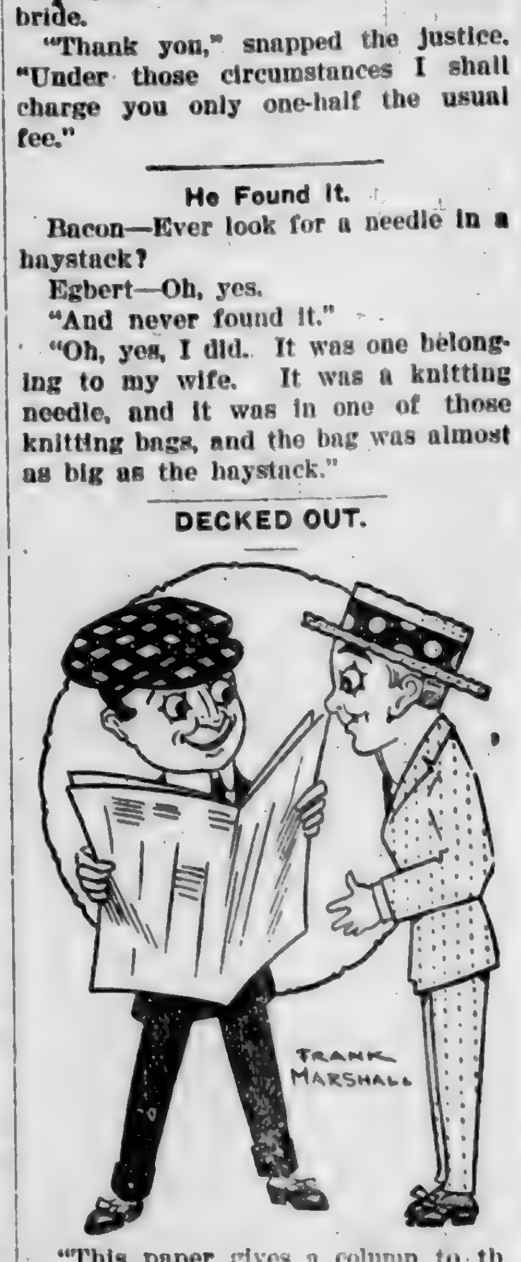
Bacon—Ever look for a needle in a haystack?

Egbert—Oh, yes.

"And never found it."

"Oh, yes, I did. It was one belonging to my wife. It was a knitting needle, and it was in one of those knitting bags, and the bag was almost as big as the haystack."

DECKED OUT.



"This paper gives a column to th bride's costume. What did the groom wear?"

"A scared look."

Foocy!

A bill collector is Bill Blose,
And he was heard to say:
"Don't put off till tomorrow those Who can be dunned today."

Some Shooter.

Redd—And he thinks he's a good shot?

Greene—Does he? Say, he thinks he makes a hit every time he opens his mouth.

Drawing the Line.

"Did the girl's father kick at your paying her attention?"

"Yes, but I wouldn't have minded if that had been the only kicking he did."

Safety First.

"You make it a rule never to smoke when filling your car with gasoline."

"Yes," declared Mr. Chuggins. "When I buy gasoline I can't afford to smoke."

His Way.

"Henry VIII used a reverse way with his wives."

"How was that?"

"He married them first and axed them afterwards."

A Business Paradox.

"A business man I knew is in a very paradoxical position."

"How so?"

"He is in a hole for want of an opening."

Cheering Observation.

"Life is full of ups and downs."

"Yes, but they're working the right way now. The thermometer is going up and the price of eggs going down."

No Bond of Sympathy.

"That woman seemed to bore you."

"Yes, I'm bald-headed, as you see. All she could talk about was the trouble she has in washing her hair."

Nothing Alarming.

"Is it true there is a ferment in our neighbor's family?"

"Quite true. She told me their preserves were working."

Home Still Safe.

"Drink and tobacco have wrecked homes."

"They haven't wrecked mine," protested Mr. Meekton, indignantly.

"Are you addicted to drink and tobacco?"

"No, I'm not. But my wife is very fond of tea and cigarettes."

He Knew.

Bridegroom—Just look at that young wife. Doesn't she look queenly?

Friend—Yes, she does; but wait until she begins to rule.

A Great Responsibility.

THE responsibility attached to the preparing of a remedy for infants and children is undoubtedly greater than that imposed upon the manufacturer of remedies for adults whose system is sufficiently strong to counteract, for a time at least, any injurious drug. It is well to observe that Castoria is prepared today, as it has been for the past 40 years, under the personal supervision of Mr. Chas. H. Fletcher.

What have makers of imitations and substitutes at stake? What are their responsibilities? To whom are they answerable? They spring up today, scatter their nefarious wares broadcast, and disappear tomorrow.

Could each mother see the painstaking care with which the prescription for Fletcher's Castoria is prepared: could they read the innumerable testimonials from grateful mothers, they would never listen to the subtle pleadings and false arguments of those who would offer an imitation of, or substitute for the tried and true Fletcher's Castoria.

Mrs. Mary McGinnis, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "We have given our baby your Castoria ever since she was born, and we reccommend it to all mothers."

N. E. Calmes, of Marion, Ky., says: "You have the best medicine in the world, as I have given your Castoria to my babies from first to last."

Mrs. Albert Ugusky, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., says: "As I have had your Castoria in use for nearly three years, I am pleased to say it is just as represented. My children are both well and happy—thanks to Castoria."

R. P. Stockton, of New Orleans, La., says: "We began giving your Castoria to our baby when he was eight days old and have kept it up ever since, never having had to give any other medicine."

Mrs. Dolph Hornbuckle, of Colorado Springs, Colo., says: "We commenced giving your Castoria to our baby when she was four weeks old. She is now seven months and weighs 19½ pounds. Everyone remarks: 'What a healthy looking baby.' We give Castoria credit for it."

Get New Kidneys!

The kidneys are the most overworked organs of the human body, and when they fail in their work of filtering out and throwing off the poisons developed in the system, things begin to happen.

One of the first warnings is pain or stiffness in the lower part of the back; highly colored urine; loss of appetite; indigestion; irritation, or even stone in the bladder. These symptoms indicate a condition that may lead to that dreaded and fatal malady, Bright's disease, for which there is said to be no cure.

Do not delay a minute. At the first indication of trouble in the kidney, liver, bladder or urinary organs start taking Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules, and save yourself before it is too late. Instant treatment is necessary in kidney and bladder troubles. A delay is often fatal.

You can almost certainly find immediate relief in Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules. For more than 200 years this famous preparation has been an unfailing remedy for all kidney, bladder and urinary troubles.

It is the pure, original Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used. About two capsules each day will keep you toned up and feeling fine. Get it at any drug store, and if it does not give you almost immediate relief, your money will be refunded. Be sure you get the GOLD MEDAL brand. None other genuine. In boxes, three sizes.—Adv.

Of No Value to Him.

"Can you give me any quotations from the Bible," asked the pious-looking individual of his friend, the stockbroker.

"Well, I can have one of the boys look them up, but I don't believe you will find them of much assistance at this late date," returned the other.

JUST HIS LITTLE MISTAKE

Of Course Soldier Could Not Be Blamed, but It Was an Unfortunate Error.

The anonymous author of "Nursing Adventures," tells an amusing story of a soldier brother of hers, who came to crave her hospitality for a brief period at a clearing hospital "somewhere in France."

He was caked all over with mud, so as a preliminary he was sent to wash in the kitchen. I left him (she writes) getting off layers of mud into a bucket of warm water. Later he joined us.

"Have you emptied your bucket?" I asked, as I had not heard the heavy door open.

"Oh, yes," he replied; I emptied it down the kitchen sink."

A horrid thought came to me.

"There is no sink!" I exclaimed, "only the well of drinking water in the corner."

Sure enough it was there the dirty water had gone, and some one even murmured that the coffee that night had a flavor not its own.

True.

CHAPTER IV.

Mrs. Dal, who had been endeavoring to restrain herself that she might hear what the "boys" had to say, could keep still no longer.

"Oh, Calamity! Oh, Jedge! The idea of sending two innocents like you on an errand that requires the brains of a chickadee, to say nothing of sending you to provide for the needs of a little kid! If you hadn't made fools of yourselves, I'd have lost all regard for you—you're so good that you can't help making dunces of yourselves. You forgot to buy Margaret any clothes;" and then she added ironically: "I suppose you forgot to buy her a shot gun, too."

"She'll need a shot gun sometime," replied Jedge in defensive tones that plainly indicated that they had bought the article in question—"ev'rybody in these parts does, an' so will our little lady."

"Good!" exclaimed Mrs. Dal affecting a serious look. "I was afraid you'd forget to buy her a gun. There is nothing a little six-year-old girl needs more, unless," she again became ironical, "it's a kitten. Did you buy a couple of coffins, Jedge?"

"No!" answered Jedge in surprise.

"You should have done so: everybody in these parts needs one sometime, and so will you and Calamity. But I hope," ceasing to be sarcastic and speaking kindly, "that you two won't need coffins until long after this little one on my lap has become big enough to handle the gun. Boys," addressing the entire thirteen, "after all, I think it is for the best that Jedge and Calamity forgot to buy clothes. No one, not even the angels in heaven, know what these two delightful dunces would have done if they had set out to buy clothes for a girl. Leave that to me, boys."

"Mrs. Dal's called the turn an' the chips is her'n," declared Perfessor. To this the others assented, none more willingly than Jedge and Calamity.

"That thar little lady is our'n an' we must do the payin'," interposed Deacon.

"Certainly," assented Mrs. Dal.

"Draw on us fer all the money you want: nothin's too good if it takes a whole trainload o' steers to buy it," put in Fiddler.

"An' if that ain't 'nuff"—

Calamity spoke, but Mrs. Dal cut him short.

"A hundred dollars will do," she said.

Deacon shook his head doubtfully. "Di'mond rings an' troosows cost money," he declared.

"An' it's human natur fer the feminine sect to like to be dressed up in rings an' jooelry," urged Jedge.

"What this little girl needs now is good warm clothes. When she gets older, her thirteen fool daddies will see that she has jewelry enough—of a kind to turn the head of an African princes, too." Here the good woman drew closer to herself the innocent cause of all this talk "Little girl, you are not thinking of getting married now, are you? So, you won't need a trousseau for a few years. Time enough for that when you get big and the duke or earl comes courting."

"The duke or earl that comes pesticatin' 'round our little lady will be the unfort'nate cause o' mournin' in his ancestral halls," growled Fish Hook, emphasizing his words by laying a hand on his right hip.

"The parson will deal cases over him an' he won't hear the rattle o' the chips," added Peddler.

"Well, boys, you don't stand any chance of being bothered by any duke or earl for a good many years; but I'll bother you right now for a hundred dollars."

"All right—you know what you want," assented Deacon in a manner that plainly said that he doubted whether she did.

"Now, little girl," said Mrs. Dal, "before we go, kiss your daddies. No kid ever had more of them or better ones."

"More'n Katie an' all of 'em good," cried the child as she ran to her first friend, Dutch. The warm hearted German caught her up and gave her a kiss, which she returned. The others appeared to regard the kissing of the little girl as a serious matter. Each one, in turn, gravely picked her up as if undergoing an ordeal and passed her on to the next, using as much care as he would in handling a rare piece of fragile bric-a-brac.

CHAPTER V.

In due time, Queen Margaret, comfortably arrayed by motherly Mrs. Dalrymple, took possession of her castle, where, for six years, she ruled over her thirteen subjects. She was humored and petted and, quite naturally, spoiled. She soon became as capricious as was Elizabeth of England and as imperious as was Catherine of Russia. These attributes of royal greatness endeared her to those who served about her court. One stamp of her foot and none hesitated to obey his sovereign. They did so because it amused them to be ordered about by this mite of humanity; and for the far greater reason that back of her ever stood the abandoned child with the appealing look whose first words to them were: "You'll be good to me—won't you, daddies?" None of them dared to offend his queen through fear of causing the child pain: the daily life of each was an answer to that first appeal. She was what they had made her and what they wanted her to be—happy and free. God, who pardons the vilest sins, certainly closes his eyes against those errors that are but the result of an excess of love.

Margaret was an ambitious queen, judging ambition by the standard of other absolute rulers She could not, like Alexander the Great, conquer the world; but Paradise Lost, the only world she knew, was reduced to submission The few children of the place were an easy conquest. Royalty is surrounded by toadies, who bend the knee as a reward for favors; and Queen Margaret lavished favors among her little courtiers. A few disputed her authority, but these yielded after the first battle. She flew at them with the ferocity of a wild cat and pummeled, scratched and bit them into recognizing her authority. The male portion of the adults worshipped her. Her imperiousness and pugnacity delighted them, and they taught her to use the very weapons that she turned against them. The females did not count—there were so few of them—all but one and she was the power behind the throne, Mrs. Dal When the two were alone, the queen forgot her royalty and became what she naturally was—a simple, loving, trusting child.

Margaret was a hoydenish queen She was not afraid to mount a bucking broncho; and once she was safely in her saddle, she would urge her pony through the streets, swaying from side to side in sheer recklessness and exuberant animal spirits, her hair streaming out behind from under a sombrero, and shout warning of her coming; and Paradise Lost, without exception, stood aside for her to pass. Other accomplishments included ability to handle a gun and hit the bull's eye at thirty paces, to throw a rope, to threaten Deacon's ascendancy as the champion swearer of the place and an unrequited ambition to chew tobacco and smoke cigarettes.

Such was Margaret at the age of about twelve. "Long live the queen" was the sentiment that animated twelve of the thirteen; and Dutch added, "Hoch zur koeniginn."

Then came the day when Queen Margaret outdid herself, which led to a revolt headed by Perfessor, who acted under Mrs. Dal. The act that precipitated the revolt comes first of course. Peddler, too elated to speak coherently until Deacon had nearly exhausted his vocabulary of expletives, came bearing the queen upon his shoulders and announced the event. Twelve eager and excited listeners gathered about him, emphasizing their approval of what he told them by adding to the decorations of the ceiling, to which the heroine of the tale, who strutted about during its recital, added her share. The first words of Peddler tell the story: "The little lady shot a Chink!" She did not kill him, but that was not her fault; and he saved himself by falling down a flight of steps and disappearing into a basement, where he and a number of his race ran a laundry. As a souvenir, the queen bore away a piece of an ear.

That evening, Perfessor had a long talk with Mrs. Dal. At first, his only reply to each of her arguments was an obstinate shake of the head. He was forced to yield and thereby conclude a vitriolic tongue lashing. He promised to head a revolt against the queen. The task was a difficult one: he had to win over to his side twelve men, each of them as stubborn as himself and each of them devoted to Margaret. He started for the hills to think the matter over. Mrs. Dal's parting words were: "If you need any help, send for me."

Late that night, long after the snub-nosed, freckle-faced queen had retired, the thirteen sat around the stove gravely smoking, preparatory to a council of state to which Perfessor had summoned them. He put down his pipe, an evidence he was about to speak. The others did likewise, anticipatory of words of wisdom.

"Gals ain't boys," he oracularly declared.

"'Tain't human natur that they should be," assented Jedge.

"Pardners," continued Perfessor, "we're spilin' our little lady."

"Huh!" snorted Fish Hook, "it's about time we hawg tie you an' send you whar nuts play the game an' don't rake in no chips. No little lady o' her inches can ride round her on a broncho."

"Or beat her throwin' a rope," declared Red.

"Our li'l ladee, she handle ze revolvaire," added Frenchy, who rarely spoke on such occasions.

"She shore plugged that Chink," joined in Peddler.

"Them's men's work," argued Perfessor. "She can swar, too Pardners, we must send her whar she can range with her own kind."

"Thar's Mrs Dal. Isn't she good 'nuff?" persisted Peddler.

"Shore," replied Perfessor; "but what can one good woman do in a game whar thirteen ediots an' the whul o' Paradise Lost is stackin' the kyards. Pardners, we must send her whar ladies ride herd on her an' put thar brand on her—larn her them things a lady should know."

Perfessor felt that the battle was lost and the time had come to send for Mrs. Dal. There was no occasion for this feeling: the enumeration of the little lady's accomplishments by Fish Hook, Red, Frenchy and Peddler had aroused opposition."

"Adobe Nance shore plugged a few Chinks," said Deacon.

"Yes, an' Nance war shore some broncho buster, too," said Canuck.

"She war likewise handy with a rope," added Fiddler.

"Too handy," snapped Fish Hook. "The dear cretur' got tangled up in the end o' one I see her remnants ornamentin' a cottonwood tree next mornin'. Nance war shore some player on the hewga"—

Fish Hook's intended fling at Fiddler's musical weakness was cut short by Perfessor "Nance didn't need to hold out no kyards on Deacon in a show down on swarin'."

The inferential connection of Margaret and Adobe Nance, the latter a notorious woman whose career ended abruptly one dark night, brought Peddler to his feet. He was bristling with rage and he menacingly half drew his gun. He ran his eyes along a row of pale faces. He saw there threatening looks—he saw there hands ready to travel back to right hips.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

Jeremiah Fitzgerald, a Terre Haute baker, was permitted to pay to a war charities fund $1,371.02, which sum represents ½ cent per loaf for the bread baked by him during the month of May, without the required amount of wheat flour substitute. He was given the alternative of making this payment or of suspending business.

Indiana sugar retailers who have been charging 10 cents per pound straight, are in danger of being cut off from their source of supply, Dr. Barnard announced. The price should be not to exceed 9½ cents except for a single pound which sells for 10 cents. For larger quantities there must be a proportionate reduction consistent with the regulation that the maximum sugar profit be 1 cent per pound.

The Pearl Roller Mills operated by Oscar V. Rouse of Indianapolis under the firm name of William Rouse & Son, a $100,000 business, has been taken over by the United States Food Administration for five offenses against the wheat flour substitute and mill feed price regulations. This is the most radical step the Indiana food administration has taken in its determination to enforce the regulations, and it is expected to prove a warning and an example to other millers who may be trying to "put one over."

The privilege heretofore accorded housewives to accumulate sugar without certificates for canning and preserving purposes has been withdrawn and after July 1 (or receipt of notice) retailers are charged with the duty of securing from every housewife asking sugar for such purposes to sign a statement of the sugar on hand, if any, bought for the purpose, if any, its use, and purpose for which additional supplies are desired; whether any purchase has been made for the same purpose elsewhere, etc. The sugar distributer is furnishing blanks to retailers who will forfeit their privilege of restocking by failing to secure the certificates.

As a step in the conservation of sugar the Indiana manufacturers of dairy products have agreed to restrict their output of ice cream to three flavors—vanilla, chocolate and strawberry. Accordingly Dr. Barnard has directed county food administraters to order the same limitations to all ice cream makers in their jurisdictions. Failure to comply with the regulation will mean that the offender will be deprived of all sugar for the period of the war.

A Sluggish Liver Needs Attention

An Inactive Liver Affects the Kidneys and Deranges the Stomach and Bowels.

Too much stress can not be placed on the necessity of keeping the liver in good condition; upon it the health of the body largely depends. When the liver becomes sluggish, the kidneys are overworked, the digestive fluids are not properly secreted and a languid, bilious, nervous or sick headachy condition results. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body. Constipation, bloating, dizziness, belching, pain or soreness in the right side, impaired vision and, in fact, most diseases have their origin in an inactive liver. An inactive liver is easily corrected if taken in time, but the only way to doctor is to get at the cause. Glando Tonic is a liver remedy that has a splendid record for renewing activity, removing the poisons and building up the system. For bilious attacks, it can not be beaten. Mothers who are nursing a baby should take Glando Tonic to keep the bowels well regulated. This will keep baby's bowels in a good condition. Glando Tonic is a three-in-one treatment that brings results. A trial will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials will be furnished upon request. Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be obtained by sending 50c direct to the Grand-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXII — ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JULY 18 1918 — NO. 29

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

June 2, 1918.

HELLO, JACK:—

It's been quite a while since I heard from you, but maybe my letters haven't been getting there. I know that some of them haven't, and maybe yours was one of that number.

Well, we have been doing our best to kill Germans for three months; and from the reports of the dough-boys who have followed our barrages, we have been highly successful. This war game is not exactly what I figured it would be. There is no excitement in being stationed three or four miles behind the trenches and sending over a few compliments to the Boches now and then. And I also figured that the ground would be one network of shell holes and trenches, but it is only in the towns that you can see any evidence of German shelling.

How many of the boys around home are in the army? I haven't heard from St Joe for nearly a month, and that is entirely too long to wait.

Say, Jack, do you happen to know what S. A. Thatcher's address is? I would like to write him a letter, and also Roy Maxwell's address.

Forrest Kain is in a town near here, and I see him every few days. Clark Scholes, Calvin Kain and Paul Perry are also over here; and I'm writing to them, too.

I can't write a long letter tonight, because I have to go back to the gun pits for a turn at that end of the game, and I will leave here in about fifteen minutes. I've been up on the picket line for two weeks resting up. Just before I left the gun pits the last time, we put over a four days' barage; and then the dough boys went over the top. You can see for yourself what we are doing to the Boche.

Well, this about all for this time, because the whistle is blowing Your friend,

PAUL MAXWELL.

Written to Barvey J. Hull.

CAMP BEAUREGARD, La., June 24

Dear Sister, Brother and Niece:—

I thought I would write you and let you know I had moved again. You know it's cheaper to move than pay rent. We took quite a move this time, about 1,200 miles. I am about 1,400 miles from home now. I never expected to get that far. We were forty-five hours making the trip We lest Camp Taylor at 5 p m. Thursday. We didn't het to see much that night. We went through Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi and about half of Louisiana. All the way through Kentucky Tennessee and most of Alabama, there are large hills and mountains. They are very near solid rock—just a little soil over the top, enough for some trees to grow. As we went over the top of one, they had to put on two engines; and they had all they could do to make it. There were thirteen coaches—about 500 soldiers. We went through about a dozen tunnels. All the way, I saw only about a half-dozen fields of wheat. There are more corn and cotton than anything else. The cotton is about a foot high. Everything looks odd to us fellows.

Nearly all the work here is done by negroes, and tended by one mule after it is ready for cultivation. The fields are mostly square, and they plant their rows around the field to keep it from washing. All houses or shacks have fire places.

When we got to Birmingham, Ala., we marched through the city. It is a very nice place, and the people were very kind to the soldiers. There were about fifty Red Cross nurses waiting for us. They gave us cold pop, gum and cigarettes. They also gave us a postal card to send home. We wrote and addressed them and they were kind enough to mail them. I sent one to mother. When we got to Meridian, Miss., we marched through that town, too.

The next large city we hit was Vicksburg, Miss. It is on the bank of the Mississippi river. When we came to the river, the train was run on a ferry boat that took us across. That was something I never expected to see. It was 1 o'clock at night when we crossed. Then I went to sleep. We got into camp at 1 p. m.

They first gave us an examination and then dinner. It's not quite so nice a place as Camp Taylor. I thought the officers there were just fine, but the officers here are certainly good fellows. The captain gave us a talk this afternoon. He said that whenever we wanted to talk to him, to come right ahead. The non-commissioned officers are good to us, too. They are not stuck on themselves.

We sleep in tents here. I like it better than in barracks—it's so hard to keep clean. There are seven of us in a tent. We have plenty of room. Ben King and I are still together. We have stuck pretty well so far. I got in with a fellow from Auburn when I left there and am with him yet. He sleeps beside me. He is a mighty good fellow. I would not ask for a better one.

At Camp Taylor, there weren't any shade trees. Here, we have lots of them in the camp—most all pine trees. There are woods about 60 rods from my tent, and we can go over and sit in the shade. They drill us there, too, I guess.

I had better ring off—you will get tired reading this stuff. I could sit here all night and write and tell you things I have seen.

Your brother,

WALTER S. WHITEHURST.

Subject: Commendation.

1. I have heard with great pleasure of your fine conduct and those associated with you, on the occasion of the bombardment of the position of Battery E 17th F. A., on April 3rd, 1918:

> "During the bomberdment by the hostile forces several men were injured. A call came on the 'phone to B. C. dugout that there was a wounded man on the road. Call was answered by Captain Guthrie and Lieut. Yates; both of them bounded out of the dugout during the bombardment requesting the others to remain as there would not be room in the first aid station for all. Captain Guthrie and Lieut. Yates went to the wounded man, Private Emmett McNabb, who was slowly being helped in by you, and taking Private McNabb between you assisted him in a dugout. After looking to his wounds, you returned to your post during the bombardment."

2. The soldierly qualities exhibited by you on this occasion are appreciated by your comrades and throughout the command.

Leave on July 23

DeKalb county's quota of forty-seven men to fill the July call for the army will entrain for Camp Taylor, Ky., Tuesday, July 23. This is the word sent to the county board by Major Baltzell, state conscription officer. The instructions specify that the men are to board the 10 a. m. New York Central train at Auburn.

Another Lie Answered

The story has gained considerable circulation that July 15 was the last day that people could buy sugar for canning purposes. This is far from the truth, as there has been no such regulation nor will there be. If everybody will buy just the amount of sugar they need for present use, everybody will have plenty. People under no circumstances should buy their canning sugar at this time unless they have use for it, and then only what they need for the present. A little later, sugar will be more plentiful than it is now; and if people buy according to present needs, everybody will have enough.

MAKING PLANS TO HONOR ITS HEROES

NAVY DEPARTMENT WANTS PHOTOGRAPHS OF ENLISTED MEN WHO PERISH IN WAR.

FOR MEMORIAL GALLERIES

Size of Army Camps and Cantonments Increased in Past Six Months—Improvement in Ship Loading Helps Our Allies.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—The navy department is collecting photographs of enlisted men who lose their lives in the war that their memory may be perpetuated. Secretary Daniels asks relatives or others having such photographs to lend them to the navy that copies may be made for the navy's records. Originals will be returned to the owners as fast as copies can be made.

A photograph of each man is to be forwarded by the navy department to the training station where he began his career in the service. At each of these stations a memorial gallery of honor or a hero's corner is to be established so that for all time the face of the man of the navy who has made the supreme sacrifice may be honored by the youth of the future sent to the station for training.

All pictures, loaned or contributed, should be securely wrapped for mailing after they have been marked with the name, branch of service, and training station the young man entered after enlistment. They should be addressed to the recruiting division, bureau of navigation, navy department, Washington, D. C. Care will be taken to return safely the photograph to the sender, when desired, together with one of the copies made of it.

More than $22,000,000 has been expended during the past six months under the direction of the construction division of the army in making additions and improvements to camps and cantonments. This sum does not include the cost of additions to the hospital equipments or the improvements made at other army stations.

The improvement work consisted of additional buildings for housing the men and providing for their comfort and needs. Among buildings erected were quarters for officers and nurses, repair plants, kitchens and bakeries, and theaters. New roads were laid and sanitation work improved and extended.

Many additional buildings are contemplated, and general construction work will be rushed to completion during the summer and fall. In some instances the camp work has been extended to drainage of an entire district surrounding the camp to remove danger of disease arising from the proximity of swamps.

Liberty theaters have been erected at all National Army cantonments. Each of these theaters has an average inclosed seating capacity of 2,000. Theaters and amusement halls have been erected also in the National Guard camps and at other points where troops are in training.

Economies of approximately 20 per cent in shipping weight and 50 per cent in shipping space have resulted from improved methods of packing merchandise for overseas practiced by the army quartermaster corps. This is equivalent to about 2,500 tons space per month.

For the shipment of clothes and equipage, including such items as blankets, barracks, bags, towels, shelter tent halves, bedding, and other dry goods, in addition to wearing apparel, bailing has been substituted for boxing, and the weight of the lumber has been saved. The bales average 30 by 15 inches and weigh 90 pounds. They are bound with not less than four cold rolled unannealed steel bands. Burlap over waterproofed heavy paper is used to cover the bales, and there are two "ears" on both ends of the bale for handling.

Women are stevedores on the docks in France. There is a law they shall not be required to carry packages weighing more than 70 pounds. Packages shipped to the American expeditionary forces are standardized so they shall not weigh more than 70 pounds for handling by one woman carrier or more than 140 pounds by two women carriers. Men handle the heavier packages and the boxes must be used instead of bales.

The quartermaster corps recommends to manufacturers supplying the army similar economies in packing and shipping which will result in even more pronounced space and weight saving. Round cans and containers entail a waste in space of 23 per cent. Square containers are urged. It is estimated that every inch saved through bale compression is worth 65 cents in ship space.

Illinois is the center of agricultural production of the United States says the department of agriculture. States of greatest production during 1917 are: Iowa, $1,830,000,000; Illinois, $1,255,000,000; Texas, $1,045,000,000; Missouri, $947,000,000; Ohio, $851,000,000; Nebraska, $774,000,000; Indiana, $766,000,000; Kansas, $735,000,000; New York, $700,000,000; Minnesota, $646,000,000; Pennsylvania, $636,000,000; Georgia, $605,000,000; Wisconsin, $598,000,000; California, $575,000,000; Michigan, $534,000,000; Kentucky, $529,000,000.

Manufacturers and dealers are encouraged under the policy of the navy department to deal direct with the department. The purpose is to eliminate the middleman in purchases of supplies and materials.

"In my annual report," says Rear Admiral Samuel McGowan, "manufacturers were warned against profiteering agents, professional contractors, and naval brokers. In our regular mailing circulars of January 8, 1918, we expressed the hope that 'manufacturers who have not availed themselves of the opportunity to bid direct will do so, as it will prove of advantage to them in bringing them in more intimate touch with the navy and thereby make a reputation for the materials which they manufacture.'

"The fact is the responsibility of contractors was never so thoroughly investigated and they were never held to a stricter accountability than they have been since this country entered the war. The number of responsible direct bidders has increased greatly and the number of agents and intermediaries has been reduced to a minimum. The safeguards against profiteering have been strengthened, not relaxed."

There are over 14,000 names on the bidders' list of the navy bureau of supplies and accounts, representing every section of the country. These manufacturers and dealers furnish over 60,000 classes of articles used by the navy.

Because of an acute shortage in the supply of paper the war industries board announced, effective July 15, the following preliminary economies to be enforced by newspapers publishing a daily and weekly edition:

Discontinue the acceptance or the return of unsold copies.

Discontinue the use of all sample or free promotion copies.

Discontinue giving copies to anybody except for office-working copies or where required by statute law in the official advertising.

Discontinue giving free copies to advertisers, except not more than one copy for checking purposes.

Discontinue the arbitrary forcing of copies on news dealers (i. e., compelling them to buy more copies than they can legitimately sell in order to hold certain territory).

Discontinue the buying back of papers at either wholesale or retail selling price from dealers or agents in order to secure preferential representation.

Discontinue the payment of salaries or commissions to agents, dealers, or newsboys for the purpose of securing the equivalent of return privileges.

Discontinue all free exchanges.

Three hundred applicants for student nurses to enter training schools in the base hospitals at cantonments were accepted recently. There have been more than a thousand applications for entrance in these army schools of nursing since the government sent out its call for student nurses.

The majority of those offering their services have been college women, or women with a complete high-school education. The training units will be assigned, it is expected, during the present month. Each unit will number 25 or 30 student nurses and will be supervised by an accredited and complete nursing instructor and a trained woman who will be responsible for the physical welfare and recreation.

The service bureau of the committee on public information has taken over various departmental independent information bureaus at Union station, Washington, will consolidate and reorganize them and be prepared to give all visitors information on government business and the names and location of those clothed with authority to speak and act for the government.

Since the service bureau opened offices May 1 it has built up a card-index system with 50,000 entries, many of the cards being subject to daily revisions and correction. In a recent week the bureau handled 1,630 visitors seeking special information and answered an average of 150 query letters daily.

The medical department, United States army, needs women as reconstruction aids. The office of the surgeon general announces: "The work of reconstruction aids is divided into two sections. (1) those women who are well trained in massage and the other forms of physiotherapy, and (2) those who are trained in simple handicrafts." Foreign service pay is $60, home service pay $50 per month and quarters allowance.

The division on woman's war work of the committee on public information announces that the trustees of Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., offer to wives and daughters of army officers three scholarships, including tuition and laboratory fees, for 1918-19 covering household science, household arts, and preparation for institutional work.

Department of agriculture specialists, appealing for increased production of poultry and eggs, make these suggestions: Keep better poultry; select healthy, vigorous breeders; hatch early; preserve eggs; cull the flocks; grow as much poultry feed as possible; supply the family table; eat poultry and eggs and conserve meat supply.

Southern farm boy club members produced in 1917 food and feed valued at $4,019,121, the department of agriculture reports. A total of 115,745 boys were enrolled in regular clubs in 14 states.

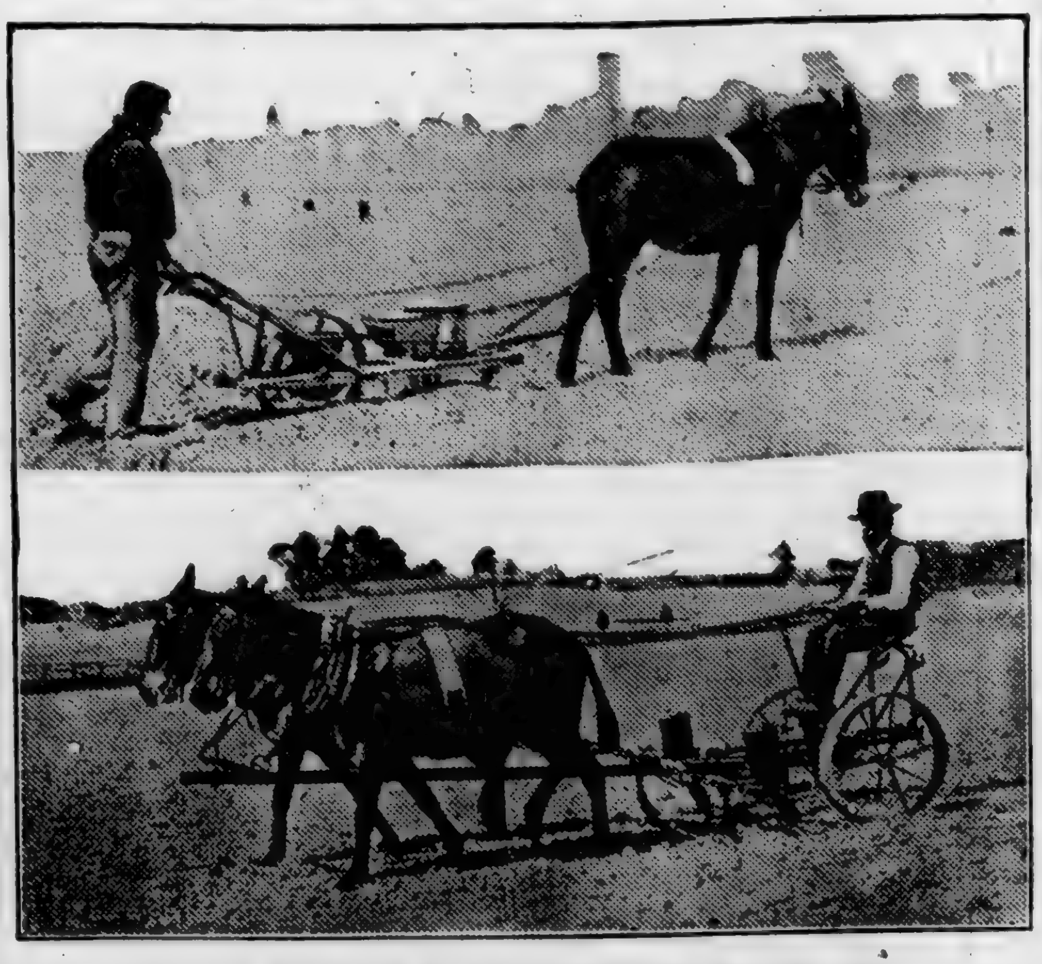
MAKING MAN LABOR COUNT FOR MORE



Larger Implement Increases Work One Man Can Do.

MACHINERY AIDS LABOR SHORTAGE

Use of Modern Implements Is One Way to Increase Crops in Time of Emergency.

AIDS EFFICIENCY OF WORKER

United States Department of Agriculture Recommends That Farmers Co-operate in Purchase of Various Farm Outfits.

Work which is generally done in some part of the country with the aid of machines that greatly increase the efficiency of the man employed is still largely done by hand in other parts. Machinery for the most of the work in connection with preparing and tilling the soil is available in many sizes, and frequently two or more outfits, each requiring the time of one man, are seen working in the same field on operations for which implements of two or three times the size of those used could be employed with just as satisfactory results. There are few farm horses which a driver of ordinary intelligence cannot train to work in large teams in a few days' time, and most of the larger implements are little if any more complicated or difficult to handle than the small ones for the same work.

Machinery Profitable.

Where the farm is large, and it is not possible to procure sufficient labor, specialists of the United States department of agriculture say it is more profitable, as well as patriotic, to install machinery which will enable the operator to plant, cultivate, and harvest a full acreage of the crops best suited to his land and the needs of his country, than to let some of the land lie idle, or, at best, have it prepared and worked poorly, and the crops out of season.

In Farmers' Bulletin 989, "Better Use of Man Labor on the Farm," just issued by the United States department of agriculture, photographs of actual farm scenes are printed to show that in many cases work can be doubled by the use of larger implements and greater motive power, and sometimes the gain is considerably more than that. If the nature of the work and the machinery for doing it are such that the best implements will increase the efficiency of the worker by only 50 or 75 per cent their use may make possible an increase in acreage by just that amount and at least will enable the farmer to do his work in less time and allow him to take better advantage of good weather if the season is unfavorable Combining to Purchase Machinery.

Can all farmers afford to buy extra horses and larger implements to save man labor? Of course those whose farms require but one or two horses to do the ordinary work seldom can afford to do so. But they can secure this additional help by combining to purchase larger machinery, and doubling up their teams to operate it; or one, usually more skilled in operating machinery, or better able to purchase it, may own the larger implements, and do the work for several neighbor farmers, besides his own, to the advantage of all concerned. Both these methods have been tried out in many localities with mowers, harvesters, tractors, thrashing machines, and other farm machinery.

How Rats Migrate.

Migrations of rats from one locality to another probably are due chiefly to food conditions, say investigators of the United States department of agriculture. After years in which the pests are comparatively scarce in a rural neighborhood they suddenly become exceedingly abundant and destructive. Rats migrate from places where food is scarce to places where it is plentiful. Abundant food in the new locality causes abnormal reproduction, the effect of which in a short time is that of a sudden invasion by a vast horde of rats.

Other movements of rats are local and seasonal in occurrence. An exodus takes place every spring from cities and villages to river banks and farmsteads in the surrounding country, and is followed by a return migration in the autumn. This phenomenon, which has been observed almost everywhere, explains why rats are more abundant in towns during the cold season and in larger numbers in the country during the summer.

That all rodent destruction is properly the business of the community, and that this must be recognized before substantial progress is made, is asserted by the department investigators.

INVESTING IN MACHINERY

If two men, driving one horse each, can combine the two horses into one team which one man can drive, and this team can do as much or more work than the two did singly, isn't it wise to combine them and save one man's time?

And if the farm is large and conditions warrant, isn't it wise to combine two of these two-horse teams into one, and save another man's time?

But before making these extra investments it is wise for the farmer to consider well the cost and the probable gain. If extra horses and implements cost more than they will produce, of course it would be unwise to make the investment.

Maple Sugar Value Grows.

The value of the national production of maple sugar and maple sirup has grown from $2,600,000 in 1899, when the census first ascertained it, to $12,000,000 for 1918, according to the bureau of crop estimates, United States department of agriculture. The maple sugar and sirup of 1918 were worth five times the cranberry crop of 1917, one and one-third times the hop crop, three-fifths of the sorghum sirup made, one-half of the buckwheat or flaxseed or onion crop, one-third of the oranges, and one-quarter of the sugar beets.

The principal region of production extends from northwestern Ohio through New York to Vermont and includes parts of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. Outside of this region there is production of importance in the mountain country beginning with the southern counties of Pennsylvania and extending through western Maryland into scattered localities in West Virginia, and also in parts of Michigan, Wisconsin and Indiana.

Weeds Never Rest.

The weed fight is one of the standard routine operations on the farm, and it represents a large proportion of the labor necessary to produce crops. No other single feature of farming requires such universal and unceasing attention as do the weeds.

Results From Thinning.

Do not let the vegetables remain too thick in the row. Too many beets to the foot in the row is just as bad as weeds. Get the maximum results from your ground by thinning and good care.

Plan for Storage House.

Early this season plans should be made and executed in the building of suitable farm storage houses or cellars. This usually can be done at relatively low cost if undertaken in time.

For honey comb and cellar wintering an eight-frame hive is commonly preferred.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Indianapolis.—The weekly report of the state crop and weather condition issued by J. H. Armington, meteorologist of the Indianapolis weather bureau, follows: The week averaged three degrees below normal in temperature, but there was about the usual amount of sunshine for the season. Showers occurred on the sixth to eighth, with heavy falls at many places in the southern half on the eighth. The cool weather retarded somewhat the ripening of oats in the central and northern parts of the state, where the crop will be ready for cutting within the next two weeks. Wheat harvest is nearly finished in most localities, and considerable thrashing has been done in the central and southern counties, with very satisfactory yields. Thrashing will begin generally in the north within the next few days. Corn grew well and much of that damaged by the June frost is recovering nicely. Considerable buckwheat is being sown over the areas of totally killed corn in the northern section. Seed clover is coming nicely, and small fruit, truck, cannery crops and pastures improved during the week, and are now in good condition generally; but in numerous localities early potatoes, on account of previous dry weather, are only fair to poor.

Washington, D. C.—The department of agriculture has received many inquiries from retailers dealing in farm implements in Indiana asking whether they are required to obtain a license as a result of President Wilson's recent proclamation establishing a licensing system for the farm implement trade. Officials of the department say that if the business is retail exclusively, and the gross annual sales (including all lines of merchandise as well as farm equipment) do not exceed $100,000, a federal license is not required. However, if the gross annual sales as a retailer exceed $100,000 a license is required.

Indianapolis.—Many conditions affecting the welfare of Hoosiers during the present war were presented to the state council of defense at its recent meeting. The council was asked by state and federal authorities to lend its support to a comprehensive effort to compel adherence of Indiana employers to the present laws regulating employment of women and children, and to assist in compelling provision for adequate safeguards for women and children crowded into industry throughout the state in the effort to speed up war production. The council will take action on this subject at its next meeting.

Sullivan.—Figures gathered from the reports from the township assessors in six of the nine townships show an increase of almost 50 per cent in the acreage of wheat in Sullivan county this season. Last year Jefferson, Hamilton Gill, Fairbanks and Curry townships showed a combined acreage of 14,122 and this year the same townships showed a combined acreage of 19,798. Gill township, with 6,808 acres, leads the list in Sullivan county, with Turman township second. In the townships named there are 33 tractors.

Evansville.—Owing to the recent heavy rains in many of the pocket counties, thrashing stopped for several days. This has caused wheat deliveries to slow up considerably. The local flour mills are grinding new wheat and are being operated 12 hours a day, but later it is expected they will run 18 to 24 hours a day. Millers report the demand for mill feed so strong they are unable to fill the demand.

Muncie.—Wheat thrashing is on in eastern Indiana. The first new wheat is bringing $2.08 a bushel. The tests average about 60 pounds to the bushel. Revised estimate of the damage done to the corn crop by June frost is about 20 per cent. Thrashing prices have been agreed on here as follows: Wheat, 7 cents a bushel; oats, 4 cents; barley, 6 cents, and rye, 9 cents.

South Bend.—Eighty counties out of 92 in Indiana have reported $43,493,548.75 worth of war Saving Stamps sold or pledged, it is announced at the state headquarters of the movement here. The state committee estimates, however, that the total sales and pledges at this time are in excess of $45,000,000.

Gary.—Milk cans and a pallbearer's motorcar have been used to bring whisky into Lake county in violation of the Indiana prohibition law, according to the authorities, who have made three arrests as a result. Recently there was a report that a hearse had been used.

Owensville.—The first ripe cantaloupe of the season here was found the first of last week. The crop is making fine progress. Shipping will begin several days earlier than last year. The growers have been assured of a good market and quick transportation.

Layfayette. — The second annual Southern Indiana Dairy association convention will be held at Seymour October 30 and 31 and November 1.

Marion.—Plans are maturing for the inspection on August 1 by Maj. Dick Wilson of Converse of the six companies of Liberty Guards, comprising the First battalion of the Third regiment. The inspection will be held in Fairmount, and will include the guard companies of Matthews, Fowlerton, Fairmount, Swayzee, Rigdon and Converse.

Bloomington. — Tentative arrangements have been made by which the government will send to Indiana university a signal corps of about 200 men. The men arrive about September 1, and remain eight weeks.

Gary.—Englewood's 1,000 or more vacant houses are to be depended upon to solve partially the housing problem for war workers in the Calumet region, according to present indications. Mayor Hodges and others have given up hope of Gary's receiving a slice of the new $60,000,000 appropriation now under consideration at Washington, as officials conducting a survey of the Calumet region had figures from the Chicago Renting association that at least 1,000 houses in Englewood on the South side in Chicago are empty and that with adequate transportation facilities between Chicago and Gary 1,000 families could be accommodated. It is said immediate steps will be taken to improve transportation on both the Lake Shore and South Shore lines, including a new schedule during the early hours, when men are bound for work at the ammunition plants here, and in the evening so they may secure quick transportation to their homes.

Indianapolis.—Dairymen will be interested in the regulations recently issued by the food administration which will exert a definite control of margins of profit, commissions and resales by dealers in cold storage butter. It will no longer be possible for the dealer to figure the cost of his goods at the price he would have to pay to replace them. He must add not more than the definite margins specified by the food administration to the actual cost. These include nothing more than the purchase price, transportation charges, if any; actual storage and insurance charges, interest on money invested at the current rate while the butter is in storage, and the actual cost of printing if the butter is put into prints from tubs or cubes. No allowance is made for shrinkage. Cold storage butter is butter that has been held in cold storage warehouses for more than 30 days.

Indianapolis.—Dale P. Bessire of this city and Nashville, Brown county advises people that can do so to buy their winter apples direct from orchards. The prices of barrels and other containers have advanced 300 per cent he says, and this will be charged up to the consumer, as well as the increase in freight rates. A considerable saving, he says, is therefore possible for those that can buy at the orchards. As to the fruit outlook in Brown county, he says all crops are failures except apples, and this crop "looks mighty slim generally."

Seymour.—Heavy rains recently interrupted wheat thrashing in this county, but there is little danger of the grain getting moldy because of excessive moisture. Receipts at the local elevators and mills have been increasing. The quality continues to hold up to the first wheat brought in. One field of 22 acres produced a crop of 840 bushels, and many others exceed 30 bushels an acre. The oats harvest is well under way and the crop promises well. Farmers say that the cornfields never offered better prospects at this season of the year.

Corunna.—Wheat is being cut and is heavy. Farmers say the heads are an inch longer than usual and all well filled. Much of the corn that was frosted will make two-thirds crop. Hay was thin and many fields of clover and timothy were plowed up last fall for wheat, so the forage crop will be short. Oats look well and are heavy. Fruit is scarce. Late potatoes look well. The early ones were frosted but some of them had potatoes set on them and these will make small potatoes for early summer use.

Seymour.—Little interest has been manifested in Jackson county in the registration of voters for the November election and some of the candidates are planning to qualify as notaries to register the members of their party without charge. Less than half the total vote of the county has been registered. Only about one-third of the vote in Jackson township, in which Seymour is located, has been registered.

Saline City.—Corn, young clover and timothy are making rapid growth since recent rains. Early potatoes will make a big yield. Wheat thrashing is beginning. The acreage is about one-fourth more than normal. The farmers expect 20 to 30 bushels an acre. Clover hay making is on, hay averaging two to three tons an acre.

Connersville. — Eleven acres of wheat on one farm yielded 35 bushels an acre, and the whole crop of 40 acres yielded 24 bushels an acre. This is the largest yield yet reported in Fayette county. The county's average, it is estimated, will be about 20 bushels an acre.

Terre Haute.—Three coal mines on a branch of the Indianapolis and Vincennes railroad, producing approximately 3,600 tons a day and employing 670 men, were idle because of a strike brought about by a change in the schedule of a miners' train.

Winchester.—Wheat cutting is completed in this vicinity and thrashing began the past week. Oats will be ready to cut this week. Many fields of corn that were supposed to be badly damaged by the frost have come out and may make a good crop.

Greensburg.—R. M. English has marketed five wagon loads of wheat at a local elevator that graded No. 1 and tested 62 pounds, bringing the top price of $2.11 a bushel. Gordon Templeton has finished thrashing 62 acres that made 1,575 bushels or 25 bushels to the acre. It is of excellent quality.

Jeffersonville.—The fine, large apple crop of extensive orchards in Owen township, formerly known as the Dean orchards, is being harvested by the women of New Washington, who are taken to the orchards in motor trucks. The peach orchards are practically destroyed.

"OVER THE TOP" 60

AN AMERICAN SOLDIER WHO WENT ☆ ☆

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

MACHINE GUNNER, SERVING IN FRANCE

©1917 BY ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

EMPEY AND HIS COMPANY GO "OVER THE TOP" IN COSTLY BUT SUCCESSFUL ATTACK.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties." After a brief period of training Empey's company is sent into the front-line trenches, where he takes his first turn on the fire step while the bullets whiz overhead. Empey learns, as comrade falls, that death lurks always in the trenches. Chaplain distinguishes himself by rescuing wounded men under hot fire. With pick and shovel Empey has experience as a trench digger in No Man's Land. Exciting experience on listening post detail. Exciting work on observation post duty. Back in rest billets Empey writes and stages a successful play.

CHAPTER XXI.

About Turn.

The next evening we were relieved by the —th brigade, and once again returned to rest billets. Upon arriving at these billets we were given twenty-four hours in which to clean up. I had just finished getting the mud from my uniform when the orderly sergeant informed me that my name was in orders to leave, and that I was to report to the orderly room in the morning for orders, transportation and rations.

I nearly had a fit, hustled about packing up, filling my pack with souvenirs such as shell heads, dud bombs, nose caps, shrapnel balls, and a Prussian guardsman's helmet. In fact, before I turned in that night, I had everything ready to report at the orderly room at nine the next morning.

I was the envy of the whole section, swanking around, telling of the good time I was going to have, the places I would visit, and the real, old English beer I intended to guzzle. Sort of rubbed it into them, because they all do it, and now that it was my turn, I took pains to get my own back.

At nine I reported to the captain, receiving my travel order and pass. He asked me how much money I wanted to draw. I glibly answered, "Three hundred francs, sir;" he just as glibly handed me one hundred.

Reporting at brigade headquarters, with my pack weighing a ton, I waited, with forty others, for the adjutant to inspect us. After an hour's wait, he came out; must have been sore because he wasn't going with us.

The quartermaster sergeant issued us two days' rations, in a little white canvas ration bag, which we tied to our belts.

Then two motor lorries came along and we piled in, laughing, joking, and in the best of spirits. We even loved the Germans, we were feeling so happy. Our journey to seven days' bliss in Blighty had commenced.

The ride in the lorry lasted about two hours; by this time we were covered with fine, white dust from the road, but didn't mind, even if we were nearly choking.

At the railroad station at F—— we reported to an officer, who had a white band around his arm, which read "R. T. O." (Royal Transportation Officer). To us this officer was Santa Claus.

The sergeant in charge showed him our orders; he glanced through them and said: "Make yourselves comfortable on the platform and don't leave; the train is liable to be along in five minutes—or five hours."

It came in five hours, a string of eleven match boxes on big, high wheels, drawn by a dinky little engine with the "con." These match boxes were cattle cars, on the sides of which was painted the old familiar sign, "Hommes 40, Chevaux 8."

The R. T. O. stuck us all into one car. We didn't care; it was as good as a Pullman to us.

Two days we spent on that train, bumping, stopping, jerking ahead, and sometimes sliding back. At three stations we stopped long enough to make some tea, but were unable to wash, so when we arrived at B——, where we were to embark for Blighty, we were as black as Turcos and, with our unshaven faces, we looked like a lot of tramps. Though tired out, we were happy.

We had packed up, preparatory to detraining, when a R. T. O. held up his hand for us to stop where we were and came over. This is what he said: "Boys, I'm sorry, but orders have just been received cancelling all leave. If you had been three hours earlier you would have gotten away. Just stay in that train, as it is going back. Rations will be issued to you for your return journey to your respective stations. Beastly rotten, I know." Then he left.

A dead silence resulted. Then men started to curse, threw their rifles on the floor of the car; others said nothing, seemed to be stupefied, while some had the tears running down their cheeks. It was a bitter disappointment to all.

How we blinded at the engineer of that train; it was all his fault (so we reasoned); why hadn't he speeded up a little or been on time, then we would have gotten off before the order arrived? Now it was no Blighty for us.

That return journey was misery to us; I just can't describe it.

When we got back to rest billets, we found that our brigade was in the trenches (another agreeable surprise) and that an attack was contemplated.

Seventeen of the forty-one will never get another chance to go on leave; they were killed in the attack. Just think if that train had been on time, those seventeen would still be alive.

I hate to tell you how I was kidded by the boys when I got back, but it was good and plenty.

Our machine gun company took over their part of the line at seven o'clock, the night after I returned from my near leave.

At 3:30 the following morning three waves went over and captured the first and second German trenches. The machine gunners went over with the fourth wave to consolidate the captured line or "dig in," as Tommy calls it.

Crossing No Man's Land without clicking any casualties, we came to the German trench and mounted our guns on the parados of same.

I never saw such a mess in my life—bunches of twisted barbed wire lying about, shell holes everywhere, trench all bashed in, parapets gone, and dead bodies, why, that ditch was full of them, theirs and ours. It was a regular morgue. Some were mangled horribly from our shell fire, while others were wholly or partly buried in the mud, the result of shell explosions caving in the walls of the trench. One dead German was lying on his back, with a rifle sticking straight up in the air, the bayonet of which was buried to the hilt in his chest. Across his feet lay a dead English soldier with a bullet hole in his forehead. This Tommy must have been killed just as he ran his bayonet through the German.

Rifles and equipment were scattered about, and occasionally a steel helmet could be seen sticking out of the mud.

At one point, just in the entrance to a communication trench, was a stretcher. On this stretcher a German was lying with a white bandage around his knee, near to him lay one of the stretcher-bearers, the red cross on his arm covered with mud and his helmet filled with blood and brains. Close by, sitting up against the wall of the trench, with head resting on his chest, was the other stretcher-bearer. He seemed to be alive, the posture was so natural and easy; but when I got closer I could see a large, jagged hole in his temple. The three must have been killed by the same shell-burst.

The dugouts were all smashed in and knocked about, big square-cut timbers splintered into bits, walls caved in and entrances choked.

Tommy, after taking a trench, learns to his sorrow that the hardest part of the work is to hold it.

In our case this proved to be so.

The German artillery and machine guns had us taped (ranged) for fair; it was worth your life to expose yourself an instant.

Don't think for a minute that the Germans were the only sufferers; we were clicking casualties so fast that you needed an adding machine to keep track of them.

Did you ever see one of the steam shovels at work on the Panama canal? Well, it would look like a hen scratching alongside of a Tommy "digging in" while under fire. You couldn't see daylight through the clouds of dirt from his shovel.

After losing three out of six men of our crew we managed to set up our machine gun. One of the legs of the tripod was resting on the chest of a half-buried body. When the gun was firing, it gave the impression that the body was breathing. This was caused by the excessive vibration.

Three or four feet down the trench, about three feet from the ground, a foot was protruding from the earth. We knew it was a German by the black leather boot. One of our crew used that foot to hang extra bandoliers of ammunition on. This man always was a handy fellow; made use of little points that the ordinary person would overlook.

The Germans made three counter-attacks, which we repulsed, but not without heavy loss on our side. They also suffered severely from our shell and machine-gun fire. The ground was spotted with their dead and dying.

The next day things were somewhat quieter, but not quiet enough to bury the dead.

We lived, ate and slept in that trench with the unburied dead for six days. It was awful to watch their faces become swollen and discolored. Towards the last the stench was fierce.

What got on my nerves the most was that foot sticking out of the dirt. It seemed to me, at night, in the moonlight, to be trying to twist around. Several times this impression was so strong that I went to it and grasped it in both hands, to see if I could feel a movement.

I told this to the man who had used it for a hatrack just before I lay down for a little nap, as things were quiet, and I needed a rest pretty badly. When I woke up the foot was gone. He had cut it off with our chain saw out of the spare parts' box, and had plastered the stump over with mud.

During the next two or three days, before we were relieved, I missed that foot dreadfully; seemed as if I had suddenly lost a chum.

I think the worst thing of all was to watch the rats, at night, and sometimes in the day, run over and play about among the dead.

Near our gun, right across the parapet, could be seen the body of a German lieutenant, the head and arms of which were hanging into our trench. The man who had cut off the foot used to sit and carry on a one-sided conversation with this officer, used to argue and point out why Germany was in the wrong. During all of this monologue I never heard him say anything out of the way—anything that would have hurt the officer's feelings had he been alive. He was square all right; wouldn't even take advantage of a dead man in an argument.

To civilians this must seem dreadful, but out here one gets so used to awful sights that it makes no impression. In passing a butcher shop you are not shocked by seeing a dead turkey hanging from a hook. Well, in France, a dead body is looked upon from the same angle.

But, nevertheless, when our six days were up, we were tickled to death to be relieved.

Our machine gun company lost seventeen killed and thirty-one wounded in that little local affair of "straightening the line," while the other companies clicked it worse than we did.

After the attack we went into reserve billets for six days, and on the seventh once again we were in rest billets.

CHAPTER XXII.

Punishments and Machine-Gun Stunts.

Soon after my arrival in France; in fact, from my enlistment, I had found that in the British army discipline is very strict. One has to be very careful in order to stay on the narrow path of government virtue.

There are about seven million ways of breaking the king's regulations; to keep one you have to break another.

The worst punishment is death by a firing squad, or "up against the wall," as Tommy calls it.

This is for desertion, cowardice, mutiny, giving information to the enemy, looting, rape, robbing the dead, forcing a safeguard, striking a superior, etc.

Then comes the punishment of sixty-four days in the front-line trench without relief. During this time you have to engage in all raids, working parties in No Man's Land, and every hazardous undertaking that comes along. If you live through the sixty-four days you are indeed lucky.

Empey and his comrades make the deadly machine guns perform all kinds of tricks to the discomfiture of Fritz. The next installment tells how the German gunners are fooled.

Got Their "Lively Time."

A famous lion-tamer tells of a queer Christmas present he once received. It was a consignment from a friend abroad of three boa-constrictors and five alligators, "With Jim's best wishes for a lively time." The lion-tamer and his wife got the lively time desired. He says:

"I shall never forget how annoyed I was when, during the night, two of the alligators broke out of their boxes in our bedroom and began exploring. I could not find the matches, and I and my wife remained on top of the bed canopy till morning. Luckily, my wife never thought of the thing that worried me. I was afraid the alligators might call on the boa-constrictors to wish them a Merry Christmas, and so wake them up too!"

Amusement for Children.

For the children, before they are old enough to use scissors, tearing paper is an engaging occupation. Tear a piece of old newspaper into an oblong shape; it may be any size, about two by four inches, we will say. By folding this in the middle it will make a little tent. Again, fold in thirds, one piece turned up and one down, for a chair. Turn both ends down for a table. The child can tear paper into trees, a ball, doll babies and many other simple shapes.

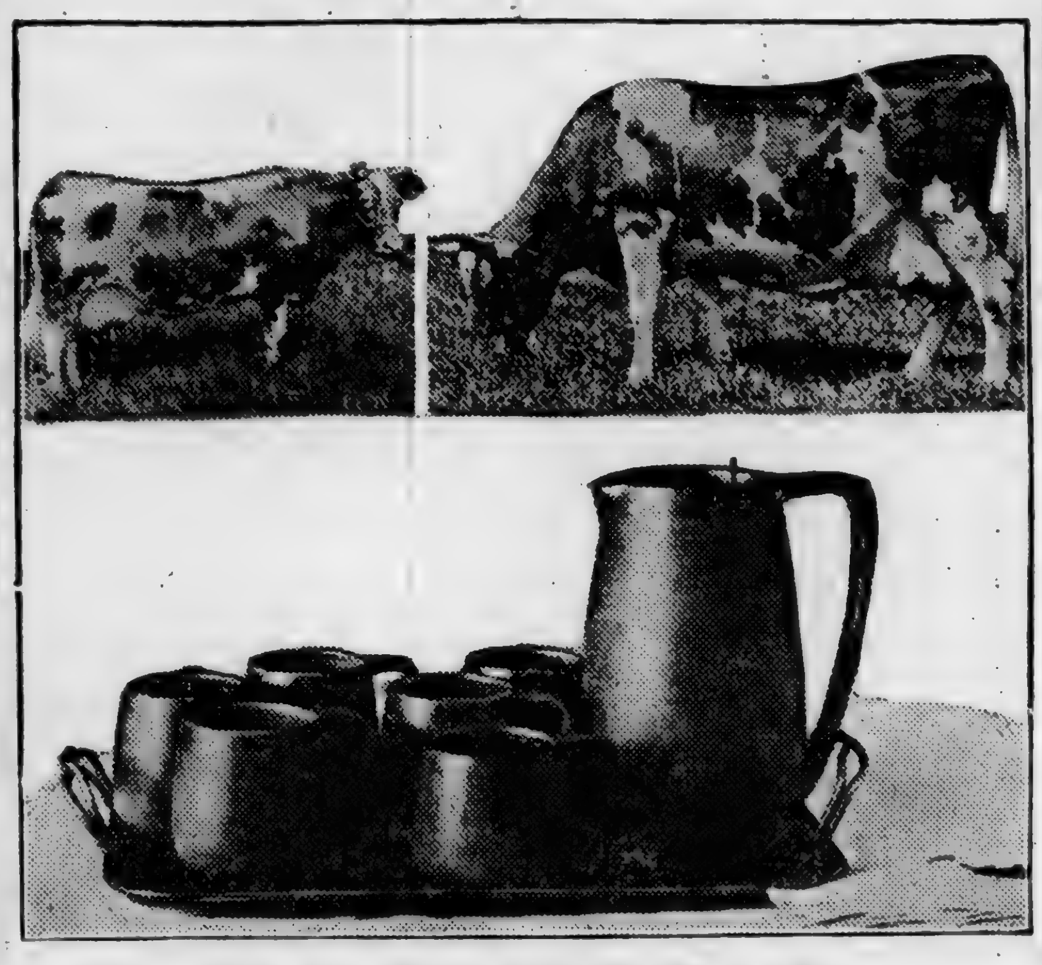
BUTTERMILK A FOOD DRINK



This Dairy Product Makes You Fit and Fat.

BUTTERMILK FOR PROTEIN SUPPLY

Rapidly Displacing Other Beverages That Contain Little or No Food Value.

IS TASTY AND HEALTHFUL

Often Recommended by Physicians in Treating Intestinal Ailments, and Is Gaining Favor in Hospitals —Good When Frozen.

Buttermilk—a pleasant refreshing beverage and a nourishing food combined.

It contains practically all the food materials of whole milk except the fat, most of which is removed in churning.

For those who like to know the scientific analysis of what they are drinking, buttermilk contains about 3 per cent of protein, nearly 5 per cent of carbohydrates in the form of milk sugar, 0.7 per cent of mineral constituents and 0.5 per cent of fat. Thus a quart of buttermilk furnishes slightly more than an ounce of protein, one of the chief body builders.

Tasty and Healthful, Too.

Increasing use of buttermilk marks it as a popular beverage. People are beginning to realize that it is much better to drink a glass of milk or buttermilk than it is to consume other drinks having little food value. Buttermilk is often recommended by physicians in the treatment of intestinal ailments, and it is also gaining favor in hospitals.

Prepared buttermilk is usually made from skim milk and has all the chemical properties of buttermilk. If it is churned, as is usually the case, it agrees in appearance and flavor with real buttermilk. In fact it is often a better product, especially if clean, sweet skim milk is used and it is carefully ripened and churned. Prepared buttermilk can be made in the city home, but more uniform results can be obtained when it is made on a large scale, and for that reason it is usually better to purchase it from a reliable dealer.

Buttermilk in Frozen Delicacies.

The Iowa agricultural experiment station describes a number of ways in which sour milk or buttermilk may be converted into frozen delicacies. One follows:

2 quarts buttermilk.	1 2-3 cupfuls orange juice.
3 pounds sugar.	½ cupful lemon juice.
2 eggs.

Dissolve the sugar in the buttermilk and add the eggs, the yolks and whites beaten separately. Stir and strain the mixture and add the fruit juices. Freeze in the usual way, and pack in ice and salt for an hour before serving.

Of course, buttermilk may be used in cookery in any recipe calling for sour milk.

Buttermilk is a natural product from churning milk or cream into butter. According to a ruling under the federal food and drugs act the product obtained from skim milk or from whole milk not churned must be labeled when handled in interstate commerce to show that it is not real buttermilk.

Feed and Labor for Cow.

Old Mooley spends most of her time in eating and drinking in order that she may furnish us with milk. You can see her chewing away almost any time of the day. She has been developed to consume immense quantities of feed that supply the materials for milk making. Indeed, judges of dairy cattle give due credit for a capacious stomach.

The dairy division of the United States department of agriculture studied the subject for two years on a number of dairy farms in Indiana. The following figures show the amount of feed actually consumed each year by the average cow, producing annually 6,000 pounds of milk—about 2,790 quarts.

Grain	1,719 pounds
Hay, fodder and other dry roughage	2,740 pounds
Silage and succulent roughage	6,225 pounds
Total	10,684 pounds

Besides these feeds, each cow had over $9 worth of pasturage during the summer, which replaced approximately 550 pounds of grain, 1,200 pounds of hay and fodder, and 2,550 pounds of silage, which would have been needed if pasture had not been available. It can be seen from these figures that in a year each cow ate from eight to ten times her own weight of feed (exclusive of pasturage); and she consumed nearly four pounds of feed for every quart of milk she produced. In spite of this, the dairy cow "Hooverizes" better than any other domestic animal, for she returns a greater amount of human food from her feed than the steer, pig or sheep.

Nearly all the feed consumed by the cow is unsuitable for human food until it is transformed into milk. Hay, cornstalks, silage, grass, etc., are thus made available for our tables. Of the grain used for cattle feed, the greater part consists of by-products which are not adapted for human consumption.

Bossy also requires considerable attention. She must be fed and watered, groomed and cleaned, driven to pasture, cared for when sick and milked. Her stable must be cleaned and aired, and her milk strained, cooled and hauled to market. According to the Indiana records, a cow producing 6,000 pounds of milk yearly requires 147 hours of human labor and 15 hours of horse labor each year. This is equivalent to about 15 days of ten hours each for one man and 1½ days for a horse.

For this feed and labor the dairy cow produces her own weight in milk. Hats off to her—foster mother of the world, and the original food conservationist!

BUTTERMILK LEMONADE

A delicious variation may be made from ordinary buttermilk by the addition of lemon juice and sugar.

Buttermilk lemonade usually requires the juice of three lemons to one quart of buttermilk. The quantity of lemon and sugar, however, should be varied to suit the taste of the individual.

The beverage is delightful and is especially refreshing on a hot summer day.

Work of Bull Association.

The bull association cannot give a farmer something for nothing, but it can furnish him a share in five $300 bulls for $50. These bulls cannot increase the production of the cows the farmer has, but they may double the production of the daughters. The daughters of association bulls and grade cows can never be registered, but in every other respect they may be the equal of purebreds. The bull association cannot compel a farmer to join, but if he does join he will soon own a better herd and become a better farmer.

Sheep Need Little Grain.

One factor in favor of sheep production in these days of high-priced feed is the fact that sheep require comparatively small amounts of grain. While pastures and roughage are important in the production of cattle and hogs, these animals require more concentrated feeds than sheep.

Sire Will Grade Up Herd.

A good sire will rapidly grade up a herd to high production; any purebred sire will not do—he must be able to transmit producing ability to his offspring.

Balanced Ration Essential.

A balanced ration is very essential for economical feeding. Especially is this noticeable in feeding dairy cows.

WOMEN FARMING IN WESTERN CANADA

Success Has Followed All Their Efforts.

On the train from Edmonton to Winnipeg the writer took a seat beside a soldier who had returned from the front. On his breast he wore the beautiful distinguished service medal. One coat sleeve was armless, and on his left cheek he bore a scar that he would carry to his grave. He had served his country faithfully and well. At the first call for soldiers in August, 1914, he hastened to the recruiting office, leaving his 320-acre farm, with its crop ready for harvest, a full equipment of farm implements, plenty of horses, and a wife. The wife should not be last on the list for she proved the master of the situation, and loyally took hold of the question of production, while her husband was on his way to fight the Hun. And she succeeded. In 1915 she succeeded, and again in 1916, and when her husband returned in 1917 she was able to show some contemplated farm buildings completed, the indebtedness of the farm paid off, a considerable addition to the stock, and the land ready for a 1917 crop. This was the story told by the soldier, and wasn't he a proud man! He was now ready to do what he could to keep up the period of prosperity and provide food for the allies. The women of Canada have done nobly during the struggle.

Among the most successful farmers of the Oak Lake district, Manitoba, are the Misses Clara and Beatrice Forward, who, for the past fourteen years, have farmed their own land, doing all the regular work on the farm, such as plowing, seeding, summer fallowing and reaping. They have been especially successful with stock, and have a splendid herd of shorthorns, both purebred and grade. At the recent Brandon sale they purchased a new purebred stock bull for $700. Their herd was last year increased by 23 calves.

Miss R. M. Hillman of Keeler, Saskatchewan, is another successful woman farmer. She has gone in extensively for grain growing, and farms 1,120 acres. She also owns some of the finest Percheron horses in Saskatchewan.

The prairie now boasts of many women who have had more or less success, though few are farming on the same large scale as Miss Hillman and the Misses Forward. These women have demonstrated, and are still demonstrating, that a versatile woman may be just as good and successful a farmer as her brother.

There are other women, too, on the Canadian prairies, who, though they have not had thrown upon them the responsibilities of "running a farm," have been decided factors in making the farm a success. They assist their husbands by keeping the farm accounts, reducing the grocer's bills by their management of the poultry and butter, taking care of the house, and, very often, proving good advisers in the economic management of the men and general conduct of the farm work. The man who moves to Canada carries with him a wonderful asset in a good managing wife.—Advertisement.

Imagination, Not Romance.

She—Do you think that people are less romantic and imaginative after they are married?

He—I don't know about the romantic part of it, but if they are going to try to explain everything they've got to be more imaginative.

GIRLS! USE LEMONS FOR SUNBURN, TAN

Try it! Make this lemon lotion to whiten your tanned or freckled skin.

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle, sunburn and tan lotion, and complexion whitener, at very, very small cost.

Your grocer has the lemons and any drug store or toilet counter will supply three ounces of Orchard White for a few cents. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands and see how quickly the freckles, sunburn, windburn and tan disappear and how clear, soft and white the skin becomes. Yes! It is harmless.—Adv.

Good Model, Anyway.

Myrt—I can't understand why you care so much for Mr. Rewral. He seems old-fashioned to me. Imagine a man coming to see you and going home at ten o'clock.

Gert—Well, he may seem like an old model, but you got to give him credit for having a self-starter.

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

To be wholly patriotic a Fourth o' July celebration must not include iced tea or lemonade, nor candy in which sugar is used in excess of the three pounds per person per month ration

The sugar syruped Sundae at soda fountains is prohibited in Indiana and county food administrators have been so notified. All special and fancy concoctions in which sugar syrups are used also are under the ban.

Sales of sugar have been limited to two pounds for city customers and five pounds for rural customers, with a maximum limit of 25 pounds for canning and preserving purposes. Purchase of sugar for the latter purposes must be on a sworn affidavit.

Manufacturers of non-essentials such as candy, chewing gum, etc., are no longer permitted to buy sugar in anticipation of their allotment for the three months following July 1. No sugar sales are legal in Indiana except upon certificates and then proportioned as per the recently promulgated regulations.

No relaxation in the conservation rules that have enabled the United States to feed Europe out of a short harvest, will be possible if a surplus is to be built up against the chance of crop shortage next year or in 1920, says Herbert Hoover. The American people who have shown that they can save, must conserve still further if the benefits already secured are to be permanent.

FOOD RESERVES AND FIRE HAZARDS.

The food administration issues the following statement of fire hazards in rural districts and the importance of safeguarding the nation's food supplies against this danger:

The season is at hand when farmers are to fill their barns with hay and grain. This period when barns, granaries and storehouses contain the greatest amount of food supplies is also the time when they are most liable to fire destruction.
